The reasonably salable cast is headed by Lew Ayres and June Knight, while in support are chiefly Alan Dinehart, Minna Gombell and Eugene Pallette. Ayres and Miss Knight handle the romance, and become involved in the murder; Pallette, with the assistance of Robert McWade, takes care of the comedy, and the melodrama bobs up here and there in the interests of greater excitement. The murder is by no means a mystery affair, but it is left to Ayres to reveal ingeniously to the law that Miss Knight, under suspicion, could not have done it, and that Dinehart could have—and did. There is sufficient diversity of characterization and general excitement.

Aboard are wealthy playboy Ayres, who, sent to a Northwest lumber camp, chooses the bus in avid pursuit of the accidentally encountered Miss Knight, who is involved with Dinehart. Dinehart travels with his wife, Miss Gombell, though Miss Knight thought him unmarried. Pallette is the orating rotarian, who describes the passing points of interest in loud tones, and thereby gets on the nerves of gouchy McWade. Alice White vamps the successive drivers for her fare, and when that peters out goes to work on Pallette, who turns out to be a bigamist.

The four-sided affair becomes complicated when, at a Denver stop, Miss Gombell comes upon Miss Knight and Dinehart. He kills his wife with an arrow, and arranges the body as part of a window display. Detectives swoop down on the bus, and in a schoolhouse in an Indian village, Dinehart throws suspicion on Miss Knight, and Ayres does his mental calisthenics. Dinehart escapes with the bus and Miss Knight, and an airplane is deliberately set across the road. The crash sends the bus into the ditch, and Dinehart goes where all philanderers should go. The romance conclusion is as anticipated.

It is lively action material with plenty of attention-attracting exploitation possibility, and is worth exhibitor effort in a punchy selling campaign.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Eddie Buzzell. Story by Stanley Rauh. Screen play by Elmer Harris. Photography by George Robinson. Release date, January 15, 1934. Running time, 78 minutes.

LONDON LOOKS AT "CATHERINE"

"Catherine the Great" was hailed as a masterpiece at its London preview last week. It is magnificently mounted and photographed and superbly acted, with Elizabeth Bergner and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., reaching great heights. It is a worthy successor to "The Private Life of Henry VIII" and is declared to be even more powerful in entertainment value. The film is a beautiful production that drives home Britain's challenge to the world. It will amaze America.—Charman, London.

Straightaway

(Columbia)

Drama

Straight action drama of the motor speedway, leaning in the direction of the melodramatic, "Straightaway" rates as lively entertainment for youngsters and grownups.

Racing motors, crooked work on and off the track, spills and crashes and incidental romance are woven into the film yarn, which holds its pace from start to finish, with the inevitable climax at the famous Indianapolis speedway, where several kinds of races, including the automobile, are won in the interests of entertainment and the right kind of conclusion.

Tim McCoy is the one—and only—name of real strength for the marquee in the small cast. The youngsters should respond to the McCoy name, which indicates that the exhibitor should lose no opportunity to tie in that name with the thrill of the automobile races.

McCoy, with his brother, William Bakewell, whom he is training as a driver, quit their employer when he asks McCoy to slow down in a race in order that the son of the employer, also in the race, may have the honor of finishing first. At the same race there is the indication that Francis McDonald, driving for the father of Sue Carol, is not getting the most out of the car he is handling. When that is proved, with the aid of McCoy, McDonald is fired, and McCoy is hired in his place. Miss Carol's father builds a new car and McCoy arranges that his brother should drive it while he takes the other. The boy, Bakewell, burns up the track in race after race and is hailed as the boy-wonder. He asks Miss Carol to marry him, but she, in love with McCoy, refuses him, making him good material for the crooked McDonald to work on.

Before the race preliminary to the Indianapolis meeting, McDonald gets Bakewell drunk and next day McCoy warns McDonald and his employer's son, in their cars, to play straight during the race. When they attempt to ride Bakewell off the track McCoy rides McDonald through the wall, both crashing. Before McDonald dies, he implicates McCoy, who is offered the alternative of pulling Bakewell's car at Indianapolis, or going to jail. Bakewell hears of it and tries to save his brother, but McCoy rides with him as mechanic, and forces him to win in the expected kind of finish. Miss Carol obtains a confession from one of the conspirators, and McCoy is free to complete the picture on the romantic note with her.

Action melodrama of the motor speedway, the picture should be sold as just that, with an extra effort to bring the youngsters in with a promise of one of their popular stars in the kind of thrill they like, as well as the adults who like action in their motion pictures. Play it at the weekend as the best spot.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Otto Brower. Story and screen play by Lambert Hillyer. Assistant director, Frank Geraghty. Photography by Dan Clark. Sound engineer, Glenn Rominger. Film Editor, Otto Mayer. Assistant producer, Irving Briskin. Release date, December 22, 1933. Running time, 60 minutes.

Pirate Treasure

(Universal)

Action Serial

One thing the exhibitor may assure his customers is that they'll find an abundance of action in this serial. Richard Talmadge is the hero and he does keep things moving, with the aid of a generous assortment of villains. The three first chapters bring forth little in the way of unusual locale; that is being reserved for the later episodes on the treasure island itself. But the six opening reels do include flying leaps from rooftops and through awnings, plungings from one speeding auto to another, through a skylight down upon the backs of the ruffians, and a ride in a careening auto off a dock. The fact that the developments are over-obvious in spots and may present a problem of credulity does not alter the fundamental accomplishment of action and speed. Lucille Lund enters into the spirit of it all as the feminine interest.—Two-reel episodes.

Little Miss Mischief

(Vitaphone)

Splendid

A splendid, and highly unusual subject, this depicts, with appropriate musical score and complete absence of dialogue, the delightful bits of mischief a baby girl falls into in a day about the house. Mother and father are indicated only by feet, legs and hands, as baby with her large black cat as companion, keeps mother continuously on the jump. As she finally lies asleep in her cradle, the subject ends. It is a beautiful novelty, characterized by excellent photography, and chiefly enhanced by reason of the perfectly natural appearance and delightful "cuteness" of the child. Worth special billing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Buddy's Show Boat

Cartoon Action

There's not a dull moment in this Merrie Melody cartoon comedy in which the Villain literally bumps up against his just desserts. He's bound up in a long elastic rope, one end fastened to an electric switch, Buddy's pals pulling the other end, and snapping him like a suspender against the sparks.—Running time, 7 minutes.

12:45 P. M. Nineteenth Annual Luncheon, Hotel Pennsylvania. Toastmaster: Dr. George W. Kirchwey, chairman, National Board of Review. Special speakers: Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of New York, leading churchman and educator. Hon. Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA Administrator of the motion picture code. John Collier, commissioner, Bureau of Indian Affairs, one of the founders and first secretary of the National Board of Review. Other speakers prominent on the stage and screen and in national life.

8:30 P. M. Guest showing of a special film to delegates by Committee on Exceptional Photoplays.

Saturday, February 10:

10:00 A. M. Hotel Pennsylvania. Presiding officer: Isabelle Kennedy. Conference Business: (a) Summary. (b) Resolutions. Round Table Discussion, conducted by leaders from the community field.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly tabulation of box-office grosses, compares the business done in the three-weeks period from the week ending December 30, 1933, to the week of January 13, 1934, indicated by the black bars, with the previous three-weeks period from December 9 to December 23, 1933, represented by the shaded bar at 100 per cent.

Paramount Injunction Suit Is Transferred

The injunction suit to restrain Paramount from continuing to lease and exhibit "Alice in Wonderland" has been transferred from the supreme court in New York to the federal court, on application of the defendant. The court has permitted Samuel Kantrowich, plaintiff, to apply to the federal court to have it returned, however.

Mr. Kantrowich claims to own the right to use the name for motion picture purposes. He declared it had been taken originally by William M. Young, who made a film of "Alice in Wonderland" in 1914.

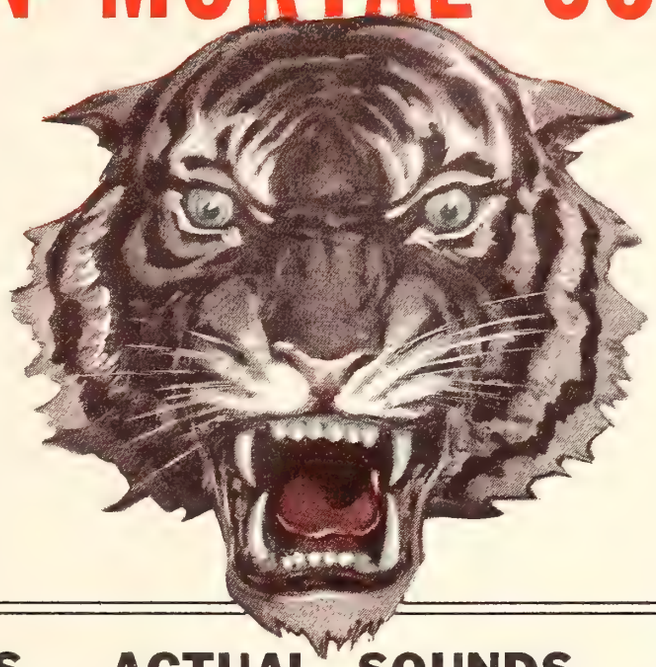
Warners Planning Benefit

The Warner Bros. Artists Bureau is lining up talent for the annual all-star benefit for the Milk and Egg League of New York's Tubercular Poor, to be held at the New Amsterdam Theatre January 28. Jack Pearl, Eddie Cantor, George M. Cohan, Abe Lyman, George Jessel, Bob Hall, Joe Penner, Milton Berle, Ed Sullivan and "The Voice of Experience" are among the headliners of the stage, screen and radio to appear.

Loew Consolidates 4 Radio Stations

Loew's, Inc., last week took steps to strengthen its position in the field of radio broadcasting with the consolidation of four New York stations into one, all operating under station WHN. On Thursday three former stations, two of which have been under Loew control for eight years, in addition to WHN, which Loew's has owned for ten years, virtually ceased to exist. They are stations WRNY, WQAO and WPAP. WRNY was bought by Loew's about six months ago.

Under the new set-up, which is under the direct supervision of Major Edward Bowes, a director of both Loew's and its production subsidiary, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the program schedule will consist largely of music.



It is Major Bowes' idea to get away from the stereotyped radio program. In addition, the usual form of commercial announcements from advertisers will be completely eliminated and programs are to be arranged by the station executives themselves with no outside interference from advertising agencies.

One of the features of the program is a 15-minute talk twice a day on highlights of the programs playing at the 61 Loew theatres in Greater New York. In the afternoon 15 minutes is devoted to news from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Hollywood.

Officers of the station, beside Major Bowes, are R. T. Kidder, in charge of sales; G. R. Wyndham, chief engineer; Lester Edwards, public relations counsel, and Perry Charles(who acts as director of programs.

ASIA'S FIERCEST JUNGLE BEASTS CLASH IN MORTAL COMBAT!!!

CLYDE E. ELLIOTT
"BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE"
surpasses himself in this roaring torrent of sensational excitement!

DEVIL TIGER
eyes like balls of fire . . . fangs like murderous daggers . . . powerful, crafty, terror-inspiring . . . mad with thirst for human blood.

ACTUAL SIGHTS . . . ACTUAL SOUNDS . . . UNPARALLELED THRILLS . . . HITHERTO UNWITNESSED BY ANY LIVING MAN

DEVIL TIGER

15 TREMENDOUS THRILLS

Three lone humans . . . in Asia's darkest jungles . . . pitting their puny strength against a maelstrom of ferocious beasts. Snarling tigers . . . breath-crushing pythons . . . steel-jawed crocodiles . . . lions . . . hyenas . . . bears . . . giant lizards . . . leopards . . . other animals . . . knowing one law; Kill or be killed!

REAL!!!!! GENUINE!! AUTHENTIC!

From the black heart of Asia's impenetrable jungles comes this amazing saga of beasts at death grips in the struggle for life. You hear their actual battle cries re-echo through the forest . . . sounds that haunt you for days!

CIRCUS IT FOR A SMASH CLEAN-UP!

Plaster the town with posters! Smack the newspapers with big ads! Flood the dailies with publicity! Turn your front into a jungle! Daze the town with stunts! FOR HERE YOU HAVE THE GREATEST ANIMAL SENSATION YET MADE . . . AN UNSTOPPABLE MOP-UP!

THE RAVES BEGIN:

"This travel film is a pip for thrilling animal combats in the jungle. There are so many exploitation angles that IT'S A CINCH TO CORRAL THE CUSTOMERS with just a little smash. Clyde Elliott made this film in the heart of tropical Asia. IT'S A SWELL FILM AND ONE OF THE BEST OF ITS KIND."

THE WEEK ON WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Efforts are under way to have Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt spend a day in Chicago on his return from the West Coast about a week hence. Mr. Rosenblatt passed through town last Friday on his way to Hollywood and a delegation consisting of Jack Miller, Eddie Silverman and Emil Stern met him at the station. While waiting for the Chief to pull out, he was whisked to the Stevens Hotel where he talked informally with visitors.

Fox-Educational Leaders Discuss Fewer One-Reels

The sales and executive heads of the Fox-Educational interests met at the home office in New York last week to outline the first tentative numerical draft of short subject product for 1934-35, and the principal discussion centered around the advisability of reducing the number of one-reel subjects in the new season. Present at the session, held last Wednesday afternoon, were John D. Clark, Fox distribution chief; E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, and Jack Skirball, of Educational.

Although Educational has an exclusive franchise to supply the Fox distribution machinery with short subjects, Fox Movietonews this season contributed two groups of single reelers: Magic Carpets and Thrills of a Newsreel Cameraman. This arangement was said to be by mutual consent. However, with the trend growing toward a reduction in the number of single reelers, it appears that both Movietonews and Educational will each have fewer one-reel subjects on the Fox release schedule in 1934-35.

Mr. Hammons on Tuesday denied reports that Educational intends to distribute elsewhere.

All Countries to Be Represented at Venice Exhibition

by VITTORIO MALPASSUTI
Rome Correspondent

All the important American film companies will be represented at the Second International Exhibition of Cinematography to be held in Venice next August on the occasion of the Biennial Exhibition of Art, it has been indicated by Frederick L. Herron, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. He has also indicated the possibility of American stars visiting Venice during the exhibition.

The exhibition is considered of great importance to the European market. Benito Mussolini has offered as awards two gold cups, one to be presented to the producer whose product is adjudged the best, the other to the director of the best picture.

New series of cartoons from Max Fleischer and Walt Disney will be part of the American exhibit. Douglas Fairbanks will be present as sponsor of a new edition of "Zorro," produced by London Films of England, and directed by Alexander Korda.

The general committee of the exhibition includes: Don Gabriel Alomar, Spanish ambassador to Italy; I. W. Brown, Great Britain; Luciano de Feo, Italy; Charles Delac, France; Will H. Hays, United States; Nikolaus Kozma, Hungary; Hajime Matsuhima, Japanese ambassador to Italy; Richard Ordynsky, Poland; Walther Plugge, Germany; Vladimiro Potemkine, Russian ambassador to Italy; D. Van Staveren, Holland; G. A. Witt, Austria.

All communications concerning the exhibition should be addressed to the Secretary's Office, Biennale, Palazzo Ducale, Venezia, Italy.

COMEDY FILMS FAVORITE ENTERTAINMENT OF BLIND

Afflicted of Brooklyn Guests Each Week of 175 Theatres; Lionel Barrymore and Marie Dressler Are Favorite Players

Comedy motion pictures are the favorite entertainment among the blind of Brooklyn, N. Y., who each week are guests of 75 theatres in that borough, as part of a movement sponsored by the Brooklyn Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor.

The returns on a questionnaire sent out by Arthur C. Meinert, social service director of the Exchange for the Blind of the Brooklyn Association, gives comedy 60 per cent and romance, 58 per cent, with two of the screen's oldest players, Marie Dressler and Lionel Barrymore, taking the lead in popularity among the sightless picture-goers. John Barrymore and Helen Hayes take second place in their estimation.

Entertain 175 Each Week

Each week 175 sightless men, women and children—each with an escort or guide—are guests of the Momart, Strand, Paramount, Fox theatres, and the Loew, Century, RKO and Randforce circuits.

Mr. Meinert sent out the questionnaires to get expressions of opinion from the blind after one year of theatre attendance, during which time approximately 8,500 complimentary admissions to Brooklyn theatres have been handed out. In their comments it is interesting to note that the blind guests constantly speak of "seeing" the various actors. Frequently they are said to comment on the quality of an actor's voice, which makes them hear, or "see" better. One young woman expressed this when she said, "I do not care for anything I cannot see with my ears."

Helped Over "Silent Spots"

According to Mr. Meinert, motion pictures are more thrilling to the blind than they are to persons gifted with sight. The stories they see are limited only by their imaginations, he says, whereas other patrons are bound by what is flashed on the screen before their eyes. Motion pictures have, of course, become a source of pleasure to the blind only since the inception of sound. The guides who accompany the blind guests each week help them "over the silent spots" and explain the action in theatres having stage shows.

Name Their Favorites

Unusual interest is attached to the judgment of actors by sightless people because they largely are the result of voices alone. They represent an audience that is practically untouched by publicity or advertising. Among the blind the masculine screen favorites, aside from the two Barrymores, are George Arliss, Wallace Beery, Will Rogers, Walter Huston, Warner Baxter, Robert Montgomery and Clark Gable. Among the feminine players, the favorites are, in the order of their popularity after Miss Dressler and Miss Hayes, Janet Gaynor, Norma Shearer, Greta Garbo, Mae West, Kay Francis, Claudette Colbert and Joan Crawford.

Almost every individual receiving a questionnaire replied, Mr. Meinert said last week, and not one of them failed to express appreciation for the pleasure that has thus come to him.

"If it were not for these tickets," one blind man wrote, "I would be deprived of my only pleasure."

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

We are up again and we are going to try and write this column. It may be a little disjointed; it may be a weak sister and it may sound like the ravings of a Fiji islander; we don't know, and if you read it, it must be upon your own responsibility, for we will betcha that the guy who is pounding the brass drum in our ears used to belong to a circus band.

We are in receipt of a letter from our good friend F. A. Van Husan and he tells us that he has opened a sales room at 214 No. 15th street at Omaha to handle theatre equipment. Van used to sell us service several years ago, and if he is as square now as he was then the exhibitors will be thoroughly satisfied with his service.

The only fault we could ever find in Van was that he snores in his sleep. Outside of that he's all right.

Eddie Can Bowl, Too

We have a long letter from Mr. Joseph F. Quillan of Los Angeles in which he thanks us for some comment we made some time ago on the performance of his son Eddie. Eddie, you know, is a screen star, and he is the kind of a player we enjoy. Not only that, but he comes from an excellent family, and Hollywood should have more like him. He's young, but he has a brilliant future before him, and further than that, he can bowl like nobody's business. Eddie comes from a theatrical family.

A letter comes to us from our old friend Mrs. Georgiana V. Higgins, of Crawford, Neb. Georgiana says she has been reading the HERALD for 25 years and that she always turns to our column first, which was probably a little bull for us, but thanks just the same, Georgiana. She claims to be the oldest exhibitor in the business. Her looks don't prove it. She says she hopes we will be out for the spring fishing. She doesn't seem to have any regard for the fish at all. We hope we will be, too.

An exhibitor showed us a letter yesterday from a corporation in New York which claimed that they owned the patents on sound on film, and that they had recovered judgment against two exhibitors in a Pennsylvania court for infringement on their patent, and stating that this exhibitor was infringing on their patent and that they intended to protect their rights.

We don't know anything about the merits of their claim, but if they can recover from the exhibitors who have bought these sound equipments in good faith it would seem that the patentee of a corn plow could recover from the farmer who used it to grow corn for profit. A few years back a lot of exhibitors were soaked anywhere up to $1,500 for infringement of a copyright, something they knew nothing about. It begins to look like the exhibitors were being made the goats in this picture business. According to this letter it would seem that every one using sound on film is infringing on their patent.

Speaking of Goats—

But speaking of goats, there was an article in the paper recently of a fellow who secured a job on the farm for his friend. This friend knew there were a number of animals on the farm, so he went to the library to get some books on animals to study up. Then he went out to the farm, but turned around and came back and called his friend up and told him he wasn't qualified to work on the farm because he had been out there and had seen an animal he never heard of before. His friend asked what kind of an animal it was and he said it looked like a sheep, but it had long grayish whiskers and was bare at its top end, and the fellow said, "Why, that wasn't an animal; that was the farmer." . . . We have always contended that the public looked upon the farmer as the goat.

We heard a young fellow crooning on the radio today. He was sobbing a love song. We will bet you that he is moon-eyed, lisps when he talks and tries to eat olives with a fork. What puzzles us is why somebody don't shoot him.

Our good old friend and fellow steinhyster, Gus Harms, sales manager for the Scott-Ballantyne Co., theatre equipment dealers of Omaha, sends us a letter together with a check for a subscription to the HERALD for E. R. Linderman of the Orleans theatre at Orleans, Neb. He says that Mr. Linderman is new at the show business and of course couldn't get along without the HERALD.

Of course, he couldn't, and we don't see how the equipment business could get along without Gus. The fact is that he is about the swellest guy that Omaha has any right to brag of. Thanks, Gus; have one on us.

Folks, don't expect us to answer your letters direct. It is about all we can do to write this column, but they are appreciated nonetheless, and we would be glad to answer you if we could.

Gordon, Neb., is away out "where the West begins" and from Gordon comes a letter from Mrs. Clyde Pace wanting us to hurry up and get well and come out there. We visited them last fall for a short time and had a swell time and saw a swell theatre which Mr. and Mrs. Pace operate. She says she nearly wore the HERALD out looking for our column this week, which proves the necessity of the HERALD having good binding, which it has. She says she would like to report to "What the Picture Did for Me," but that she does not buy the pictures. That don't matter; she helps to operate them. Come on with those reports, Mrs. Pace, and thanks for your good letter.

The exhibitor is sitting between two fires, the producers and the public. If they will give him good pictures at reasonable prices and the Government don't hamper him with a lot of red tape, he will be able to run his own business without interference. That's our guess on it.

Well, folks, this is about as far as we can go this time, so tune in on the radio and try that for a while, but don't believe all they tell you about breakfast food, gasoline, motor oil, automobiles, coffee, cure-all remedies, etc., etc., etc., for it is apt to be a lotta bull.

BERLIN SEES NAZI PICTURE

The most pretentious motion picture thus far produced by the Nazi-controlled industry in Germany, "Hans Westmar—One of Many," the story of Horst Wessel, Nazi martyr, had its premiere in Berlin recently before a large audience which included the former Crown Prince, Friedrich Wilhelm. The film is said to portray the four-year struggle between Reds and Brown Shirts for mastery of Berlin. At the conclusion, Nazi troops are seen parading through the Brandenburg Gate after Hitler's appointment as chancellor. The audience rose to its feet and gave the Nazi salute. Franz Wenzler has the principal role. The film is understood to be quite obviously Nazi propaganda.

Principal Expands Abroad

Principal Pictures has opened four new branches abroad, according to Sol Lesser, returned last week from a six-weeks tour. The offices and managers are: London, J. A. McGilley; Paris, Jack Barnstyn; the Hague, L. Barnstyn; Berlin, L. Hubsch. Berlin will handle all eastern European sales.

AMPA Seeks Expansion

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, New York organization, is inviting membership from the field as far west as Chicago and east to Boston, in an expansion campaign recently decided upon by the board of directors.

Preferred in Radio City

Preferred Pictures, Inc., has leased office space on the seventh floor of the 31-story RKO building in Rockefeller Center for immediate occupancy.

Century Circuit Moves

The Century Circuit, Inc., this week removed its New York offices to Radio City from 152 West 42nd st.

Publicity Staff Changes

Robert Burkhardt has resigned from the Warner Coast publicity department and Don Carlson has joined the staff.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Chesterfield

NOTORIOUS BUT NICE: Marian Marsh, Donald Dillaway, Betty Compson—A good show with Marian Marsh and Betty Compson doing excellent work. Very good for mid-week show. Running time, 72 minutes.—S. Rief, Cornhusker Theatre, Hastings, Neb. General patronage.

RAINBOW OVER BROADWAY: Joan Marsh, Frank Albertson—Regular program movie. Good photography. Recording very good. Not much of a musical. Will not break any box office records. Don't expect too much if you play it. Running time, seven reels. Played Jan. 6.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Wilson—A good newsreel slant, and should appeal to the general class of theatregoers. My patrons seemed to enjoy it. Played Jan. 4—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

BEFORE MIDNIGHT: Ralph Bellamy, June Collyer—Fair program picture, but not suitable for holiday trade. Fairly well liked. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Dec. 25-26.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—A better than average western, and it will get you some extra business without spending all your profits for advertising accessories.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—Still they make 'em over again, first one company then the other. Has no drawing power at the box office if you play it on any night except Saturday. Exhibitors should speak out, then the producers would know what the majority wanted that make 'em money. I say, make more musical pictures. Running time, seven reels. Played Dec. 30.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby, Rex—If you like real, honest to gooodness entertainment, this will please all classes. Wonderful acting by all actors, Indians and don't forget the horses. Best Friday-Saturday business in three months. Columbia is regular. Played Jan. 5-6.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—Hats off to Columbia for a picture of this type. Patrons raved about Ned Sparks' comedy and praised the rest of the stars. I think Liberty should have given this picture double four-star, for it certainly warrants every bit of it. Our western fans certainly ate it up.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Loretta Young, Spencer Tracy—Not so good. Any showman who classes this one with "7th Heaven" is 'way off. Rough talk by Tracy and others should be forbidden by all producers. The public don't care to hear it. Loretta Young is very good in this, that's all. Play it one day, fellows. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1-2.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—Plenty of action in this one. McCoy is gaining in popularity here, and Columbia is certainly delivering some sweet pictures for the small town. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Dec. 30.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

WRECKER, THE: Jack Holt, Genevieve Tobin—A mighty good program picture. Story entertaining. Gave good satisfaction. Played Jan. 5.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

First National

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Bette Davis, Lewis Stone, Glenda Farrell—Should please every one in any theatre. Well done. Lewis Stone and Pat O'Brien do very fine acting in this picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 29-30.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Lewis Stone—This one pleased and drew fairly well. Lots of stories in it to keep the interest up. Entirely different from ordinary run of pictures. Played Dec. 18.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondel—A program picture that drew well and pleased most of them. Kind of raw in spots, but went over very nicely. Played Dec. 24-25.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

I LOVED A WOMAN: Edward G. Robinson—I just can't sell this star, who is, in my opinion, as good as any on the screen. This is good entertainment, but it is a trifle slow and the title scares them away.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—Without a doubt this star's best picture. Just enough clean comedy to keep the house in good humor. My patrons are still talking about it.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—This is a riot from start to finish. Not a dull moment. Entertaining all through. This guy has got the country people all for him. The picture gave 100 per cent satisfaction. I call it one of his best. Clean, and entertaining and very funny. Played Jan. 7-8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Frankie Darro—Well liked by a better than ordinary crowd. Good trailer on this helped. Had a number of good comments, and the picture held up for the second night. One objectionable scene, but otherwise good entertainment. Played Jan. 3-4.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Frankie Darro—Another good one from First National. Weather was against me, but picture pleased most of them that came. Played Dec. 21-22.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—This picture starts out big, and drops in entertainment value every reel. This should be one of the greatest pictures of the new group, and would have been by changing the story and taking out the objectionable scenes. The whole trouble is the fault in showing Miss Astor going mad, and dying before your eyes. It is the most hideous scene yet shown in pictures. Men and women will be forced to close their eyes, and children should never see and hear this insane scene. The same thing holds good for a couple of suicides, almost before your very eyes. If this is what you want for an evening's entertainment, then run it. My advice is to screen this picture, and cut these two or three bad spots. If this can be done, you will have a great picture. The cast is wonderful, and a great story, but spoiled by inserting scenes that should never appear in any picture. It is to be hoped that Warners will take these mad scenes out and give the exhibitors a chance to get something the second night. It will be a flop in its present shape, because it shocks you in about three scenes. Played Jan. 7-8-9.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Not so hot. Should have played "Paddy" first. This new French star is a washout.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

AMATEUR DADDY: Warner Baxter—Excellent picture, with Warner Baxter at his best.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

BERKELEY SQUARE: Leslie Howard—Wonderfully acted and beautiful picture for adults. The younger crowd will not appreciate this as it's too deep for them. Running time, 88 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—Same like allee lestee Chan pictures. No business second night. Oland deserves better stories. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 18-19.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

GOOD COMPANIONS, THE: Jessie Matthews, Edmund Owen—If you just have to run this one, do so to a dark house and save yourself getting the worst razzing of your life. They'll start leaving on the first reel, and by the time you get to reel eight the house will be entirely empty. By reel 10 you've pulled out all your hair, and the customers are at home cursing you and themselves for a spoiled evening. I plead with tears in my eyes and a flat pocketbook from making refunds—don't run this one.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Not as good as "Bad Girl," but good entertainment, nevertheless. Would make a fine picture with a western.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Story centers around a carnival. Rather rough, but young folks especially enjoyed it. Running time, 78 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

INFERNAL MACHINE: Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—A fair comedy picture. Crazy, lots of hokum and some funny situations. Gave general satisfaction on a double feature bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn—Fair. Dunn and Sally Eilers were a good team, but when they are separated they do not draw. Running time, 70 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—A real western, and will please 90 per cent. It will please even the ones who do not like this type of entertainment.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey—Had a number of good reports on this picture. It was sent to us instead of "Jimmy and Sally," but no one complained because they were really entertained.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey—Lilian Harvey is a very good and entertaining little star, and this picture was amusing and well liked. Running time, 79 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Splendid, great picture, best yet, were the comments from the customers as they left the theatre. Business good. Gaynor at her best. Baxter as usual carrying his part in great style. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Dec. 26.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Roland Young—Had to use Tom Mix western with this one to make it go over. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Dec. 27-28.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—A picture that held interest, heavy drama, liked by some and not by others. Second night's business a little better than the first. Business same as for average program offerings. Tracy, Ralph Morgan and our little favorite Colleen Moore were all excellent. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Jan. 8-9.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Milmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Brought more laughs in my theatre than I have heard for quite a while. Will please all. If you have not run it, do not fail to. The censors left plenty. Do not be deceived. Played Jan. 1-2.—J. M. Ensor, Crescent Theatre, Little Rock, Ark. General patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory—A very good western, slowed up some by flashbacks to the offstage voice, but more than enough action to keep the action lovers at the edge of their seats. Clean and very good for the family. Running time, six reels. Played Jan. 5-6.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley, Will James—Very good story of the horse Smoky's life. Keeps audience interested. Gave free matinee to all grammar school children for Christmas gift, and they all thought it was wonderful. Running time, 60 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers—Did just half the business "Too Busy to Work" did, nor was it nearly as good. Expected to do a little above average business, but didn't do even average. Can't understand why this one would do so much for others and fall so flat for me.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Aak. Railroad and general patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—This one is one real show and packed my house both nights. Grab this one and make up for some of the ones you lost your shirt on.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Robert Montgomery, Helen Hayes—Very good story of its kind, but the wrong kind to do any business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Otto Kruger, Madge Evans—This one not so hot as entertainment and worse at the box-office. Advise to use on one day. Una Kerkel brings some laughs, but they're too far between. Running time, 87 minutes. Jan. 2-3.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow—Some liked this, but all I could see in it was Jean Harlow flying in a rage in most every reel, and Lee Tracy shooting off wisecracks. Running time, 98 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Frank Morgan, Alice Brady—Did not see this one, but all remarks were very satisfactory. Good at box office on our first one day run. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Jan. 1.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—A fine movie of the vaudeville life from the gay 90s to making of sound pictures in Hollywood. Splendid acting by Frank Morgan, a real trouper. MGM should make more of this type. The public wants musical pictures. Let's boost this one and play it. Every one liked it. Running time, 10 reels. Played Dec. 31.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—I think Ed Wynn as a picture star is a good radio artist. Lots of laughs and about 50 per cent said it was good. Too much hokum and not enough story to be good entertainment. All hands worked hard enough to save it, but the patrons gave me a funny look when they went out.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—Not too much drawing power, and won't please very many of the radio fans. Nothing to it until Ed Wynn starts to broadcast in the last reel. Used plenty of other shorts to make it seem like a long show.—Mayme P. Musselman. Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—Another cluck. "Meet the Baron," "The Chief," "Night Flight" should be run in third rate houses. Ed Wynn about as funny as a crutch.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—Most of my patrons enjoyed this picture. It will appeal to all who like comedy in their film fare. Running time, 67 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—This is certainly a great picture. We have not played a picture in a long time that gave better satisfaction to all. The star great and all the cast fine. A picture that satisfies all nowadays must be good, and this did the trick here. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—A musical hit. Great musical numbers in last two reels. We made these in colors by using our spot light colored wheel close to projection lens (amber and green). Try it, fellows. Business good. Glad to see Winnie Lightner again in this one. Hope she still stays in pictures. Folks like her. Boost it. Running time, 10 reels. Played Jan. 3-4-5.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

DANCING LADY—Joan Crawford—Very good musical with beautiful settings and gorgeous ensembles.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

DAY OF RECKONING: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—A good program picture. A good story well acted. Gave fair satisfaction, but did not draw at the box-office.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HER SWEETHEART: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Pardon me for reporting on this one before we play it, but with two great stars together how can this be anything but good. Folks tell me they saw it out-of-town and they said it was real good. Play it. Played Jan. 11-12.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Only an average picture to average business. Metro had better find something better than this for Dressler or it won't be long before her name will not mean a thing. Give her more comedies with more laughs; that's what the public wants nowadays.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler—Better than "Tugboat Annie." Marie Dressler heads the lists of all the movie stars in my people's estimation. Running time, 87 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Here is a mighty nice piece of merchandise. Bad weather hurt, but all we had were satisfied, and that's something. With a decent break in weather this picture should pack them in. The title change (from "Christopher Bean") hurt some because we used them both on our December and January calendars. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1-2.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl—A lot of nonsense, but they liked it, and it drew average business on Friday and Saturday. There is a lot of comedy, some smut, but it is entertaining and they liked it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl—Fair entertainment. Running time, 70 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT PATROL: Laurel and Hardy—About the weakest one from this pair. Hardly worth playing.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—One of the best pictures released by Metro in a good while. Will stand lots of advertising. Baxter and Loy especially good. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Dec. 29-30.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A good program picture to no business. I think the public is fed up on gang pictures, but the title misled them in this instance. Maybe this would have done more business with a more exciting title.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Max Baer, Myrna Loy—I call this a mighty good picture, and it did a very good business for us at Christmas time, usually a washout. The fight could have been shortened, and it would have helped. Nothing but praise, and with a fair rental, we actually showed a profit. Used "Fight Card" from press book and they sure helped.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Max Baer, Myrna Loy—Everything to spell A-1 entertainment in this picture. The ladies as well as the gentlemen will more than enjoy this. There is a boxing match between Carnera and Baer which will make you hold on to your seat. Running time, 102 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—Fair entertainment of the comedy type. Many good hearty laughs, and worth running in any theatre. My idea on a picture of this type is to double bill it, and advertise it as a big double feature attraction, and it will please, and make money. These boys have quite a following, and they are clever. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 4-5.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—Not as good as "Min and Bill," but will please every one as well as get you some extra money.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—America's sweethearts score another round in this small town natural. Not an adverse criticism and plenty of praise. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Dec. 25.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Just another picture that failed to get any extra business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Monogram

SKYWAY: Kathryn Crawford, Ray Walker—This is a mighty good program picture. Better than the average. This man Walker is clever. All the cast was very good and story entertaining.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez, Elizabeth Young—Very good programer. Gave very good satisfaction business. Played Dec. 9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—Beautiful picture with the finest acting by all the cast. If you live in a Catholic community, advertise this to the limit. Miss Wieck plays a nun. Every one who saw this praised it highly. Running time, 77 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—This will please the fans who go in for slapstick comedy. Running time, 70 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—Perfect production, but not very well received by rank and file. The intelligentsia thought it grand. Accidental babies give most of my folks the jitters. Played Dec. 1.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING SHIP: Cary Grant, Benita Hume—Good picture with a fair cast. Gives a line on the gambling ships that are just outside the line. Some comedy and fair amount of action. Gangster story with a little different theme. Running time, seven reels. Played Jan. 5-6.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Charles Farrell, Marguerite Churchill—I can only say fair for this feature, and not a very good fair at that. Running time, 75 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Genevieve Tobin—This is a natural. The best rural picture we have had in a long time. One hundred per cent satisfaction. Business below average because of icy highways. Played Dec. 30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Chester Morris, Richard Arlen, Genevieve Tobin—A better than ordinary picture that will do extra business out here in the wheat country. Acting excellent and the story should please the city people as well as the farmers. Be sure to run this on Saturday.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen—Very good little program picture. Running time, 70 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

HELLO, EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—Sure fire entertainment for my town. Kate's a swell guy. Played Dec. 15.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—This went over with a bang with my Sunday night crowd. As far as I can see, this picture does not show much, but somehow it manages to furnish pretty good entertainment. Business average through engagement.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HIS DOUBLE LIFE: Lillian Gish, Roland Young—The best I can say for this picture is that it has about seven thousand feet of film. There is but little entertainment, and but few laughs. It is neither good nor bad. It's just film. Many of my regular patrons walked out during the run. I'd like to hear from others how they like this type picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 4-5.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West, Cary Grant—This brought a little extra business, but made no special splash in our town. Will still gamble my money on the clean comedy dramas. This is not bad except by suggestion and the atmosphere of "wickedness" with which the producers have surrounded Miss West, purely as a matter of publicity. Played Dec. 17-18.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Mae West has been so widely exploited that the people want to see her once anyway. Lots of my people said they did not care for "I'm No Angel." She appeals to high school students and a few men, but the ladies keep away. Running time, 88 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, W. C. Fields—This one still seems to have plenty of kick left at the box-office, although is just a little disappointing due to being advertised as a musical and has very little music.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe—Plenty entertainment for all. They liked it fine. Clean. That's the main thing. Played Dec. 8.—Frank Sabin. Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Jackie's first picture for Paramount and a very good one.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charles Ruggles—Good little picture with a number of laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—The usual story of another blonde mama with a yen for whoopee. She made the grade in the loveliest pajamas. Not for adolescents. Played Dec. 22.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Personally, I class this as only fair entertainment, although it did far above average business. If you haven't played this one, do so now and make yourself some dough. A little old, but still gets the dough.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—Very good musical. If the directors would only leave out suggestive scenes and socalled "wisecracks" in most of the new pictures (this applies to all companies), now that depression is lifting up, the family trade would come back, and we'd all be happy. Running time, 90 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Tom Keene, Randolph Scott—This is a very good western and did a little better than average Friday and Saturday business. Tom Keene is well liked by our "people" and it's a shame he will not do any more outdoor pictures. The kids will miss him. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—Some raved about this and others didn't like it. I thought it was okay, but lacked the finishing touch. Musical numbers just fair. Cliff Edwards was the hit of the show. Running time, 84 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn—Fair musical program. We read a lot about Hollywood directors turning over a new leaf by omitting vulgar scenes in pictures, but I have yet to see it. They will insist on spoiling a beautiful picture by scenes which you can almost call "naked girls." This is why parents keep their children away from our theatres. Running time, 82 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—Very good comedy that failed to do average business. You'll please your patrons, but may have trouble getting them in.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—Real entertaining comedy drama. Pleased weekend crowd. Played Dec. 21-22.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TONIGHT IS OURS: Fredric March, Claudette Colbert—Let me think. Oh, yes, this was another bedroom drammer. Beautiful sets, perfect cast, fine ending. Played Dec. 29.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—An extra good one from Paramount that pleased all, as well as got some little extra business. Some very good tunes.—Robert K. Kancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—One of the best Zane Grey westerns we have played. A Zane Grey story doesn't get the money it once did, although this one does average business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

RKO

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett—This picture satisfied about 50 per cent of the people we drew to see it, but we did not draw very many. This star has been in so many better stories, she don't fit this kind of character with our patrons.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: William Boyd—A very good program picture. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

IF I WERE FREE: Clive Brook, Irene Dunn—A fair program picture to small house. Many came out dissatisfied. A good picture for bargain day. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 4.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Splendid production from all angles. Brought nice business, not only from regulars, but from those who come infrequently. Running time, 114 minutes. Played Dec. 30-Jan. 2.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—An excellent movie. Meets satisfaction everywhere. Truly a box office hit. Clean entertainment for old and young. Of course, we always have those who don't care for old-fashion stories. Nevertheless, they bring people into the theatre that seldom go to the movies. That's why it pays. Running time, 114 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8-9-10.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

MORE CONTRIBUTORS FROM COAST TO COAST

There are no geographical limitations to representation among contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me," as witness these additions this week to the department:

S. Reif, Cornhusker theatre, Hastings, Neb.; Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy theatre, King City, Calif.; Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic theatre, Conway, N. H.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—It is all they say about it. Drew an entirely new crowd to the theatre. Pleased and made many new friends for the screen. Played Dec. 26-27.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, Kink City, Cal. Small town patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Norman Foster, Ginger Rogers—Satisfactory light comedy entertainment that did fair business for this day and time right after the holidays. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 3-4.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding—A very pleasing picture with no draft at box office here. Ann Harding does not mean much in this town, although her pictures are generally very good. Played Dec. 20.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

SON OF THE BORDER: Tom Keene—Stacked them in on a one-day showing on Saturday. Good westerns still get the dough.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

Remington

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS: Polly Walker, Stanley Lupino—A very good comedy musical that is very much out of the ordinary run of pictures. Good music. Will satisfy any audience. Running time, 66 minutes.—S. Reif, Cornhusker Theatre, Hastings, Neb. General patronage.

United Artists

ARROWSMITH: Ronald Colman, Helen Hayes—Tragic, but very, very good. Colman and Hayes are top notchers. Play it if your crowd appreciates a perfect cast. Played Jan. 5.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks—Good average entertainment. Much better than "Around the World in 80 Minutes." Doug hops all over the Island as usual. Many clever gags and situations. Beautiful scenery. His man Friday got away, but the girl Saturday seemed content to stay with Doug and I'd say Doug made a good swap. The picture is just what the parrot said—Okay.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

PALMY DAYS: Eddie Cantor—Now here's the kind of picture that clicks. I know all pictures can't be "Whoopees" or "Palmy Days." It's old, but it's a humdinger. Played Jan. 1.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

WHOOPEE: Eddie Cantor—This is the second showing at my theatre. Done good business. Don't be afraid to play it. It's 90 minutes of entertainment. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Dec. 25-26.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy, Pat O'Brien—A 14-months-old subject that outgrossed a new one, "Power and the Glory." If the picture is really good, its age makes little difference with our people. And this was a good picture. Some told me it was the only "air-picture" they liked. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Jan. 10-11.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe, Shirley Grey.—A very good mystery picture, all but the snake. Any time they put these things in a picture it queers it with me. I have never played a picture where snakes helped the entertaining value of the picture and most of our patrons mention it. This picture was well acted and gave general satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HORSEPLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine—Plenty of laughs and pleased 90 per cent. Business satisfactory. Played Dec. 16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HORSEPLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine—A pretty good comedy, but this pair means nothing at the box office. This might go over okay on Saturday one night date. I used this on my best days and took a flop. Running time, 70 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains—A thriller, but not a horror picture. There is comedy and suspense and keeps your audience entertained every minute. I highly recommend it to all types of audiences. Running time, 70 minutes.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart—One of the most different pictures ever made. It will please and make them wonder, if you can get them in. No business.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains—A very pleasing picture of its type, but did not draw as people here are afraid of horror pictures. This one is not a horror picture, but the title led them to believe it was, so did not draw any too well. Played Dec. 28-29.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris, Helen Twelvetrees—This is a very fine picture. The star great and story entertaining. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Ralph Morgan, Nancy Carroll—Received more favorable comment on this one than any picture for past 12 months. Ran it old, but it is good at any age. Terrible weather ruined business, but think I could make money to run it again. What a great actor is Ralph Morgan. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 3-4.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien, Claire Trevor—The action in this picture was wonderfully timed and gave plenty thrills to a good Saturday crowd. O'Brien at his best with good performances by supporting cast. Played Dec. 22-23.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Roger Prior—Consider this one of the good musical comedy dramas of the season. Pleased. However, we had to trim some of the advertising accessories. Why they put out the stuff they did on this picture is another Hollywood mystery. Picture was clean. Played Dec. 24-25.—P. G. Estee, S. D. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale, Donna Damerell—Clever comedy drama with some nice music and dancing. These two radio stars seemed to please. Played Dec. 29.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale and Donna Damarell—Lots of entertainment in this picture and talent enough to have made a great special, but it seemed as if the director had gone afishing or something. Gave fair satisfaction. Could not call it good or could not call it bad. People said it was pretty fair. Played Dec. 26.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale, Donna Damarell—Glad I had this on for one day only. Very poor show with plenty of smut. Why can't the producers leave out the dirt. Played Dec. 30.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

RUSTLERS' ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—This is the first Mix western I've played and am sure going to play more. It went over big with the children and very well with the adults. Played December 27-28.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—This one pleased generally and pulled a little extra at the box office. Did not think so much of the football game but it was at least different. The hero did not win a game, but he should have.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. Genertal patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—Drew the usual number of Maynard fans to normal business. Played Dec. 23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—If you show westerns then I would say when you show this one you are going to give your folks a treat. Besides a lot of real cowboy entertainment, this one steps out and has some real honest to goodness horse fights. While I do not know much about hoss fightin', this looks mighty real to me. Better than average business last three days of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

TRAIL DRIVE, THE: Ken Maynard—Just about as poor a western as I have played in a long while. No pep. Nothing to keep the Saturday night fans awake.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

Warner

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak—Good picture that did not draw at all. Everything for the fan, but not enough fans to do a theatre any good. Football pictures do not draw here. Played Jan. 1.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney, Madge Evans—A wonderful picture of the reform school that holds the interest of all. Did average business for Sunday and Monday.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Just a dandy action picture. Got a little over average business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—They all liked this one and came to see this boy do his stuff. Cagney is gaining popularity very fast.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—A very good detective yarn with Powell carrying a role that he can fill very creditably. Some good comedy and clever deductions. You can promise good entertainment, and it will draw average or better.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—Powell stages a comeback in this one. My patrons liked this very much.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

DEATH ATTENDS A PARTY: Minute Mysteries—This is good compared to a lot of single reels released. Will please. Running time, ten minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

ENTERTAINER, THE: Will Mahoney—A whole show in itself. I never saw an entertainment that could do so many things and keep you entertained. I wish he had played the accordion more. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

HOT DAZE: Smith and Dale—Good comedy. Seemed to please everyone. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

HOT DAZE: Smith and Dale—Terrible. Why do they put such as these comedies out. Not even a good filler. Running time, two reels.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

MARCH OF THE YEARS: A novelty filler that they won't walk out on.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S TOUCHDOWN: Mickey McGuire Comedies—We have not had a good comedy from Columbia this season. Their one-reelers are okay, but they just have not the two-reelers that click. Running time, two reels.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

MINUTE MYSTERIES: Have played two of these. Seem interesting enough, but have had no comments yet from the patrons. Running time, one reel.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

MOVIE STRUCK: Scrappy Cartoons—A dandy cartoon. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

OUT OF THE ETHER: Krazy Kat Kartoons—Just about the best cartoon we have ever run. I didn't know before that Kate Smith could dance, and how she does! Running time, one reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS (No. 1): This is a very good and interesting reel of former picture stars in some of their hits. Running time, ten minutes.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

WE WANT A TOUCHDOWN: World of Sport—This is the best two-reeler we have had from Columbia, which is not saying much. Running time, two reels.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

WHAT THE SCOTCH STARTED: World of Sport—A very good golf reel, but we have only two golfers in town and one of them is our projectionist. Running time, ten minutes.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

WHAT THE SCOTCH STARTED: World of Sport—Good short with golf as its theme.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Educational

HIS WEAK MOMENT: Andy Clyde—Very poor comedy. No laughs.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MERRILY YOURS: Frolics of Youth—Very poor comedy.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

OPERATOR'S BOUQUET TO MGM SOUND CREW

"I have been connected with the show business for the past nine years and this letter is purposely meant to especially congratulate MGM on their recording facilities," writes Wallace Davis, projectionist at the Royal theatre, Tarpon Springs, Fla., signing himself as a "booster for more MGM product."

"The most perfect sound available here in this house is received from MGM. The MGM sound crew know their kilocycles all right and should be personally recognized and commended by the MGM officials with all pride they have in store for them."

Fox

AROUND THE ACROPOLIS: Magic Carpet Series—Just another trip down the main drag in Athens. Saw a few "Grik" boys and some old buildings.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TWIN DUKES AND A DUCHESS: Movie Tintype Series—A Tintype that was no better or worse than the last one.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MGM

ARABIAN TIGHTS: Charles Chase—Very good Charley Chase comedy.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Musical Revue—A Colortone Revue without the color or the revue. Just four guys sliding around in some soapsuds. Don't advertise color like I did and get the razz. Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage. (Note: MGM no longer is using the brand name Colortone Musical Revues. The subjects now are in two classifications, Musical Revues and Musical Comedies, according to their content.—Ed.)

CROOK'S TOUR: All-Star Series—A pair of English comedians that couldn't even make a funny face. No wonder there was a revolutionary War.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HELLO, POP!: Ted Healy and his Boys—In colors. Musical numbers great. Ted Healy and his boys try to be funny but the Four Marx Brothers have got him beat for entertainment. Play it. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

MUSH AND MILK: Our Gang—These comedies are always in demand. Everybody likes them. Adds to any program. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

PLANE NUTS: Ted Healy. Had a nice ensemble number and a few laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BREW: Musical Comedies—Just fair. Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SHERMAN SAID IT: Charley Chase—Any time Charlie gets his quartet going, that is a big success whether it is funny or not. This is both.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING TAXIS: Taxi Boys — Another Taxi Boys comedy that will be no better or worse than the last one you played.—Robery K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WRECKETY WRECKS: Taxi Boys—A real good slapstick comedy that took well with my patrons. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town mining patronage.

Paramount

BOO, BOO, THEME SONG: Screen Songs—One of the best cartoons.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BOO, BOO, THEME SONG: Screen Songs—Good. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOO, BOO, THEME SONG: Screen Song—Fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BUNDLE OF BLUES, A: Duke Ellington—Good musical number.—Robert Y. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BUNDLE OF BLUES, A: Duke Ellington—A very good single with this famous colored band playing their arrangement of "Stormy Weather." Okay for any day of the week. Running time, ten minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HENRY'S RADIO SHOW: Lanny Ross, Annette Hanshaw, Don Voorhees—An extra good radio reel. Good variety of subjects that pleased everybody.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE (No. 2): Fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE (No. 12): This reel is no good. Some of this series are very good, but thi sone should be shelved.—S. R. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

I EATS MY SPINACH: Popeye the Sailor—Another filler. Music very good, so is Popeye. Will satisfy. Play it. Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

I HEARD: Betty Boop—Kiddies like Betty. Enough said. Play 'em. Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Brke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

I YAM WHAT I YAM: Popeye the Sailor—Very good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LITTLE BROADCAST, THE: Mills Brothers—Extra good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

ONE AWFUL NIGHT: Eugene Pallette—One of them spooky comedies. When you play one then another they're all alike. For me, I can't call this stuff funny at all. Where are our comedies? Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT ON PARADE (No. 4): Fair and very poor recording.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

STOOPNOCRACY: Stoopnagle and Budd—Good nut cartoon.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WATER LURE: Grantland Rice Sportlights—These sport pictures by Grantland Rice are always a hit with the patrons. Play 'em, fellows. Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

WHEN IT'S SLEEPY TIME DOWN SOUTH: Boswell Sisters—In colors. Song reels don't take. Patrons sit through it and don't sing, so why make 'em. Songreels made of patriotic songs for Armistice Day, Memorial Day, also song reels for Palm Sunday, Easter Day, would go over great if producers would make 'em, having some wellknown singer take the lead. These are the only time song reels come in good. Think that over, Mr. Producer. Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

WHEN YUBA PLAYS THE RUMBA ON THE TUBA: Mills Bros.—Okay, but why does Paramount have to spoil the excellent music of the Mills Bros. with some silly cartoon work? My patrons would rather see them in a straight act, doing their stuff in the full reel. Running time, nine minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

RKO

PATHE NEWS (No. 45): Gives important events of 1933. Every exhibitor knows "Newsreels" always make your program alive, especially in these days of national recovery. Running time, ten minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

SUITS TO NUTS: Gribbon, Kennedy—A good slapstick comedy that pleased all. Lots of action in this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BABES IN THE WOOD: Silly Symphonies—This is a colored Silly Symphony and is very good in entertainment and in color. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FATHER NOAH'S ARK: Silly Symphonies—One of the best of the color cartoons. These subjects are first class. My advice to every exhibitor is to run these Silly Symphonies.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LULLABY LAND: Silly Symphonies—Better than "Three Little Pigs," but didn't get enough publicity. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MICKY'S GALA PREMIER: Mickey Mouse—Very good. Had all the stars caricatured, and how they enjoyed Mickey's show. He rolled them in the aisles. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MELLERDRAMMER, THE: Mickey Mouse—See Mickey put on "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is really funny.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLD KING COLE: Silly Symphonies—All of these Disney Silly Symphonies are very good.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

YE OLDEN DAYS: Mickey Mouse—Good cartoon with usual number of laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

CONFIDENCE: Oswald Cartoons—A very good cartoon well done. Running time, seven minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MERRY DOG, THE: Pooch cartoons—Christmas cartoon with the big bad wolf playing Santa Claus. Toy soldiers come to life and drive Mr. Wolf away. Musical recording very good. Will please the kiddies. Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

ON THE AIR AND OFF: Nick Lucas—Only a fair musical number. The first part is very draggy and silly.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kans. General patronage.

WARREN DOANE BREVITY: One of the best shorts I've ever seen. A number of big time vaudeville acts that are rich. Play this one and give your patrons a treat. Running time, 19 minutes. H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C.—Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

ABE LYMAN AND BAND: Melody Masters—Good band act.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BARBER SHOP BLUES: Claude Hopkins and Band —These colored boys can strut with the best of them. Had a good tenor and some real tap dancers.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BARBER SHOP BLUES: Claude Hopkins and Band—A very fine single reel with plenty good dancing by a colored band. Running time, one reel.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

BORRAH MINNEVITCH AND HIS HARMONICA RASCALS: Melody Masters—Very clever. What these boys can't do on a "mouth organ" just can't be done. Book it just for your own amusement, it's worth the money.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BUZZING AROUND: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle—Very good. Plenty of laughs. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

CLOSE RELATIONS: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle—Just another poor comedy. Warners' acts and musicals please, but their comedies are terrible. Running time, two reels. Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

CLOSE RELATIONS: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle—Lot of laughs in this one. Will please children the most. Running time, 19 minutes.—Louis Peretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

DAY WITH DICK POWELL, A: Dick Powell—This advertises "Footlight Parade." If you play it be sure to follow up with "Footlight Parade." Running time, ten minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

GOBS OF FUN: Big V Comedies—A very poor comedy. Not a laugh in a carload. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

HARRY WARREN: Pepper Pot—Very good. Everyone liked this one. Running time, ten minutes. —Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

HEY, POP: Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle—This fellow certainly has made some good comedies for Warner Brothers. Too bad this fellow had to die just as he was staging a comeback.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HOT COMPETITION: Melody Masters—Not so hot. Only a fair Melody Master.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT FROM PETROGRAD: Dave Apollon and Orchestra—Great stuff! Stringed instrument band with a female whistler, and do they go? A very good musical number.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOT FROM PETROGRAD: Melody Master—A very excellent one-reeler, as are all of the Warner band acts. Should fit in on any program. Running time, ten minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

HOT FROM PETROGRAD: Dave Apollon and Orchestra—Very good Russian band numbers.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LAUGHS IN THE LAW: Pepper Pot—A one-reel filler. Something different. Might please some. Running time, one reel.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

NOTRE DAME GLEE CLUB: Pepper Pot—A wonderful subject. Extra good with the "College Coach." Running time, one reel.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

OPERATOR'S OPERA: Broadway Brevities—Pretty good. Much better than most of the new Brevity subjects. This new series are not to be compared to 1933 releases.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

PAUL REVERE, JR.: Gus Shy—My fans thought this a very good comedy. Not many belly laughs, but lots of chuckles. Running time, two reels.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

RUBINOFF AND BAND: Melody Masters—Can this boy fiddle? Here's a real band and they sure do their stuff. We colored the violin number with red gelatin in the shutter port and made a beautiful scene.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RUBINOFF AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—If you have this on your contract, by all means feature it big when you play it, as it's one of the best musical numbers out.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

RUFUS JONES FOR PRESIDENT: Ethel Waters —Another good musical from the firm that knows how to make them. Pleased most of the bunch. Running time two reels.—Alvin A. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal. Small town patronage.

SALT WATER DAFFY: Jack Haley—A good two-reel musical comedy and will please young and old. Running time, two reels.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

SEASONED GREETINGS: Lita Grey Chaplin—A very good musical number that everyone liked. She sings three numbers that are okay. Running time, 20 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

'TIS SPRING: Broadway Brevity—One of the best of the Brevities. All in color, with Allen Jenkins and Hugh Herbert. This one will be a hit on any program. Running time, 19 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

USE YOUR IMAGINATION: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—How this pair can dance! Here is a two-reeler that deserves special billing in your ads. Plenty of good music and dancing. Running time, 20 minutes.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Broadway Brevities—Here is a knockout.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Mitzi Mayfair, Hal LeRoy—Very good dancing reel. Running time, 20 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WONDER SPOTS OF THE WORLD: World Adventures—Fair.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne, Ruth Hall—We have just finished this serial and will say that it held up fair. We had plenty of them on the last two nights, and I believe that it did more than and other shorts would have done at the same price.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Universal

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones, Madge Bellamy—First and second chapters good. I hope it keeps on getting better. Running time, each chapter 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 208.—(A) Suppose you proposed installation of a lens and had limited light supply. How would you go about calculating the light loss at each surface of the lens? (B) What is the variation in light loss at the surface of a lens with various angles of incidence? (C) Does the reflection loss within angles 0 to 30 amount to much? (D) Name the refractive index of Crown and Flint glass and which would give the greatest amount of refraction. (E) Upon what depends the loss through absorption of light passing through glass? (Note: If you haven't a Bluebook, say so, and I'll not examine your answer too closely—though I really should, for you should have the book.)

Answer to Question No. 202

Bluebook School Question No. 202 was: (A) Explain why light rays are refracted or bent when passing at an angle from a medium of one density to a medium of another density. (B) Just what is meant by spherical aberration in a lens? (C) Explain its effect. (D) What quality of a lens produces chromatic aberration?

The following answers are accepted (though some are not what could be classed as perfect, while some are excellent): G. E. Doe; C. Rau and S. Evans; T. Van Vaulkenburg; D. Danielson; H. H. Menefee; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; P. Gaeth, Jr., R. DeTotto; J. J. Richmond; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; D. Calladine; D. Haber and D. Breaston; O. L. Davis and F. Sims; M. F. Fallon; F. H. and P. Dalbey; K. Ormie; C. B. and L. N. Traxler; P. Felt; M. U. Sampson; D. T. Arlen and M. Spencer; D. and H. B. Coates; W. Broadbent; F. G. Klar and T. H. Morton; K. L. Hess; O. Allbright and J. Williams; D. Howard and D. Kurts; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; D. L. Sinklow; J. L. and F. Hanson; M. Henderson and K. L. Knight; B. R. Hanson; F. L. Sanderson; K. Y. Spencer, D. L. Lode, J. Jansen and B. R. Sanders; G. Thompson; T. M. Vinson; L. R. Spooner and G. Johnson; L. Grant and R. Geddings; B. L. Banning and L. Jones; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; P. H. Cupero; K. Griener; M. R. Davidson and R. Schuler; Nic Granby; A. L. Dodson, F. L. Benton; U. L. Danielson; T. T. Golley; L. B. and D. H. Palmer; A. Wythe and T. Granger; S. L. Jacobs, C. Haugan and J. Turner; D. U. Granger; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrope; H. R. Baldwin; L. D. Rubin, S. T. Mitchell; D. Lally and F. Ferguson; F. L. Granby; G. R. Squires and B. J. Lyons; L. G. Gregeson; L. B. Bryant and D. L. Monehan; L. Thomas and D. D. Davis; L. M. Richards; T. Malleby; D. Danielson and H. Pilson; G. Harrison and F. Harlor; R. and K. Wells; S. N. Tailer; J. Hendershot; M. Henderson and D. Singleton.

Be it noted that the excellence of answers slowly increases, evidence that our "students" are either learning to study, or are making a more serious effort to dig out the correct answer for themselves. Some who sent answers for a long while without even one that could honestly be included in the published list as even approximately correct, are now included in the list regularly. Be it also noted that those published are not always 100 per cent correct. But were I to refuse to accept answers that, while not really exactly correct, are sufficiently correct to show that a real effort has been made, it might discourage the one involved, so I sometimes am a bit blind—though not too blind, mark you well!

We will let D. Danielson talk on Section A, though others have made very excellent answers including very explanatory illustrations. I would like to use them but we have too little space. Danielson says:

"Light rays are refracted when passing obliquely from a transparent medium of one density to a transparent medium of another optical density, because of a difference in speed at which light travels in mediums of different densities. This speed is inversely proportional to the optical density. We may consider that a ray of light has some area because of the wave motion, although this area may be infinitesimally small. Suppose we draw a line at right angles to the axis of the ray. Some section of this line will strike the second medium's surface before other portions. If this ray strikes at an angle—no matter how small the angle—and if the second medium has a greater optical density, the speed of the ray of light in this medium will be reduced. Thus, if one section of the ray has its speed reduced previously to other portions, it will have the effect of altering the course normal for the ray."

(B) Messrs. Rau and Evans say, "Spherical abberation is that quality of a simple, uncorrected lens which causes it to focus rays passing through it at different distances from its principal axis at different distances from its optic center."

(C) G. E. Doe answers thus: "The effect of spherical aberration insofar as applies to practical projection is: (1) It causes a breaking up of the crater image focus at or near the film plane, which formerly had large value because of the unevenness of illumination of the light source. This fault has, except in case of straight high intensity arcs, been largely overcome by gradual improvement in the electrodes (carbons), so that now the evil effects of spherical aberration far outweigh its one good effect, save only in the one case noted. (2) It causes rays from the outer zones of the converging lens or mirror to be so misdirected that they largely fall upon the cooling plate instead of the aperture, thus causing unnecessary light loss, though to some extent causing the aperture light to be whiter, since outer converging lens rays carry more or less chromatic aberration. (3) It causes a portion of the rays passing through the aperture to be so misdirected that they fall outside the projection lens, which, of course, means additional light loss."

(D) J. Wentworth says, "Chromatic aberration is due to a partial prismatic effect set up when rays pass through a lens at a heavy angle. By this effect the white rays are partially separated into the primary colors, as they are when passing through a prism of glass."

Appeal Court Upholds Erpi In Aleograph Infringement Suit

The Second Circuit Court of Appeals in New York upheld Western Electric in the Aleograph infringement suit on sound equipment in a decision handed down last week, according to Erpi, which said the court sustained the ruling of Judge Inch of the district court that Western Electric equipment does not infringe on the Aleograph patent.

The decision is similar to ones previously handed down by courts in Dallas and New Orleans in a corresponding case brought against Electrical Research Products.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

SLOW STRANGULATION

When is it all going to stop? We mean the indifferent kicking around a lot of capable managers are receiving, having their salaries cut until they bleed white, forced out of a living to make room for showmen(?) willing to work for whatever is offered by shortsighted, inconsiderate exhibitors. A number of these instances have been called to our attention recently and the following is an instance that might be termed typical.

Round Tabler John Doe, which isn't his name, dropped into headquarters a few days ago to announce he was looking for a job. He had literally been compelled to quit a spot where he was capably running an important theatre and doing publicity for two others of the same circuit—and doing it well, we might say.

Having already taken two cuts, this member figured he'd about touched "salary bottom," when he was requested to take a further cut, or else——. The salary offered was insufficient to keep his family above water, so he had to quit and now must join the ever-growing army of good managers on the loose through no fault of their own.

The situation is serious and something must be done to convince exhibitors responsible that in replacing showmen with cheaper help, the very foundation of theatre operation is being shaken.

We have stated, and again we repeat, that the manager is the most important employee in the theatre. He more than anyone else is capable of obtaining bigger grosses and cutting expenses, and exhibitors who think otherwise are wrong—100 per cent.

Turning loose a good man for an uncertain one, over a question of a living salary, is one of the saddest mistakes of today's show business. Grosses suffer, rentals suffer—the entire industry takes it on the chin. And that's dangerous.

We plead with exhibitors to view this situation fairly. Protect your investment by protecting your manager. Any other policy must mean slow strangulation, which eventually will cut off the very life breath of theatre operation.

PREMIUMS AND SO FORTH

Once again we call your attention to the sound job Jim Cunningham is doing on "De-Coding the Film Code" in the Motion Picture Herald, and advise you to study carefully the entire article on "Trade Practices for Exhibitors and for Distributors" starting on page 37 of the January 20 issue. Many of these clauses concern the manager. For your own protection, you should be familiar with them.

Particularly Clause 5, on page 46, on "What Exhibitors and Theatres Must Do or Must Not Do," and especially Part 3, that specifies the limitations of reduced admissions, rebates, premiums, prizes, lotteries and throwaways.

Daily we receive campaigns that include some form of what the code designates as a "lottery" and therefore is now illegal and has been since the President signed the code. So, if you are contemplating any tieups that skirt the code boundaries, put them aside until you are absolutely certain you are on firm ground.

For the information of our readers, the Motion Picture Herald has established a code question and answer department and you are invited to make frequent use of this service. Your queries will be answered quickly and correctly by Jim Cunningham, thus insuring you against any mistakes.

So again we say, study the article and if you are in doubt as to any of its clauses, we're standing by.

STARS GREET PUBLIC

Starting from Washington next week, United Artists is sending forth a caravan over the land to stop at a number of spots in time to participate in the local campaigns on "Moulin Rouge." Most interesting is the fact that over twenty Hollywood stars have joined up and will lend their personalities to the ballyhoo on the picture.

This makes an interesting commentary on the present-day reactions of the studioites to the personal appearance stuff. Not so long ago, stars shrank from direct contact with their public, but now comes a realization that such events are not only in good standing, but quite helpful in building up many a box-office draw.

To our oft repeated statement that this is to be an exploitation year, comes further substantiation in the contests sponsored by various producers. Paramount started it with "I'm No Angel," then Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer swung into line on "Fugitive Lovers," and now Fox joins up by offering prizes for suggestions on three coming musicals.

By every indication, it's a great exploitation year!

Big Bus Tieup For "Fugitive Lovers"

A 10-day "search" contest put on with the New York Mirror, and a street parade of Greyhound busses were two of the high-spots of the New York campaign for "Fugitive Lovers" at the Capitol Theatre.

The newspaper tieup was an elaboration of the identification idea, with two 'fugitive lovers," a boy and girl, making the rounds, visiting the leading stores, and appearing at different places where readers were requested to spot them, daily cash prizes and free tickets being awarded to those who made the proper identification.

"Fugitive" Bus Tieup

In addition to the daily advance parades of the busses in many sections of the city, each of these conveyances carried banners advertising free rides to the theatre, copy of course including mention of the attraction as well. Individual busses were also stationed at many of the local terminals, from which many who accepted the advertised invitation were carried to the Capitol.

It is expected that many members will compete for the $200 in prizes M-G-M is offering for the best campaigns on "Fugitive Lovers." The contest runs until March 5th.

Work For A Quigley Award!

Radio Contest Tops Suits' Campaign

A radio contest that sponsored a best letter contest was one of the most effective ideas in the campaign for "Blood Money" put on by Manager R. H. Suits at the Colonial, Reading, Pa. The stunt consisted of offering listeners free tickets for the outstanding hundred word letters on "The Best Way to Wipe Out Racketeers." This was put on a week in advance of the opening, and each night the radio station devoted time to broadcasting letters received in the contest, requesting winners to call at the theatre for the free tickets offered as prizes.

Many of the most prominently located stores in town were tied in for window displays that included men's and women's wear, sheet music displays in five and ten cent stores, and restaurant tieups were also made by which imprinted menu cards were used.

The press book cross word puzzle was planted in one of the newspapers and another gag that helped was the placing of novelty invitations in the key boxes of rooms in all leading hotels.

Some of Ken Henry's Prize Winning Ideas

To the many excellent ideas publicized in these columns on "The Invisible Man," we are pleased to add the gripping stage and screen trailer for the presentation put on recently by Ken Henry, fast moving skipper of Skouras' Park Plaza, New York City. Ken dressed one of his ushers in a radium suit, and blacking out the entire house had his "invisible man" walk from the wings toward the screen, while over the house P. A. system, Henry announced that an invisible man was at large in the theatre, that he was on the stage, and that he was on the screen.

With this last, flash box placed on stage apron at left burst, as trailer hit the screen against a green gelatin background, at the completion of which all house lights were put on. It was something very unusual in the way of trailers and Ken reports that the house buzzed plenty after each presentation.

On "My Lips Betray" a tieup was made with a prominent character analyst who was presented from the stage during the date and also gave free readings in the lobby. Analyses charts illustrated by various features of prominent stars were distributed and instructions given to women patrons on how to compare the characteristics of their own physiognomies with those of the stars.

Personal contacts were made with the principals and teachers of all nearby public and parochial schools to sell the merits of "Little Women," and in addition to personal announcements in all classrooms which included the theatre and date, thousands of "Little Women" cards were distributed to the children, who were requested to fill in their names and birthdays and by presenting the cards during the run of "Little Women" would be entitled to a free admission on their birthdays, the theatre keeping a file of these cards for checking purposes.

What with special children's Christmas shows featuring Tony Sarg marionettes, New Year's eve extra entertainments and a host of other effective ideas, this Round Tabler is keeping things humming in that section of the city, and that he is doing business is attested to by his winning of one of the main awards in the recently completed Skouras Circuit drive.

E. M. ("Doc") Howe and Maxwell Shane promoted this parade of Saturday Evening Post delivery boys as part of the campaign on "Saturday's Millions," at the Paramount, Los Angeles. How yuh been, boys?

Managers Clicking With "Gallant Lady"

A lot of good stuff has already been put over by managers in various spots on the new Ann Harding "Gallant Lady." From the campaigns received, we have selected some of the highlight ideas:

Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo.

Round Tabler John McManus put over a neat campaign on this attraction, tieing it in with his "Loew's Thirtieth Anniversary" celebration. Featured was a co-operation with the Postal Telegraph, in which life-size cutouts of Mac's "Anniversary Girl" holding a plaque advertising the picture were planted in all Postal windows.

The lobby was extreme class, done in subdued soft tones to appeal to the woman draw, and the front was done more colorfully in a white background with black and red lettering.

Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y.

The campaign in this spot leaned strongly to the class displays, with a number of excellent windows in exclusive shops, and other angles along this line. Particularly good was the James Montgomery Flagg drawing of Ann Harding planted in one of the Sunday papers for a neat three-column break at the head of the movie page.

Loew's State, Providence, R. I.

Opening right after the advance showings of some of the new model 1934 cars, a hookup was made with the Plymouth dealers, with stills of Ann Harding in one of that company's cars, placed in many prominent spots in the show rooms and also given to the sales force as selling ammunition.

Window and other hookups were made with a candy store chain using displays in nine locations, exclusive jewelers carried stills in their windows, and other like tieups were made with banks, travel agencies, beauty parlors and five and tens.

Browning Sets Campaign For "Miss Fashion of 1934"

In accordance with Warner Bros. plans to ballyhoo each of its key city premieres of "Fashions of 1934," Harry Browning, M. & P. Circuit ad chief, has already launched a "Miss Fashion of 1934" of New England contest along the following lines.

The advance campaign includes advertising and publicity in newspapers of Boston, Providence, New Haven, Springfield, Worcester and Portland. The winners in each of these cities will be known as "Miss Fashion of 1934," with the final elimination to be held on the stage of the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston, where "Fashions of 1934" is scheduled to open January 26.

The final winner will make a tour of New England, stopping for personal appearances in each of the circuit's theatres, in conjunction with the picture's openings. The girl will make this trip in one of the leading 1934 automobiles, which will be tied in with the contest. She will lead an automobile parade in each city and will be presented to the mayor and other leading officials at special social festivities. Department stores will be contacted for special cooperative ads heralding the opening of "Fashions of 1934" with the girl to display the gowns donated by the cooperating store.

SHOWMEN BATTLE FOR FIRST AWARD

Four Days Remain to Put Over Theatre Campaigns for January Quigley Plaque; Keen Struggle Indicated by Entries Received

by A-MIKE VOGEL

There is still time, but only four days of it, for managers to put over their January campaigns they wish to forward to the Managers' Round Table Club for consideration by the judges for the first Quigley Monthly Award. Four days remain in the first month of the first competition of its kind in motion picture history—the Quigley Monthly and Yearly Awards for the best 1934 theatre exploitation campaigns submitted by managers anywhere in the wide world on any product, major or independent, domestic or foreign.

Entries have already been received, and many managers are now waiting until they complete campaigns on pictures playing during these last days of the month, and on those running over into the first days of February. As the rules state, campaigns may be forwarded after the last day of January, providing, of course, they are on January playdates.

COMMITTEE DECIDES FEB. 10 WILL BE DEADLINE FOR JANUARY CAMPAIGNS

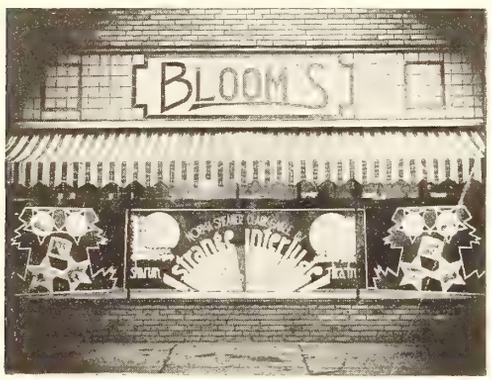
As it is the policy of the entire project to extend every consideration to entrants, the judges have decided that Feb. 10 will be the deadline for all campaigns from the United States and Canada, thus allowing sufficient time for entries from far-off points. And to properly judge entries from foreign contestants, these will be considered for the Award during the month they are received.

The above information, we trust, answers the question of the time element brought up by a number of interested managers, and should allow them now to concentrate their efforts during the remaining days of the month on their Award campaigns.

PRODUCERS' EXPLOITATION CONTESTS CAMPAIGNS ELIGIBLE FOR AWARDS

All campaigns entered by managers in contests such as M-G-M's "Fugitive Lovers," may also be entered for the Quigley Awards. Managers participating in both should send duplicate campaigns, one to the Awards Committee, and one to the producing company.

Another manager states that he runs third choice of first run pictures, following two other local houses of the same circuit, and says he doesn't have much to work on for an Award campaign. He asks what to do.



The answer to this is that the judges will give the fullest consideration to any campaign handicapped in any manner by local conditions over which the manager has no control. This does not mean that entrants are encouraged to exploit any attraction, but it does refer to pictures that have enough strength to justify a campaign. Remember, "it's not how much, but how good"!

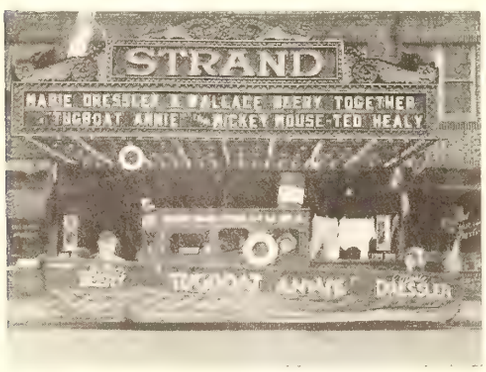
We're getting some great campaigns. Showmen are contesting keenly for the honor of being the first winner, and what an honor it will be. So send in those campaigns, and may the best man win!

Oliver Builds Flash Display for Four Dollars

From Charles J. Oliver, Sharum Theatre, Walnut Ridge, Ark., comes a photo of his very striking display on "Strange Interlude" (see photo) constructed at a cost of $4 and some courtesy passes for the window space. Charlie did all the work himself and describes the construction as follows. The display was 22 feet long, built of four pieces of beaverboard, the side panels six feet by four feet cut in a modernistic design with room enough for five stills in each.

The background piece was 12 feet long by four feet high with a pencil sketch on each end of the stars, their names lettered in between. The fourth piece was placed about

Oliver's Striking "Interlude" Display



12 inches in front of the background with the title in beaverboard letters and secured to the display with the play dates beneath. Oliver promoted some silver leaf from the druggist with which he half framed the pencil sketches, giving the entire display a very expensive look.

"Annie" Boat Plugs Picture for Ed Hart

Inland towns were deluged by the sudden influx of floating tugboats serenely propelled up and down the main streets on floats as exploitation on "Tugboat Annie." Ed Hart, the Plainfield (N. J.) Tornado, now falls into line with his unique (?) craft to exploit the picture at the Strand.

Intent on making his bally as realistic as possible, Ed copped the boat whistle from his organ, placed smoke bombs inside the funnel to produce steam and hung out a real clothes line, as can be noted in the accompanying photo. The stunt, as was expected, produced its full quota of excitement and gathered crowds in front of the theatre, where it rested between trips.

Hart's "Tugboat" Bally

Wisconsin Member States Fan Mag. Criticisms Wrong

by V. T. TOUCHETT

Manager, Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac, Wis.

Upon reading Charlie Bassin's well written article on Bally, I reluctantly marked his paper 100 per cent. I agreed with Brother Bassin but I couldn't help feeling his article reeked with defeatist psychology. I, who had formerly subscribed to two of these so-called cinema periodicals began buying every one I could find. Lo, and behold! What did I find? Pictures like "Berkeley Square" and others too numerous to mention were universally praised and recommended, but how many exhibitors had to get out the wheelbarrow to do his banking while playing them. On the other hand, pictures panned in the same magazine have broken records at the box office. Furthermore, let us look over the list of best pictures for the year. Are they all box office? Not by a hat-full. Mr. Screen Scribbler's opinions should not mean as much to your patronage as your own, unless of course you make it that way, by hooking the public.

There are enough good pictures made that if all of them made money we could afford to break even on the mediocre type, and take a dive for the poor ones. But it is flopping on the good ones that makes an exhibitor want to tear his hair out. As I see it, the reason for these undeserved failures does not lie with the failure of Mr. Screen Scribbler to sell it for you, but with the failure of Mr. Exhibitor backing up Mr. Screen Scribbler's reports.

I agree with Mr. Bassin, when playing a "natural" such as "Dinner at Eight," that ballyhoo is superfluous, and that it is only necessary to spread the news to as many people as possible. But all good pictures are not "naturals" and I'm darn sure it is necessary to make a fuss about them if you hope to get the customer excited enough to push his hard earned dollars through that little cage on your front sidewalk.

I do not believe in this "biggest, greatest, another Seventh Heaven" form of advertising on every picture, but I do believe in telling the world when I have got something big, and keeping still when I haven't.

I agree with Mr. Bassin that the sins of over ballyhoo are far greater in number than those of under ballyhoo. I also agree that generally we wear too much clothes, but am far from an advocate of Nudism.

Kane Gives Theatre Party For Student Traffic Cops

While putting on those excellent campaigns for his attractions which have been publicized frequently in these columns, hustling Tom Kane, manager Fox-Sequoia, Redwood City, Cal., passes up no opportunity to cement his good will relations. A recent instance of this was a theatre party to which were invited, as Kane's guests, a number of students from the local McKinley Intermediate School, who act as voluntary traffic officers and give a great deal of their time in order that school children may be protected on the streets.

Various Ideas Put Over On "Little Women"

From the many excellent campaigns on "Little Women" are selected some of the major stunts and tieups put over in various sections of the country, and these are set forth below for the information of the membership.

Boyd, Easton, Pa.
Embassy, Allentown, Pa.

A. R. Boyd, operator of the Boyd in Easton and Embassy in Allentown, arranged a tie-up in which a volume of "Little Women" was given away in exchange for any three cloth bound books which were brought in by patrons and distributed among the city hospitals.

Carolina, Charlotte, N. C.

Manager Eugene W. Street hooked up with the classified page of one of the local papers in which every person bringing in a cash classified ad for seven insertions received a free ticket to the picture. Street's newspaper ads were diversified by addressing copy each day to different groups, such as school teachers, women clubs, junior league members, etc.

Orpheum, Memphis, Tenn.

Manager L. R. Pierce placed a special newspaper ad that took the form of a letter addressed to RKO Radio which stated that 40,000 residents demanded that the picture be held over, and extended congratulations on the calibre of the picture.

Palace, Rochester, N. Y.

The management of this theatre cooperated with one of the local papers on a special invitation to teachers to attend a preview, the invitation going out on the letterhead of the paper. Direct contact was also made with women's clubs, libraries and leading citizens.

West, Galesburg, Ill.

Manager T. J. McSpadden secured endorsements from leading citizens and prominent merchants which were used in a page coop ad. Photographs of civic officials and prominent educators were used with their endorsements and in addition a number of stores took space to recommend the picture.

Paramount, Hamilton, Ohio

A Western Union tieup based on the press book jumbo wire stunt was secured for this campaign. Facsimilie wires from Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Frances Dee and Jean Parker were made up by the local Western Union office and delivered house to house by uniformed messengers.

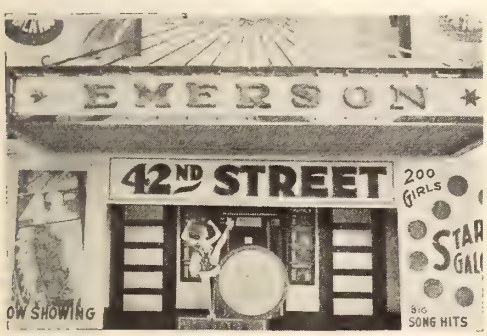
Good "Goodbye" Bally

Manager W. J. McLaughlin and Publicity director Teddy Trust of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Strand hooked into the famous Coney Island Mardi Gras parade with a bannered sound truck made up to resemble a float, decorated in the orthodox parade fashion, to advertise the showing of "Good Bye Again." On the top rode a camera man, who took pictures of the passing throngs. It was announced that these pictures would be shown at the theatre the following day and Teddy reports a decided increase in business resulted.



"Fashions" Lobby Stunt

McConnell's Workshop Turns Out Nice Front

As his first contribution to the Club columns, Manager B. A. McConnell, Emerson, Hartford, Ark., describes quite a snappy campaign on "42nd Street," accompanied by a shot of his effective front (see below).

In advance, the title was planted on the roof of the theatre in wood letter signs with the word "Coming" below, and this being unusual advertising for the community, attracted lots of attention and occasioned many queries, which of course helped the showing. McConnell reports that the front as pictured was built entirely in the theatre workshop. Extra 24s were put out on this engagement and on the opening day lettered arrows pointing toward the theatre were tacked to telephone and electric poles.

At a heavily advertised dance held on the night the picture opened, the sponsors were tied in to distribute small lapel buttons lettered with the picture and theatre which were redeemed at the theatre box office for 10 cents on the purchase of admissions. In exchange, the dance promoters tied this into all their publicity which helped the gross.

McConnell's Nice Work

Of course, those canned goods and toy matinees are put on by managers without any thought of profit to the theatre besides good will, but Ted Pence, Messner Theatre, Attica, Ind., managed to pile up quite an armload of theatre publicity on the two shows he put on for the benefit of the local Good Fellowship Club Christmas Fund, an annual event, in cooperation with one of Ted's papers.

Plenty of front page stories and cuts resulted, all of which of course plugged the theatre. And best of all, in appreciation of the splendid support given by Pence, the papers made liberal mention of the coming attractions at the Messner.

Sounds like "bread cast upon the waters."

Swank Opening For "Fashions of 1934"

With every seat reserved for an especially invited list of stage and screen stars, Wall Street leaders and Park Avenue society prominents, Warner Brothers formerly opened "Fashions of 1934" at the New York Hollywood Theatre with one of those ace campaigns engineered by advertising and publicity chief Charlie Einfeld, and executed by his fast-stepping crew.

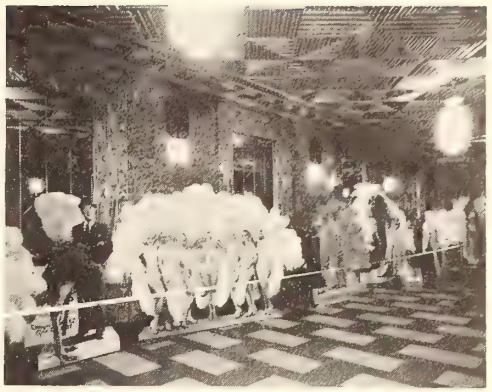
The lobby and rotunda of the theatre were decorated entirely with a display of ostrich plumes, this tying in with the background of the story, the idea being carried out further with life size cutouts of the girls in the picture, the cutouts framed in real plumes (see photo above).

One of the featured lobby stunts was a fashion parade in which 12 models, reported to have been brought on from the studios for this occasion, displayed the Orry-Kelly gowns which are shown in the picture. In addition to modeling, the girls posed for designers from the Traphagen School of Fashion, this tieup being made to give the public an insight into clothes designing and creation (see photo above).

Other lobby tieups that commanded attention included a hookup with Mallinson's silks whereby this company decorated the lobby with vari-colored silks, and an exhibit of fashion statuettes sculptored in soap was displayed by Vogue magazine.

Every woman present received an ostrich plume-handled pen, a tag on each of these plugging the picture and date. A further souvenir was a recipe booklet furnished by Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., which carried fashion shots from the picture as well as favorite recipes of Warner stars.

Newspaper Co-op Page



Russeks, the New York department store, besides underwriting the lobby style show, cooperated by putting on an elaborate newspaper and store campaign to advertise the new fashions shown, this store being included in a co-op page in the New York American that included ads of other Fifth Avenue stores handling fashion accessories shown in the picture. The co-op page carried the title in an eight-column streamer at the head of the page, and other generous space was given to plug the attraction.

An advance hookup that was effective took the form of a radio broadcast on the program of Pebeco, featuring a contest with prizes given to those naming a member of the cast described on the air, in this case William Powell.

The lobby decorations were in keeping with the atmosphere of the picture, the color scheme being apple green trimmed with silver, chromium and copper. To ensure that the picture would be sold as an inside story of clothes designing, the newspaper advertising played up the "extravaganza" angle, rather than dwelling too heavily on the fashion slants.

In addition to all the above, prominent fashion editors, designers and stylists were shown the picture in advance at special previews, resulting in much publicity in fashion columns and fashion magazines.

Adequate newspaper and outdoor billing rounded out this well executed campaign, which was in line with the excellent work to be expected of the capable Warnerites.

"Fashions" Ostrich Plume Cutouts

Cleary and Duffey Plug British Picture

An intense campaign to advertise the showing of the British-made "Soldiers of the King" at the Princess, Montreal, Can., by Manager Tom Cleary and his colleague, Cecil Duffey, went over big enough to bring forth editorial comment in all the leading Montreal newspapers in addition to photos of the outstanding tieups. One of these, illustrated below, shows the famous Canadian Grenadier Guards, which regiment paraded through the principal streets to the theatre. Note the splendid lobby flash and also the crowd held out for the next performance. Incidentally, that's Tom himself in the dinner coat to left of ticket booth.

Other tieups included half-sheet cards which were displayed in the windows of every British firm, and a British Week was also arranged in which cooperating merchants displayed goods manufactured in the Old Country.

Cleary also sends along pictures of his stunts on some of his recent attractions, an animal lobby on "Tarzan" featuring stuffed animals gathering large crowds.

Guards Theatre Parade

Panama Theatre Plants Neat Newspaper Page

An unusual angle in newspaper cooperation is reported from the Cecilia Theatre, Panama, on "This Day and Age." It was based on the fact that C. B. DeMille had selected sons of internationally known stars for parts in the new picture. With this knowledge, the newspaper was sold on running a page story on the successful careers of sons of well known local Isthmians.

The story was given a streamer across the entire page, the tieup being explained by the two column subhead, which read, "Local Names Recalled Upon Reading Lists of Movie Men's Sons Selected for New Picture," with theatre credits.

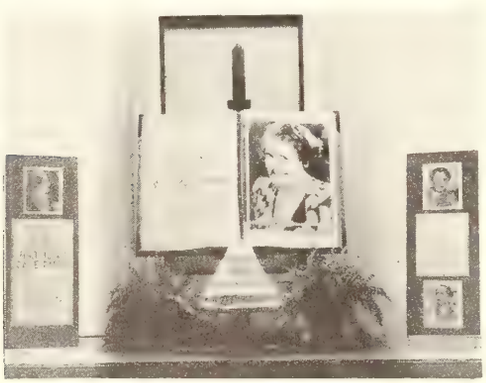
ENJOY YOUR JOB

Managing a theatre is strictly a business proposition, as all of us are willing to concede without argument. But having admitted it, there the comparison with the marts of trade ends.

The theatre manager who doesn't carry around with him an atmosphere of enjoying his job is beaten before he starts. The only thing we have to sell is the conviction that within the theatre dwells amusement, joy, escape, illusion, adventure, glamour, romance. Don't expect them to bring it in! It's our job to see that they take it out with them—and come back for more. If we don't naturally think in superlatives, write upper-case, talk in staccato headlines, dream exploitation, and just generally go Mae West, isn't it possible we ought to be selling tires, tinware or tea, and leave the theatre business to those who do?

Theatre-going is variously regarded as a luxury; a necessity, to be eked out at almost any sacrifice; an escape from reality; a time-killer, the road to knowledge; or, just somewhere to go tonight. It is and ought to be as far removed as possible from the churning, grinding and defeats of the world of reality.

It is an axiom of selling-strategy that the only way to get people to do a thing is to make them want to do it. Once the theatre manager faces this fact and orients himself to it as the Arab orients himself to Allah and the East, he will forever cease expecting them to come to his show merely because he wants them to.—From Fox West Coast Theatres "NRA," by JOHN TREWHELA, Manager, Judith Theatre, Lewiston, Mont.



Caldwell Hitting Big On Toledo Campaigns

The contest possibilities on "Dancing Lady" recently detailed in these pages were fully realized by Round Tabler Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, who tied in with his Kresge stores, Crosley Radio and many of the other participants in this nation wide contest.

Celebrating the Marie Dressler birthday and plugging "Christopher Bean" at the same time, Wally hooked in with the circulation department of his leading store, which placed a specially costumed girl in the lobby to distribute invitation cards, each good for a week's reading of one book free of charge, with picture credits on reverse side. The store also devoted an entire window to the birthday greetings and the picture (see photo), the book being actual two-sheet size. In addition, a huge four-decker birthday cake was furnished by a leading bakery, and pieces distributed to patrons.

This member used some shrewd psychology in selling "Prizefighter and the Lady" by putting on a special preview to which he invited women's club leaders and in his publicity stressing the fact that during the New York engagement women patrons outnumbered the men.

However, he did not neglect the sporting element and announced the picture at local athletic contests, fights, etc., and distributed thousands of the novelty fight tickets.

Rouda Details Two Effective Ideas

From the Roseland Theatre, a Chicago neighborhood house, comes some good ideas executed by Manager H. M. Rouda on two of his recent attractions.

For "Picture Snatcher," Rouda had one of his ushers, who closely resembled Cagney, on the street with a camera taking pictures of passersby, and after each shot presenting a small card with copy to the effect that if the person photographed found his or her photo posted in the lobby of the theatre, a free theatre ticket would be forthcoming. Copy of course included mention of attraction and theatre, with credits on the reverse side for a nearby photographer who paid for the cards.

"H. M." worked the open letter idea on "Wild Boys of the Road" with a two-column ad in his neighborhood paper, in which he stated that his personal endorsement of a picture was rarely bestowed, but that he felt that this feature was one of the most unusual that it had been his privilege to see in the past ten years, and that his patrons owed it to themselves to see it.

In his letter to Club headquarters, this member states that he feels he should be penalized for not reporting his activities more often, and promises to observe his membership obligations more closely in the future. A very healthy attitude, say we.

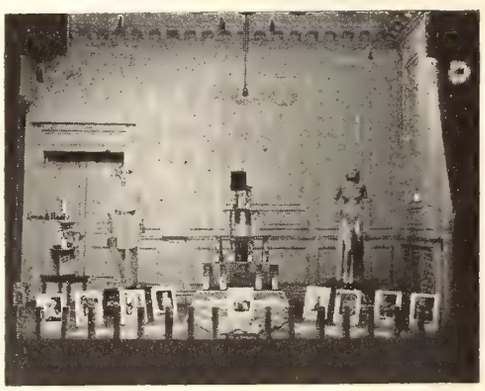
Lamm Benefits Theatre With Community Show

Tying up with the Glenville Corner Club, an organization of 75 neighborhood merchants, for a community Christmas fund benefit show, Manager Julius Lamm, Uptown, Cleveland, Ohio, built up some extra good will but not at the expense of his box office, for the event was sponsored on a percentage basis, assuring the theatre a good take as well as the needy.

Each of the merchants received a quota of tickets to sell to customers, each store carrying window displays advertising the show. Lamm's local newspaper carried a two-column front page story and gave the theatre further publicity.

St. Louis Showmen Score With "Roman Scandals"

The proximity to the famous Anhauser-Busch breweries made it possible for Manager Harold W. "Chick" Evans to promote four blue ribbon prize winning horses from the brew manufacturers for a chariot bally on the streets for three days in advance of his showing of "Roman Scandals" at Loew's State, St. Louis, Mo.



Not only did the Anhauser people supply the horses, but also the working parts for the chariot which was driven about town by a horseman in correct Roman costume, accompanied by two girls dressed as Roman slaves distributing imprinted samples of gum promoted by Homer H. Harmon, publicity director, who was aided in the general campaign by Maurie Davis, U. A. exploiter.

Cantor's radio hour was also tied in to the advance campaign, the theatre buying time on the air just ahead of Eddie's program, and in return for the star's endorsement of its ice cream, a local dairy plugged the picture on the air, in addition to making spot announcements of the engagement during the daily broadcasts a week in advance.

Grocery stores in all sections of the city carried "coffee" window strips put out by Chase & Sanborn which mentioned the star, picture and theatre, and similar tieups were made with Philco Radio, a drug chain with a cosmetic tieup, and a hat company plugging an Eddie Cantor cap. All music stores were hooked into the song hits and thousands of post cards were promoted from the local sheet music distributor and sent to the names of a mailing list obtained from a local legitimate theatre. Another prominent drug chain distributed photograph inserts in all outgoing packages, and on one sheets, pennants and menus plugged a sundae named after the star.

Cantor's St. Louis' Jewish public was also contacted through the medium of placards printed in Yiddish and thorough publicity in two local Jewish papers. Four page tabloids were distributed in downtown office buildings; the Lux tieup ad planted on the opening day with theatre sniping underline, and all this in addition to the many publicity breaks secured resulted in what was reported to be one of the most complete campaigns put over in this territory in some time.

Life-size cutouts of Eddie Cantor and Ruth Etting featured this music window on "Roman Scandals," arranged by zone chief, H. M. Addison, and M. Ravenscroft, for the date at Loew's State, Cleveland.

SHOTS OF SOME SELLING SLANTS

Dashkin's Holiday Display

(Right) DICK MOSS and KEN McGAFFEY, RKO Hillstreet, Los Angeles, Cal., put over this ace premier for "Man's Castle." They had a flock of celebs, giant floods and all the other props that stopped traffic. Messrs. Newman, Pritchard and Voight of Columbia cooperated.

30,000 Fans Greet "Pigs"

(Left) F. F. KISLINGBURY, Metropolitan, San Francisco, Cal., paraded this bally between halves of a big time football game before 30,000 fans, the first time any theatre was permitted to advertise at the local stadium. Stunt resulted in a holdover at all three theatres it advertised.

(Right) GEORGE KRASKA, Loews, Canton, Ohio, pulled this goofy street bally on "Duck Soup" in advance and during the run, and we can believe him when he says it stopped a lot of traffic. Notice the live ducks resting, or are they posing, George? Gag sure is in keeping with the picture.

Mack's Three-Way Plug

(Left) MACK McCARTY, Centennial, Warsaw, Ind., covers a lot of ground with this shot. Marquee carries current attraction, 24 board advertises another, and float plugs a third. Mack says he had to do a lot of hard work to get permission to erect the 24. It should stop plenty of passing feet.

Menches' 54-Foot Banner

QUICK SERVICE IDEAS THAT WORKED

JACK WRIGHT, manager, and JIM MACFARLANE, ad head, Rivoli Theatre, New York, got an unlooked for break on their showing of "Henry VIII" with a three column, 15 inch department store ad, plugging new styles in millinery, with credit given to the picture for their inspiration. . . .

JOE SALMON, Riverside Theatre, New York, resorted to an old, but still effective, gag on his showing of "I Loved a Woman." He passed out cards marked "Season Pass" in black type with the following copy above, "Don't let the" and this copy below, "without seeing." Catch on? Joe says it really fooled some of the people. . .

W. A. CRUTE, Victoria, Vancouver, B. C., planted practical airplane wings and tail rudders on his marquee to bally the "Phantom of the Air." Heralds were distributed at all schools with copy to the effect that the "Phantom" was coming and would drop prizes from the air. A tieup with a local aviation school nearby supplied the ship and pilot. . . .

THOMAS A. PHELAN, Mayfair, Asbury Park, N. J., sends along an effective lobby shot on "I'm No Angel" which takes the form of a half moon with a cutout figure of the star against the background, and stills as a border. Sorry it was torn, Tommy, so that we cannot reproduce it in the columns. . . .

MORRIS KINZLER, Roxy, New York, ad head, worked out the details of a benefit show and dance on the stage of the theatre, arranged by his chief, HOWARD S. CULLMAN, for the benefit of the building fund of the Walden School of New York. . . .

LEON M. MUMFORD, Roth-Strand Theatre, Summit, N. J., broke the front page of his local newspaper with a story on his annual Christmas party for the Board of Health baby clinic. Novelty was given the performance with a showing of the "Great Train Robbery" produced in 1904 in addition to the rest of the show. Leon also netted a couple of other good breaks with a story on his new projection equipment and an article on the beginnings of sound pictures. . . .

THOMAS D. SORIERO, Tucson, Ariz., Fox division chief, worked out an effective idea with his showing of "One Man Journey" by fading in and out with the "Three Little Pigs" short in the third reel of the feature, while Dorothy Jordan in the action of the story recites the story of the three piglets. Thus by this snappy instance of showmanship, Tom worked up a general box office response to a picture he previously felt would appeal only to the better element in his town. . . .

This "Hoopla" poster is the work of Don Andorfer of the Strand in Whitewater, Wis. The figure: natural colors, with the costume decorated in metallics. The lettering was black, the circles alternate red and yellow, with a black background.

With this photo we introduce a new contributor, C. M. Griefenburg of the Elks Theatre in Rapid City, S. D. The background was done in black, head in white, yellow, orange, red, brown, and measured 3½'x7½'.

MILTON D. LEWIS and LELAND E. STANSELL are putting out a snappy four-page tabloid called the "Theatre Gazette," for the Majestic Theatre, East St. Louis, Ill. The boys not only do a good job of selling their coming attractions, but also lend their pens to a lot of witty gags and contests in the best newspaper tradition. Outside advertising is carried which helps to keep the sheet self-supporting, 5,000 of which are distributed weekly. . . .

I. J. CRAITE reports a splendid canned goods matinee for his Thanksgiving show at the Fort Theatre, Ft. Atkinson, Wis. The local papers thought enough of it to run front-page stories before and after the event, in which over a thousand packages of food were brought to the theatre in exchange for admissions. . . .

PETE EGAN, able skipper of the Palace, Calgary, Alberta, Can., is getting a lot of sweet newspaper breaks on his annual "Vegetable Matinee," which he stages this year on December 9th for the relief of the needy. Local Rover Scouts are cooperating in collecting the various garden produce brought to the theatre by children who are admitted without charge. . . .

JACQUES SHELLMAN, working with his chief, MORRIS A. MECHANIC, New Theatre, Baltimore, Md., promoted a special Clara Bow handicap at a nearby racetrack to aid the second week's showing of that star in "Hoopla" at his theatre. Nine local debutantes sponsored horses in the race for which a special prize was given. The gag brought front-page mention in all local papers. . . .

HAROLD LEE, Schine's Babcock, Bath, N. Y., sends along some of his recent two color four page programs advertising the coming week's attractions. Very little copy is used, most of the space being devoted to display advertising, and well done, too, we must say. . . .

HARRY M. SUGARMAN, Egyptian Theatre, Los Angeles, tied up traffic in front of his theatre for three hours in a tieup with his Studebaker agency with a driverless car gag wherein the machine was operated by radio from a remote control car, from which loud speaker plugged opening of "Broadway Thru a Keyhole." . . .

JOHN J. FRIEDL, Publix Northwest division chief, with his local staff in St. Paul, sponsored a number of Saturday morning toy matinees at the seven Publix houses in cooperation with the local parent-teacher associations. As usual, the price of admission to children was one or more toys in good condition for distribution among needy children. . . .

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

A Question
ANSWERED

WHAT big picture today does not include backgrounds that call for composite photography? The answer is obvious. . . . The really vital point is: what medium to use in photographing these important backgrounds? . . . Eastman has answered that question. Eastman Background Negative, with its remarkably fine grain, its surprising speed, and its excellent processing characteristics, completely solves the film problem of the composite shot. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

"As The Earth Turns"

Warner Bros. production and release. Directed by Al Green. From the novel by Gladys Hasty Carroll. Supervised by Robert Lord. Cast: Donald Woods, Jean Muir, Russell Hardie, 20 others. Previewed at Warners' Beverly, Jan. 25. Running time, 72 mins.

"Warners has made an outstanding picture of Gladys Hasty Carroll's best seller, 'As the Earth Turns.' It is a triumph for all concerned from the director and supervisor to the least bit player. And it has that rare quality of picture-making which combines fine artistry with the universal heart appeal which is box office insurance. It should make a barrel of money, despite the fact that it has no draw names.

"Greatest contribution to the picture's calibre is probably Al Green's inspired direction. Screen has seldom if ever seen children, from four years old to 14, handled with such charm and naturalness. Older players are also piloted for striking results. . . .

"Honesty, sincerity, effective simplicity graced with laughter keynote the production—a design laid down in Ernest Pascal's excellent adaptation, which keeps the story close to vital human relationships.

"Jean Muir gives a topping performance, rounded and mellow, as the simple, maternal girl who reluctantly gives her heart to Donald Woods, who also plays his part with fine feeling."

"I've Got Your Number"

Sam Bischoff production for Warners' release. Directed by Ray Enright. Cast: Joan Blondell, Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell, Allen Jenkins, Eugene Pallette, 11 others. Previewed at Warners' Hollywood, Jan. 19. Running time, 67 mins.

"A fast, exciting, robust . . . comedy through which a cast of pulling names romps for a sustained laugh fest, is this tale revolving around the adventures of two trouble shooting telephone repair men. 'I've Got Your Number' has money written all over it. With canny showmanship it stirs together exciting, novel, romantic and melodramatic elements in just the right proportions with the laugh substance to get the widest audience appeal.

"Even the melodrama . . . is played to the hilt for comedy.

"Blondell, O'Brien and Farrell swagger through the top spots with plenty gusto, leaving a trail of guffaws, while Allen Jenkins does the best job of his career. . . .

"Lines are racy and toy ludicrously with the double entendre through the novel use of telephone and switchboard technical terms commonly understood.

"Direction of Ray Enright and screen story treatment by Warren Duff and Sidney Sutherland get away from the commonplace and usual routines in getting laughs and maintain breezy freshness."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 114, No. 6 — February 3, 1934

11,028,950 SEATS

DECIDED encouragement is to be had from the reports of the Film Boards of Trade in thirty-one key cities showing the return to operation of 1,260 theatres in 1933—leaving the United States now but 1,979 sound equipped houses still dark.

An incidental figure of the report, to be found among the statistics on the subject presented in a recent issue of Motion Picture Herald, is the total of 11,028,950 seats now in service. This figure stands up a certain conspicuousness against the many inflated figures of the past about daily motion picture attendance. Six capacity audiences a week would take in half of the entire population of the country. Evidently there are enough seats, now.

But, there are not enough good seats. Too many of the eleven millions of seats are in "white elephant" theatres of grandiose capacity but unfitted both physically and financially for service as institutions for the public's entertainment. The correspondence of "Better Theatres" indicates clearly enough a trend which will express itself in smaller theatres ranging in seating capacity from 600 to 1,500 seats, as recovery gathers momentum and the exhibition business sets about bringing its equipment up to date and replacing houses now in a process of obsolescence.

Both distribution and exhibition are still not a little confused and bedevilled by the problems that were made for them by promoters and bond peddlers in the easy money days. The theatres which were built, not primarily for the exhibition of pictures but in support of real estate projects and to create something to be sold by glib young men whose sole business was selling, are certainly not today assets of the motion picture industry.

The current nationwide condition, which finds the big downtown theatres prospering only when they get outstanding hits, and better class suburbans doing rather better on the average, week after week, means something—and it does not mean, as some of our Hollywood experts insist, that the output of the industry must be whittled down to a figure which suits their convenience.

JUST a few things in Hollywood are poisonously right. For instance, the office of Mr. Sam Marks, story editor for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is immediately adjacent to the big studio incinerator.

IT seems that Mr. Charles Lindbergh has given a low-winged monoplane to the American Museum of Natural History. This probably will lead some future archeologist to remark that there never was such an animal.

MR. GOLDWYN IS IN TOWN

THE first sign of spring in New York is the annual arrival of Mr. Samuel Goldwyn, on from Hollywood fresh and sprightly, a full two months ahead of the first flight of northbound ducks and the first gleam of the trout lilies on the meadows of Long Island.

Mr. Goldwyn is in town again, at the Waldorf again, with poignant words again, about Hollywood again.

Last year's arrival was covered by the personal attentions of the editor of Motion Picture Herald, who recorded among the observations of Mr. Goldwyn his declaration, thus:

. . . That the motion picture producing community has delivered as well as it has, with a practically new medium under world conditions as they are, with two sets of problems, its own and the reactions to the problems of the rest of the world, is certainly a miracle. A good job is being done and it will get better.

This year Mr. Red Kann, editor of our nimble contemporary, Motion Picture Daily, went over to the Waldorf to do the listening. And so in a recent issue of that paper we find Mr. Goldwyn quoted as saying:

. . . Unless Hollywood wakes up to the world around it and refashions its production methods along qualitative, not quantitative, lines, it stands in grave danger of losing its supremacy as the picture making center of the world. . . . The executives in this industry are committing suicide and are lacking in the vision to see it.

Mr. Goldwyn also complains about what he sees as a dearth of intelligence in his Hollywood. He says that last year he thought there were "enough brains around to turn out fifty real standout attractions a year" but today he does not think "the combined production brainpower of the industry can make that many."

One of this screen maestro's laments is that there are not enough stories, not enough writing talent—and he's had to go to Russia for a player—Miss Anna Sten. But one does not discover that Mr. Goldwyn or his contemporaries are scouring the world for the brainpower to increase the output. That would be competition.

AFTER exhaustive research, an association of educators finds that children have opinions about motion pictures. So what?

THE Utilities Research Commission of Chicago finds that plants respond and react mostly to the red end of the spectrum, in Illinois greenhouses. If the experts would take a look at Hollywood they would find several motion picture plants that seem to be aware of nothing but the "long-green."

ENGLISH FILMS FOR U. A.

Returned to New York from England, President Joseph Schenck of United Artists announced London Films will make eight, British and Dominions 12 for U. A. release, with exchange of players involved. Arthur W. Kelly, heading foreign distribution, in with Mr. Schenck, leaves for Australia shortly. He established 14 U. A. foreign branches. Twelve additions will be made to the company selling force. . . .

SCREEN CREDIT

Inaugurating the new Fox policy of tagging features with screen credit to the producer, the name of Winfield Sheehan, heading production, will appear among the credits of "Carolina," set for early release. . . .

WRITERS' COMMITTEE

Named to a committee of the Coast Writers' Guild to determine writers' demands on screen credit are: Sam Ornitz, Alice Duer Miller, Lester Cohen, Winifred Dunn, Arthur Kober, John Fish Goodrich. . . .

ACADEMY "COMEBACK"

Foreseeing a Coast Academy comeback, the Actors' Guild is bending every effort toward 100 per cent membership. With a promise of a "comprehensive period of activity," the Academy technicians' branch plans a revival. Major Nathan Levinson, who resigned as technicians' chairman, has resumed his post. The annual awards banquet will again be held. New committees and sub-committees have been named. . . .

INDEPENDENT MERGER

Still under discussion on the Coast, led by I. E. Chadwick, is the proposal that independent producers there merge with the eastern Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, also independents. Trem Carr, Sam Wolff are a temporary committee. . . .

NEW MGM SCHEDULE

An expected 52 features will comprise the MGM 1934-35 feature schedule, for the formulation of which Nicholas M. Schenck, Felix Feist, Louis B. Mayer and Irving Thalberg shortly will go into conference at the studio. The shorts total is expected to approximate last year's. . . .

RESIGNATION

Ill health has forced the resignation of Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick, of Brooklyn, as chairman of the motion picture bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, a division she founded ten years ago. Mrs. James F. Looram has succeeded Mrs. McGoldrick. . . .

"DRUNKS, NEAR DRUNKS"

Firmly, but courteously, the proprietors of a resort in far-off, tranquil Tahiti warn their "clientele," via poster, that for their protection "drunks, near drunks, would-be drunks, acting drunks," are "strictly not tolerated." This from George Bowles, sojourning there, once a part of the business of motion pictures. . . .

CENSORSHIP

The elimination shortly of censorship boards in the six states in which they exist was prophesied last week by Roger Baldwin, secretary of the American Civil Liberties Union. A bill to abolish the New York board will be offered the legislature this week, he said. . . .

TEACHING FILM AID

From the Bureau of Education of the U. S. Interior Department is expected to come shortly to administration officials a proposal for government loans to educational institutions to finance the purchase of film equipment. . . .

MPTOA DATE

Returns to date from a canvass of members indicate the 1934 annual MPTOA convention will be at Los Angeles, April 10, reports Ed Kuykendall, organization president. . . .

CODE ASSENT LIMIT FEB. 28; NAMING OF BOARDS BEGINS

Postponement Follows Request from Code Authority; Committee Tentatively Select Personnel for Grievance and Clearance and Zoning Boards for All Key Cities Except Four

The vaudeville committee of the Motion Picture Code Authority will present suggestions to the Code Authority on February 9 for changes in the motion picture code to take care of vaudeville actors and labor. This decision was reached after a mass meeting of the vaudeville field Wednesday at the Astor hotel, New York.

THE WEEK'S CODE DEVELOPMENTS

The motion picture code and activities pertaining to its administration and machinery continued during the week to occupy front-page position in motion picture headlines, with several important developments affecting producers, distributors and exhibitors, as follows:

1. GENERAL.....On This Page

(a) NRA postpones deadline for filing acceptance blanks from January 31 to February 28.

(b) NRA lawyers took under advisement distributors' protest against making elimination privilege retroactive.

(c) Code Authority committee tentatively selected personnel for 64 local Clearance and Grievance Boards, pending Administrator's approval.

(d) Code Authority had received 6,000 acceptance blanks out of 20,000.

2. ROSENBLATT IN HOLLYWOOD
See Page 14

(a) Division Administrator Rosenblatt was in Hollywood learning how complicated are the problems of Hollywood.

(b) Confers with producers over talent "raiding" and production costs.

(c) Discusses employment conditions with players, writers, directors, technicians, extras, cameramen and others.

3. THE ALLIED SITUATION
See Page 18

(a) Allied-Congress Theatre suit against Code and Code Authority postponed in New York until February 20th.

(b) Allied executives file affidavits upholding charges.

(c) NRA was studying suit, and indicated that it will defend all Code Authority members.

(d) Senator Borah received a telegraphic protest against the Code and the Code Authority, from directors of Allied, signed by Abram Myers.

4. UNFAIR RADIO COMPETITION

(a) Stage asks motion picture Code Authority to cooperate in battle against broadcasters over free admissions to programs at radio studios.

(b) MPTOA to apeal direct to broadcasters over alleged "unfair" competitive practices, with a protest to be launched with Code Authority if radio interests refuse to end such practices.

5. DE-CODING THE CODE

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S fourth article translating the Code from the legal phraseology into a working language; the first article on production: (a) General Application of Code to Produce; (b) Definition of Terms; (c) Administration of Code in Production—Boards, Committees, etc.

Producers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures have been given another 28 days to sign the official blank of acceptance of the industry's NRA code. The National Recovery Administration at Washington this week ordered that the deadline for affixing signatures to the assent blank be extended from January 31 to midnight of February 28, within which time all assents from the field must be postmarked in order to assure the producers, distributors or exhibitors protection against unfair competition under the code's provisions.

At the same time, the NRA was studying a protest against making the 10 per cent elimination clause retroactive; the Code Authority was continuing its work of selecting the personnel of the 64 field boards for distributors and exhibitors; standard rules for fire prevention at all exchanges were drafted, and the NRA came forth with some documentary evidence that their codes as a whole were benefiting the "little fellow" in business at large.

Johnson Sets Back Assent Date

Another code highlight of the week was Congressman Sirovich's statement at Washington that a conference will be held with Administration leaders in a week or two regarding the block booking situation.

Meanwhile, it was made known in New York that 6,000 of the 20,000 acceptance blanks have been signed and received by the Code Authority. And that approximately 200 grievances and complaints against unfair competitive practices in distribution-exhibition have been received from the field.

Extension until February 28, midnight, of the deadline for filing the acceptance blanks was ordered on Monday by Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator, following receipt of a request for such an extension from the motion picture Code Authority in New York. The Code Authority acted over the weekend as a result of representations for an extension from independent producer-distributor members of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, and from independent exhibitors in New York who are members of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association. Both groups said they had not had sufficient time to study the code, while the ITOA added that it had been waiting to hear from Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt regarding an interpretation of the legal phases of the code's labor provisions for theatres. Other requests for an extension were received from various quarters.

The code originally specified January 11 as the deadline for the filing of code acceptances, but this was later set back until January 31, as a result of a recommendation for such an extension made to the Administrator by the Code Authority.

The Administrator indicated willingness this week to grant the second postponement of the deadline for another month, but it was said at NRA headquarters that no further extensions will be granted. That means that each producer, distributor and exhibitor, or other company, firm, corporation or partnership engaged in the motion picture industry must postmark its acceptance blank, duly executed, by February 28 in order to be entitled to file complaints or grievances under the code and to be protected under the code against unfair competitive trade practices.

It was pointed out again that blanks to which signatures have been affixed with reservations of any nature are not valid. No one is compelled to sign the blank, but unless he does, he will not be entitled to any code privilege. And even if he does not sign the assent blank, he is legally bound to abide by all code provisions, regardless.

Protest Eliminations Decision

The Code Authority sent out 13,500 assent blanks to theatres and 6,500 to producers, distributors, exchanges and others. Some 6,000 signed assents had been received by the Code Authority in New York up to press time.

The recent decision of Division Administrator Rosenblatt to the effect that the 10 per cent elimination privileges accorded exhibitors in the code shall apply to all pictures released after December 7, 1933—the date when the code went into effect—on all contracts between distributors and exhibitors signed prior to that date, was, as expected, challenged this week, presumably by distributors, who asked General Johnson for a ruling.

However, it is not expected that Mr. Johnson will attempt to settle the matter until Mr. Rosenblatt returns to Washington from Hollywood, probably late next week. In any event, it was pointed out at Washington that the section of the code giving exhibitors the right to eliminate 10 per cent of any block of pictures under contract, also stipulates that contracts be amended to conform with the code's provisions wherever such contract conflicts with a code provision. The point to be determined is whether the elimination clause was intended to apply to pictures previously contracted for but not released until after December 7, the effective date of the code.

It was indicated this week at Washington that the NRA's ruling in the elimination privilege matter will confirm the decision of Division Administrator Rosenblatt that the privilege is retroactive as described above. Meanwhile, NRA lawyers were studying the matter during the week.

Mr. Rosenblatt was still in Hollywood talking with producers and studio workers about the general production situation as it affects talent "raiding" production costs and conditions affecting workers. (For details of Mr. Rosenblatt's Coast conferences, see page 14.)

Decide on Tentative Field Boards

The Code Authority's committee for selecting Local Grievance Boards and Local Clearance and Zoning Boards in each of the 32 exchange centers, practically completed its work this week, with the selection of tentative personnel for both divisions of boards for all cities except Boston, Chicago, Detroit and Philadelphia.

The special Code Authority committee in charge of the selections, and comprised of Sidney R. Kent, Fox; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York TOCC; George J. Schaefer, Paramount; W. Ray Johnston, Monogram; Nathan Yamins, Allied, and Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA, met almost continuously throughout Friday and Saturday, in New York, for purposes of setting up these boards.

The committee will decide on selections for the remaining four boards on February 8, and on February 9 the entire two slates will be brought up before the Code Authority for its approval and for the approval of Mr. Rosenblatt. Identities of the candidates selected by the committee from among names of 906 exhibitors and exchangemen submitted by both factions in the field, will not be made known until finally approved both by the Code Authority and by the Division Administrator. The committee's selections may be changed at the meeting February 9, and others substituted.

The deadline for submitting nominations to the boards—which will be comprised of 128 exhibitors and 128 exchangemen—was at midnight of last Saturday. In the issues of January 20 and January 27, MOTION PICTURE HERALD published the names of 899 candidates. Since then the Code Authority has made known the names of seven additional candidates, as follows: W. Burton Smith, Atlanta; Mrs. Kenneth Richardson, Charlotte; Lester J. Fountain and Floyd Rice, Los Angeles; Joseph S. Skirboll and Art Levy, Pittsburgh, and Bruce Johnson, San Francisco.

Each of the 32 Local Grievance Boards will have a paid secretary, and such secretary in all probability will serve the Local Clearance and Zoning Board in that exchange city. The secretaries will be selected locally by the boards.

Rules of procedure and a method for selecting alternates for both branches of boards in the field will be determined on February 8 by the special Code Authority committee in New York.

More than 200 complaints and grievances are now on file from exhibitors in the field at Code Authority headquarters and will be forwarded to secretaries of the 32 boards as soon as they are set up. All complaints are acknowledged by Executive Secretary John C. Flinn.

Meanwhile, in New York, there developed some speculation, as a result of the extension to February 28 of the deadline for assents, over the likelihood of the Local Grievance Boards and Local Clearance and Zoning Boards being set up before March 1, at the earliest.

Reason for the speculation is that with governmental approval of the assent extension, and in view of the fact that all members of the local boards must have signed the assent blank, the Code Authority may not be able to determine whether all board selections have signed the assent blank until the deadline on February 28.

At the Code Authority the impression prevails that the boards will be announced after the Feb. 9 session inasmuch as most exhibitors want the 64 boards established as soon as possible. The longer the boards wait, the more delay there will be on grievances and formulation of new zoning schedules, it was pointed out.

Code Authority Moves February 13

The temporary headquarters of the Code Authority, located on the sixth floor of the Paramount Building in Times Square, New York, will finally be moved on February 13 to the permanent quarters on the 23rd floor of the RKO Building, at 1270 Sixth Avenue, Radio City, New York.

At the Code Authority meeting on February 9, a special committee, composed of W. Ray Johnston; Neil Agnew, representing George J. Schaefer; J. S. MacLeod, representing Felix Feist, and Arthur Dickinson, of the MPPDA, will present for ratification a standard set of rules and regulations for fire prevention at exchanges in the field. The regulations will be binding on all exchanges, whether independent or of major company affiliation.

The fire rules will be essentially the same as those which have been in effect in exchanges of Hays distributor members for the past eight years.

Efforts to secure a Congressional study of the motion picture business, including the film code, are being made by unnamed independent motion picture interests, it was indicated by developments at the Capitol this week.

Protests of independents, presumably Allied, against the code have been the subject of correspondence between Representative Sirovich, of New York, and Recovery Administrator Johnson, it was disclosed by the New York Congressman, who also has written to Mr. Johnson protesting against Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, receiving in return from Mr. Johnson a strong defense of Rosenblatt, in which Rosenblatt was declared to be a capable, fair and hard-working member of the administration in whom the Administrator has unbounded confidence.

Following Mr. Rosenblatt's return from California, it was disclosed by Congressman Sirovich, a conference will be held between the two, possibly with other administration officials and members of Congress participating, on the subject of block booking to determine whether changes should be made in the copyright act in order to permit the outlawing of block booking.

The conference was suggested by General Johnson, Mr. Sirovich declared, adding that it probably was an outgrowth of the situation arising when President-Emeritus Lowell, of Harvard University, refused appointment as a Government representative on the Code Authority because of his objection to the exclusion of a ban on block-booking in the agreement.

Sentiment is also being massed behind the bill introduced during the special session by Congressman Patman of Texas, providing for the establishment of a motion picture commission, with powers of censorship, to control the industry, it was said. However, it is not believed that any action will be taken on the measure this session, in view of President Roosevelt's expressed desire that Congress confine itself to matters of major importance, in order that the session may not be unduly prolonged.

Despite adoption of the film code and the Senate investigation of Wall Street, agitation for a full investigation of the industry has not died down in Congress, it was said. Members of the House interested in the subject are shortly to meet with Representative Sirovich to consider whether to push his resolution of investigation. Congressman Sabath of Illinois, the New York member said, is urging action on the resolution.

The NRA and the "Little Fellow"

The NRA at Washington set out through two different channels during the week to correct an impression that the NRA codes have been harmful to the "little fellow" in business.

One method was an analysis of business failures in the United States, which, it was said by the Administration, shows a marked decline in commercial mortality in the last six months of 1933, as against the records for the same periods in 1932 and 1928. The Administration found there were fewer failures among small business than in the larger groups.

Inasmuch as no codes became effective before July 1, 1933, and the President's reemployment agreement did not become effective until August 1, the NRA could not, it was pointed out, have contributed to business failures prior to July 1.

At the same time, General Johnson, after a lengthy discussion with the President, announced at Washington that the NRA will set up a special board to aid the "little man" in business under the various codes.

60 Likely from Paramount

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, was to leave Hollywood Thursday for New York. It appears that the customary 60 features will be forthcoming from the company on the 1933-34 schedule.

GOVERNMENT MAY BUY EQUIPMENT

The non-theatrical motion picture industry—which is not bound under the regular film code—was asked this week by the NRA to speed up the completion of its code in order that it may be passed upon without further delay.

The desire to conclude consideration of this agreement is based on suggestions that the Government may make loans to educational institutions for the purchase of sound equipment for visual education. This move results from the representations of the educational picture producers that there is a lack of equipment in schools which makes production practically impossible, while the equipment producers charge they cannot sell projectors because there is a lack of film product. To cut the so-called "vicious circle" it has been suggested that the Government make loans for the purchase of equipment.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

BASEBALL MANAGER VISITS STUDIO. But no screen contract was being negotiated, we're told, when Bill Terry, Giants' pilot, called at the Vitaphone studio in Brooklyn the other day. He is shown with Sam Sax, studio head.

SHOOTS CUBAN MILITARY CHIEF. With his trusty camera. Thus did Fernando Delgado of Fox Movietone News recognize the importance in Cuban affairs these days of Colonel Fulgencio Batista, a leading figure in the island republic's "new deal."

SIGNED. (Left) Leah Ray, radio singer, who has been engaged by Educational for feminine leads. Her first is a Christie comedy with music.

CAST. (Right) A new portrait of Elissa Landi, who has been assigned the role opposite Joseph Schildkraut in Columbia's "Sisters Under the Skin."

LOUISIANA EXHIBITORS HEAR KUYKENDALL ON CODE. Representatives of independent and affiliated theatres shown with MPTOA head during meeting in New Orleans at which NRA provisions for film industry were discussed. Organization was also begun of a new body to include both independent and affiliated theatre interests, with Harry McLeod as temporary president. The announced object of the association was complete representation with the Code Authority. Attending were exhibitors from the entire New Orleans distributing territory.

DOING THE ARDJA. Sally Crawford, star of Deane H. Dickason's new South Sea production, "Sally-Go-Round," in Bali rehearsing a scene with a temple dancer. Concluding scenes for the picture are now being filmed.

HAS CONTRACT. Jay Lloyd, who came to the MGM studio as a tire salesman and remained as a player, following screen test.

STAGE ASKS INDUSTRY TO AID FIGHT ON FREE RADIO SHOWS IN THEATRES

Use of New York Theatres for Broadcasting of Programs With Free Admission Brings Protest From Actors' Equity

Encroachment of radio broadcasting companies in the field of theatrical entertainment, through presentation of free attractions in New York's legitimate theatres, this week evoked protest from the Actor's Equity Association, through its official representative on the Legitimate Theatre Code Authority, and from the MPTOA.

As a sequel, the motion picture Code Authority is to be asked to cooperate with that of the legitimate theatre in an effort to curb this allegedly unfair competition by the broadcasters.

Acquisition by broadcasters of theatres seating in many instances fully as many persons as the average first run motion picture house, and subsequently producing "glorified" radio shows, is the prospect which precipitated the protest of the legitimate houses.

Exhibitors for three years have protested against film star radio broadcasts, then only in the studios and with a necessarily limited audience capacity. Now, the demand upon the broadcasting studios, especially in New York, for free admission to such star broadcasts, has brought expansion.

CBS Acquires Theatre

The National Broadcasting Company in its new Radio City headquarters has space sufficient to accommodate almost any reasonable number of free admissions, but in spite of this it still maintains a studio theatre on the New Amsterdam roof—the scene of the famous old Midnight Frolics.

Columbia Broadcasting System, housed in considerably less spacious quarters than is NBC, last week took over the Hudson theatre and announced its intention to utilize the house regularly for broadcasting purposes.

MPTOA In Arms Over Radio Practices

Vigorous protests sent directly to 35 key radio stations of the country will be made on behalf of exhibitors of the country by the MPTOA, against unfair radio competition of broadcasters in permitting large audiences to attend broadcasts as guests of the studios. If relief is not granted directly, the MPTOA intends taking its complaint to the Code Authority of the radio industry.

The action by the MPTOA is being taken as a result of nationwide reports received from exhibitors in the field on radio broadcasting practices believed by exhibitors to be unfair competition to theatres.

Many of the MPTOA members reported that thousands of free passes to broadcasts are being handed out weekly, and the exhibitors charge that many of these would otherwise attend theatres for entertainment. Numerous instances of theatres and halls being rented for broadcasts, in many parts of the country, and audiences admitted without charge were also reported, according to Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA. This constitutes unfair competition "in the sense of any code," said Mr. Kuykendall.

Film and Stage to Join in Battle

Paul Dullzell, alternating for Frank Gilmore, president of Actors' Equity, on the legitimate Code Authority, suggested last week the appointment of a committee composed of Mr. Gilmore, Marcus Heiman and William C. Elliott, president of the IATSE, to confer with members of the motion picture Code Authority and seek their cooperation in approaching the radio Code Authority on the question. This group will sit in on a joint discussion with the film group at its next meeting February 9.

Would Halt All Free Shows

Although the action was prompted by the CBS acquisition of the Hudson theatre, the theatre group will seek to put an end to all free admissions to radio broadcasts, Mr. Heiman said this week.

Last year the protest of exhibitors against free radio programs came to a head when sponsors of national programs requested their listeners, through the medium of newspaper advertising, to stay at home and listen to specified programs.

This year, several programs direct from Hollywood have served further to disturb the peace of mind of the small exhibitor particularly. Where a majority of such stellar radio attractions were confined largely to Sunday nights when business was apt to be poor anyway, they now are spread out through the entire week, usually at hours when a patron normally would be in the motion picture theatre.

Thousands cram the studios of both national networks in New York alone every night, with the average daily turnover for the two estimated at 20,000. These individuals do not have to pay any admission fee.

While it is considered possible in some measure to combat this situation by prohibiting film artists under contract from accepting broadcasting engagements during these film contracts, the radio has built up a sufficiently powerful array of names who are radio stars in their own right to make such procedure virtually meaningless. In any event, the producers appear to have made no effort to curb the practice in this way.

STARS OF FILMS ON THE RADIO

Among motion picture stars who appear more or less regularly on radio programs are Eddie Cantor, Will Rogers, Bing Crosby, Rudy Vallee and Chic Sale. Two regular programs, "Forty-five Minutes in Hollywood" and "Raymond Paige's California Melodies," sponsor one motion picture celebrity each broadcast, usually in the form of an interview.

The "Hall of Fame" program on Sunday nights alternates each week with a motion picture star, an opera and a legitimate stage star. On this program already have appeared Katharine Hepburn, Douglass Montgomery and Wheeler and Woolsey, with Mae West and several other luminaries scheduled for early broadcasts.

Film Code Authority Asked to Cooperate With Legitimate; Parallels the Exhibitor Protest On Broadcasting by Stars

CWA Actors' Pay Cut

Meanwhile, the newest possible competitor to the motion picture, the Civil Works Administration project for setting up national and municipal theatres throughout the country to alleviate unemployment among legitimate actors, received something in the nature of a setback this week when all salaries were reduced 23 per cent, after only three weeks of the project's existence.

For the time being the CWA plan has been confined only to New York City, and it was here that 11 out of the 12 stage directors of the CWA plays held a protest meeting objecting to the cut which affected them and 150 players who are to participate in the 12 presentations. Also attending the meeting was Paul N. Turner, Actors' Equity counsel. It is understood that Mr. Turner had been requested to draw up a complaint to be signed early this week by the directors and by the 150 performers. Copies of the complaint are to be forwarded to the local and national headquarters of the CWA.

According to Mr. Gillmore, only two of the 12 directors voiced objections to the reduction. Mr. Gillmore hoped that some way would be found to adjust their grievances. Up to date all those engaged in the CWA dramatic productions, it was said, had been paid only once—on January 18. This included compensation for the previous two days. The lowest salary is $25 a week and the highest is $35. Salaries of all CWA employees were reduced January 19.

Midland Investment Settlement Impending

Signatures to a settlement of the receivership suit against the Midland Investment Company of Kansas City are to be affixed this week, and the action is expected to be dismissed Friday, when it comes up for hearing in circuit court there. The announcement was made by attorneys for Herbert M. Woolf, M. B. Shanberg and F. H. Reid, the plaintiffs.

The Hollywood Scene

By VICTOR SHAPIRO

SOL A. ROSENBLATT, NRA Division Administrator, was learning this week how complicated are the problems of Hollywood. Ten days on the production front in California and Mr. Rosenblatt was still reviewing an almost endless line of extras and stars, production generals and corporals, writers, agents and technicians, creative workers and non-creative workers, sound men, singers, cameramen, free-lance players and whatnot, who paraded in a steady stream before him with their special problems in picture making.

He has talked with the studio executives on star raiding and production costs and with the various classes of workers with regards to conditions of employment; he has heard suggestions for improving relations between workers and the studios, and on more than one occasion was told by various working groups that something should be done about alleviating the unemployment situation in certain production quarters.

Mr. Rosenblatt denied vigorously New York reports which had reached Hollywood saying that his visit to Hollywood was primarily to fix maximum salaries for players, directors and executives. He said these reports were "ridiculous," but indicated that his observations on the salary problem will be submitted in a report to the Administration when he returns to Washington next week.

Talks About Morals and Films

Mr. Rosenblatt spent practically all of Tuesday this week studying the machinery of the Central Casting Office and of the Hollywood branch of the Hays organization. He said he was amazed at the precision and work involved in handling the extras by the C. C. O., and said that the work of the Hays branch in handling the censorship question locally, both in script and stills, was "startling and constructive." He passed out compliments, too, on the manner in which Mrs. Winters' department of the producers' group handles reports for the various women's clubs.

He indicated that he lacked a realization that the various divisions could function for the best interests of every one, elevating the moral standards of pictures, particularly at this time when many reform movements are active.

"Securing closer association between the producers and the principal public and civic bodies toward higher moral standards is of vital importance to the welfare of the industry and the execution of any code," said Mr. Rosenblatt. "All persons involved in picture making should give this situation their utmost attention. Only three weeks ago, a leading national religious organization went on record as 'going after immoral' pictures first, and prohibition second."

On Tuesday night, Mr. Rosenblatt made a hurried trip to the Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers (WAMPA), where he delivered his first public address since he arrived in Hollywood from the East. His audience comprised several of the top-line producers and numerous press agents and newspapermen.

"Nowhere have I encountered so many people so diversified in their interest to make one thing, and that is screen entertainment," Mr. Rosenblatt told the WAMPA gathering. "And who," he added, "are at the same time eagerly striving to better conditions for the welfare of the entire industry. They have come to me willingly with their problems and laid their cards on the table.

"The motion picture code," he continued, "is the most flexible document if evidence is proven where certain clauses are impractical. It can be changed. The motion picture industry is no different from any other industry where some members of it want to do wrong. But the majority, wanting to do the right thing, will govern any code."

Speaking for the benefit of the press agents, the Division Administrator said: "Press agentry in the motion picture business is its only craft not taken care of in the code with regards minimum wages, and this because press agents are the caliber of people who can take care of themselves. However, with regard to the code, they can play a vital part for the general welfare of the industry in connection with clean advertising and curtailing misrepresentations to the public."

Mr. Rosenblatt told the WAMPA that he is emphatically against sex pictures. He said that in the past three weeks he has received no less than 6,500 letters asking for the abolishment of sex in films, and he said he also received a six-page petition, single spaced, with each signatory adding his age—ranging from six to forty-one; and his occupation—from laborers to bankers, and all protesting against sex in motion pictures.

"From my observation today," he said, "everybody has two businesses, their own and motion pictures, with every conceivable reform body taking upon themselves the liberty to attack motion pictures. The less grounds demonstrated to agitate this criticism, the better for us. Some of these complaints are justified," he added, "but I don't believe in government regulation or other interference of censorship. There is a proper way for coping with the situation ourselves."

To the daily newspapers' criticism of his social activities, Mr. Rosenblatt answered that each event has been just so much more work—and that much more direct information. Saturday he was at Agua Caliente, followed by dinner at Marion Davies' home. Sunday night he was guest at Louis B. Mayer's home, and he conferred with I. E. Chadwick Monday night.

This NRA Thing

While we're on this NRA thing, we might as well tell you about Hal Neides, who guides the destinies of the Alexander theatre in Glendale for Fox West Coast. Friend Hal knows how to keep his house in the black by having plenty of previews. So the other night when we heard he had a "sneaker," we took the long ride over, in loyalty to our duty and responsibility. Our appearance stunned Hal, but before we could say "Hello," he said "N.R.A.—No Reviewers Allowed." Now, who says managers can't think for themselves?

Rotund Arch Reeve, who goes to New York in place of Gabe York, here to succeed Arch as studio publicity manager at Fox Movietone City, was farewell wined and dined the other night, under the guidance of Generalissimo Joe I. Breen. Arch, who has spent only about 15 years with Paramount and Fox, was roundly ribbed, with "Nobody ever heard of you" as the spirit of the evening.

What Ho, Scout!

What d'ye make of this? Darryl Zanuck, erstwhile Warner Bros. production chieftain, now functioning similarly for 20th Century, makes "Advice to the Lovelorn," with a Beatrice Fairfax heart throb column as its big angle, and Warners come up with "Hi, Nellie," another newspaper yarn incorporating the same feature. Warners preview "I Got Your Number" and the next night 20th Century unveils "Looking for Trouble." Both are telephone stories. How many lads and lassies has either fellow in the other company's bailiwick? Maybe it's dramatic coincidence!

The "back-to-the-farm" movement brought out two pictures last week. Before a chosen few, Winfield Sheehan took the lid off Janet Gaynor's "Carolina," and Jack L. Warner held a sneaker on "The Earth Turns" that every reviewer in town caught.

RIBBER RIBBED

Vince Barnett, for years Hollywood's ace "ribber" in the guise of anything from a punch drunk pug to Albert Einstein, has come a cropper. Barnett, in his spare time, essays to be an actor with pretty good success (remember "Scarface"). Out at Universal the other day a director caustically criticized everything the sterling actor attempted. It took the combined efforts of everyone on the lot to convince the ribber he was being ribbed.

90 PER CENT OF HERALD CHAMPIONS INDORSED IN CIVIC GROUPS' PREVIEW

87 Per Cent of Month-by-Month Champions and 94 Per Cent of Final Winners Receive Support of 12 National Groups

Ninety per cent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Box Office Champions for 1933, including the month-by-month Champions and the final winners for the entire year, were among the productions which had had the indorsement and active support of the 12 national groups previewing motion pictures.

For each of the past three years there has been a steady increase in the percentage of Champions approved by these groups, with 80 per cent in 1931, a gain to 82 per cent in 1932, and 90 per cent for the year just past. Concomitant with that closer parallel of Box Office Champions and selections of the previewing organizations is the fact of word-of-mouth advertising by 3,000 Better Films Councils. Twenty-five thousand leaders of community organizations who have demonstrated an active interest in the work of the Councils, receive preview reports each month.

87 Per Cent of Monthly Champions

A total of 79 pictures were named in the past year in the Champions of the monthly compilations. Of these, 33 were indorsed by the committees for family entertainment; 37 for adults, and nine were not recommended, making 87 per cent of the approved pictures for the year.

Of the final Champions for 1933, published in this issue, 13 received championship rating and six were cited for honorable mention. Of this number, the previewing groups approved eight for family, ten for adults, and one was not recommended, making a total of 94 per cent approved. Therefore, the total Box Office Champions for the year, combining the month-by-month winners and the year's final Champions, had more than 90 per cent indorsement of the committees and clubs.

Of the 12 national previewing groups only eight see all pictures released and it is on this basis that the following tabulation is made. In addition to the past year, a breakdown of the previous two years also is presented. The letter "F" designates the number indorsed "for family"; "A" for adults, and "no," disapproved for all ages:

	F.	A.	Approved	No
1930-31 season to October, 1931..	9	4	13	2
October to December, 1931.....	9	7	16	4
January to April, 1932.....	11	8	19	0
April to July, 1932.....	7	9	16	8
July to October, 1932.....	7	9	16	4
October to December, 1932.....	7	14	21	4
1933:
January to April.....	6	11	17	2
April to July.....	9	7	16	3
July to October.....	9	10	19	2
October to December.....	9	9	18	2
1933 Totals	33	37	70	9

The Champions for the year, receiving indorsement for 18 out of the 19 pictures, were rated as follows: Family—"Cavalcade," "Little Women," "42nd Street," "Tugboat Annie," "Be Mine Tonight," "Kid From Spain," "The Bowery" and "Lady for a Day." Adult—"I'm No Angel" (from one group only), "Gold Diggers of 1933," "State Fair," "Maedchen in Uniform," "Rasputin and the Empress," "Animal Kingdom," "Private Life of Henry VIII," "The Match King," "Dinner at Eight," "Sign of the Cross," while one picture not indorsed by any group was "Sailor Be Good."

On the HERALD'S monthly Champions listings, 12 pictures appeared more than once, and three pictures appeared three times. These were "Cavalcade," "Gold Diggers of 1933" and "Be Mine Tonight."

The "Selective" Patron

As to what makes a winner at the box office, more and more exhibitors are agreeing that part of the solution lies in gaining the "selective" picture patron to add to the socalled "fan" audience.

On the other hand, as they point out, it is one thing to know what makes a Box Office Champion and quite another to know how to make a winner out of a picture the exhibitor has to sell.

For years "passing the buck" for the failures and claiming the glory for the winners has been called the favorite three-cornered "indoor pastime" of the motion picture industry. If the picture was a natural success, it was a production achievement, said the studios; but if a failure, that, too, was to be charged to production, said the sales and advertising departments of the distributors, and the exhibitors blamed both. And in the background, available to all three branches, lay the opportunity to utilize agencies already existing for organizing word-of-mouth advertising—a constantly growing number of civic units actively engaged in the criticism of motion pictures.

94 PER CENT GIVEN CIVIC INDORSEMENT

Ninety-four per cent of pictures which won ranking as MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Box Office Champions for 1933 also received the indorsement of national previewing groups. There were nineteen pictures in this classification, eight of which were indorsed by the civic organizations as for "family" entertainment, ten for adults, and only one was considered unsuitable.

"Little Women," which had its premiere at New York's Radio City Music Hall on November 24, speedily won rating as one of the December Champions and tied for third place with "Forty-second Street" in the final annual Box Office Champions.

Increasing Percentage of Approval by Previewing Groups Parallels Better Films Councils' Word-of-Mouth Advertising

Women and the Preview

Seven to ten years ago it was generally agreed that 45 per cent of the box office gross was conditioned by what women said about the pictures they had seen. At that time women talked only about the pictures they had seen, but today, long before a picture arrives at a theatre, women are repeating what the previewers have said to them about the picture to come; saying it to the neighbor, over the air, in the press, on library bookmarks and in the schools.

Paralleling the pronounced indorsement given by the women's previewing groups to "Cavalcade" and "Be Mine Tonight," for example, was the fact that these were two of the three pictures appearing more than twice in the Herald's month-by-month list of Champions.

Augmenting the women's organizations and preview groups are 17,000 teachers of English cooperating in the program of the Photoplay Committee of the National Council of Teachers of English and the new Eastern Preview Committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs. These two organizations, although they came into the field at a comparatively late date, sent out the following word about "Little Women": "Don't miss it, and take the whole family."

And "Little Women," which opened at the Music Hall in New York as late as November 24, was one of the 1933 Box Office Champions.

New Jersey Women Form Film Study Federation

At a meeting in East Orange last week, a group of New Jersey women, interested in film presentations of an educational nature for adults and children, formed the Finer Films Federation of New Jersey. Seventy-five attended, from various neighboring towns. The session was held under the auspices of the better films committee of the Women's Division of the local Chamber of Commerce and Civics.

Officers elected included: Mrs. Leon H. McIntyre, chairman; William O. Ludlow, vice chairman; Mrs. Jay Zeamer, secretary, and Mrs. Ruth E. Denton, treasurer. The organization aims at complete state-wide representation, the raising of motion picture production standards, and the formation of film study groups.

SAMUELSON HEADS NATIONAL ALLIED; SEND CODE PROTEST TO CONGRESS

New Jersey Allied President Succeeds James Ritter; Myers and Blum Reelected; Plan to Name National Cabinet of 24

Telegraphic protest against the Code Authority and operations of distributors under the Code was received at Washington Wednesday by Senator Borah of Idaho from Abram F. Myers on behalf of the national board of directors of Allied States. The telegram was inserted in the Congressional Record by the Senator.

The Allied Board invited the Senator's attention "to a device resorted to by the Code Authority for the motion picture industry to defeat the remedial measures not involving change in law." That body, it was explained, "dominated by major producers, requires that independents file unqualified assents to the code as a condition to participating in any degree therein, thereby waiving all rights and approving in advance everything this code authority may do. We have filed suit to test their right to do this and are advised defense of the proceeding will be handled by NRA, thus making it appear we are opposing the Government."

Major producers also were charged in the telegram with violating code provisions against forcing of shorts and "protecting themselves by stamping on the contract that the exhibitor has agreed to purchase an excess number and requiring exhibitors to initial the clause."

"We greatly deplore that efforts to enlist interest of General Counsel Richberg elicited only condescending and evasive letter from a subordinate attorney," the telegram concluded.

Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey, was elected late last week to the presidency of the national Allied States Association at the organization's board meeting at the Hotel Warwick in New York. Mr. Samuelson succeeds James C. Ritter, of Detroit.

Abram F. Myers, former member of the Federal Trade Commission, was re-elected to the post of general counsel, and Herman Blum, of Baltimore, again was named treasurer.

With plans for the invasion of every state in the union in which there is no Allied affiliated exhibitor organization, the Allied directors adjourned last Friday after a three-day session, the nature of which from the beginning had been veiled in secrecy.

Under the expansion plans Allied will set up a national cabinet of 24 to work with Mr. Samuelson to effect nationwide representation. Units in the territories where there is no state Allied branch, will be established simultaneously, but the first step will be the appointment of six vice-presidents of the national association—one each from the eastern section, middle west, northwest, Rocky Mountains, west coast and the south.

SIDNEY E. SAMUELSON

Each vice-president thus appointed will set up a regional cabinet of three exhibitors and each vice-president will be directly responsible to the national board of directors, this group to comprise the national cabinet.

Allied units in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Detroit, New Jersey and Pittsburgh called meetings this week to discuss the results of the New York conferences.

From Boston early this week came word that Allied is supposed to have effected a tie up with the Motion Picture Research Council to raise $200,000 in order to finance a two-year campaign for "the elimination of block-booking, blind selling and to provide for trade showings and advancement of the motion picture art." The Allied directors last week are understood to have indorsed the Council's policies, which, as reported from time to time in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, have been largely "anti-motion picture industry" and dealt specifically with alleged "moral corruption" through the motion picture of the nation's children.

Attending the three-day Allied directors' meeting in New York were: Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass.; Aaron Saperstein, Chicago; Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh; Walter Littlefield, Max Levenson, Edward Ansin, Boston; J. P. Adler, Milwaukee; H. M. Richey, J. C. Ritter, Detroit; Ray Branch, Hastings, Mich.; Al Steffes, Minneapolis; Mr. Blum, Baltimore; Willis Vance, Fred Strief, Cincinnati; M. B. Horowitz, Cleveland; Abe Stone, M. Harrell, Albany; William C. Smalley, Cooperstown, N. Y. H. A. Cole of Texas did not attend.

With Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt on the west coast and the Code Authority busy on code matters in New York, NRA officials in Washington this week appeared not especially concerned over Allied's recent legal attack on the sanctity of the motion picture code.

Allied Said to Have Effected Tieup with Research Council To Raise $200,000 to Fight Block Booking, Blind Selling

Members of the administration's legal staff were studying the suit, actually filed by the Congress Theatre, of Newark, in New York, in which members of the Code Authority, as well as Mr. Rosenblatt, were named defendants. Whether the Government would defend the Authority members, it was said, would depend upon the circumstances. There was some question as to how far the Authority members are Government officials; under most codes, such members are elected by the industry, but in the film code they were named by the President, although representive of the industry.

Exhibitors in the Minneapolis territory, numbering 137, voted Tuesday not to sign the Code acceptance without reservations.

The Government will defend Mr. Rosenblatt, a Government official, and will defend the code itself. With respect to the Division Administrator, it was pointed out that the Government representatives on code authorities have no vote and any action they might take is purely negative, so that they could not be named together with the industries' members in any suit brought, but only with respect to their activities as officials of the recovery administration.

General Johnson said that in all suits against Code Authorities the Administration will study carefully all circumstances and will defend Code Authority members only if convinced the actions complained of are in strict conformity with the provisions of the code. It was said that any Code Authority which exceeds its powers, or abuses its privileges and position on the Code Authority and gets into legal difficulties, will be left to fight its own way out.

Hearing on Suit Postponed

Meanwhile, in New York, attorneys both for the Code Authority and the Allied-Congress theatre interests decided on Tuesday to postpone preliminary hearing on the case until February 20, in order to serve Division Administrator Rosenblatt, who was en route to Hollywood when other Code Authority members were served.

At the same time it appeared that a second suit was about to be filed against the code and the motion picture Code Authority, by Fred Herrington, Pittsburgh, and W. A. ("Al") Steffes, Minneapolis, both Allied directors. This turned out to be nothing more than affidavits signed by each substantiating the claims in the Congress theatre action.

CLOSE OF PARAMOUNT BANKRUPTCY IS NEAR

Company Expects To Be Discharged from Bankruptcy in Half Year; General Reorganization Virtually Completed

After one year of operation under receivers, trustees and a federal referee, Paramount Publix last week estimated that at least 90 per cent of its finance problems have been solved and that the company may well be discharged from bankruptcy within the first six months of the current year.

The tenth month of the bankruptcy ended January 26. One year before, Paramount consented to a friendly equity receivership only a few hours after its most important theatre holding subsidiary, Publix Enterprises, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Eight weeks later, on March 14, the parent company itself went into bankruptcy.

Realty Reorganizing Underway

Steady progress is being made preliminary to clearing up the various problems, most involving reorganization of real estate holding companies. Publix Enterprises has been completely reorganized and its assets sold to Famous Theatres Corporation, subsidiary created for the reorganization.

Another important matter pending concerns the Paramount-Broadway Corporation, owner of the Paramount Building and theatre, which has $8,870,000 bonds outstanding. This probably will be reorganized soon on a basis to permit the parent company to operate the theatre without loss, according to the Wall Street Journal.

A general reorganization plan for Paramount Publix is understood to have been virtually completed by Sir William Wiseman, former member of the Paramount directorate and an associate of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., former Paramount bankers working in conjunction with Dr. Julius Klein.

Sir William's plan is to be advanced on behalf of the bondholders and other creditors as soon as sufficient progress has been made on adjustment of creditors' claims against the company, which are said to approximate $250,000,000. A great majority of these claims, it was pointed out last week, will be disallowed, expunged or compromised.

New Company, Reported Plan

It is understood that the plan is to call for the formation of a new company, to be owned by Paramount, which will buy up the assets of the bankrupt estate.

The reorganized company probably would not take over theatre subsidiaries in receivership due to their unprofitable operations, unless the fixed charges or the real estate funded debt, or both, could be scaled down to a point where the theatres could be operated without a loss, in the opinion of the Wall Street Journal. If these various theatres were taken over by bondholders under foreclosure, it is considered doubtful if they could be successfully operated independently without Paramount's film output, the Journal continues, while on the other hand Paramount needs these houses as an outlet for its product.

At the time of its receivership Paramount revealed liabilities of $47,826,890 and assets of approximately $150,000,000. Cash on hand at that time was $399,545. On Sept. 30, 1933, the third report of the Paramount Publix trustees in bankruptcy showed cash on hand aggregating $2,074,480. Autumn and winter distribution receipts are said to have more than doubled that cash figure, bringing the company's cash position to approximately $5,000,000. In addition to this there is a federal tax refund for the year 1929 amounting to $7,275,000.

No Outside Financing

No outside financing of any sort has been resorted to by the company during the past year, virtually all revenue coming from the distribution department. Distribution receipts were aided greatly by the decline of the dollar and its resultant increase in revenue from foreign distribution, which was estimated to have doubled over the year previous.

At the same time the company's theatres have been reorganized to an extent where they have not required exorbitant cash demands on the parent company or its operating subsidiaries. This reorganization, involving decentralization of theatre operations by creating operating partnerships in the field, is regarded as a cornerstone of the new Paramount operating structure.

Famous Theatres is now in charge of all former Publix Enterprises houses, which are being operated directly by it or by operating partners. A number of the houses have been disposed of entirely and creditors have been offered a choice of settlement of valid claims on the basis of 33 cents on the dollar or a share of stock in Famous Theatres for each $200 of approved claims.

A reorganization plan to end the bankruptcy of the Saenger circuit in the south, without public sale of assets, is nearing completion.

Attorneys' Claims Opposed

Elihu Root, Jr., of counsel for the Paramount receivers, told Federal Judge John M. Woolsey that the equity receivership of Paramount Publix was the "most difficult, most complex and most harassing occupation, considering the length of time, that I have ever been in." Mr. Root's statement was made at a hearing on the application for fees and expenses during the equity receivership. Judge Woolsey gave the attorney a week for the filing of briefs.

"Paramount would have lost its entire business to competitors overnight if the equity receivership had been mishandled," Mr. Root declared.

The receivers are asking for payment of $218,000 fees incurred during the two months' receivership period last winter.

Opposition to the payment of any such fee was voiced by Saul E. Rogers, attorney for a Paramount bondholders' group, on the grounds that the court was without authority to grant an allowance because, he charged, the equity receivership was an improper procedure and Paramount should have applied only for bankruptcy.

Counsel for the Central Hanover Bank, a creditor for $1,400,000, declared that, while not wishing to oppose payment of the fees, they recommended careful scrutiny by the court of the "substantial" allowances asked by Mr. Root for the receivers, and Goldmark & Colin, Paramount attorneys. Root, Clark, Buckner & Ballantyne has petitioned for $125,000, and Goldmark & Colin for $25,000 for counsel fees.

Others To Be Named to Board

The remaining members of Paramount's new national theatre advisory board will not be named before additional meetings with partners following the return of Ralph A. Kohn to New York this week. Thus far the appointees are N. L. Nathanson, representing Canada; Karl Hoblitzelle, the Southwest, and E. V. Richards, Jr., the South.

Paramount this week will resume operation of the Brooklyn Paramount theatre which, since September 1, has been operated by Mort Shea. The theatre will operate under the general supervision of Boris Morros.

Approval of a mutual cancellation of claims by Paramount Publix, Walter Reade and Frank V. Storrs, theatre lessors, involving an estimated $500,000, was given late last week by Referee Davis. Reade and Storrs had filed claims against Paramount aggregating $250,000, growing out of a 1930 agreement by which Paramount leased 16 New Jersey theatres from the claimants. Paramount filed counter claims against Reade and Storrs for a corresponding amount on the same agreement, resulting in the mutual cancellation action.

A LONG TIME BETWEEN SHOWS

It took him a long, long time, but W. A. Dickson, Mace, Ind., resident, finally went into Crawfordsville one night recently, and saw the show, films included, at the Strand. It was the first motion picture Mr. Dickson had ever seen, and the first theatrical performance he had witnessed in 20 years. Mr. Dickson will be 87 next birthday. When Guy Hammitt, Strand manager, asked him how he liked motion pictures, the answer was, "Fine. I never missed a word." Four complimentary passes were Mr. Dickson's reward for his expressed intention to see a lot of talking pictures in the future.

Decision Reserved in Quittner Case

Decision on a motion to permit consolidation of the record for the appeal of the Edward Quittner anti-trust action against Paramount and large distributors, was reserved Tuesday by U. S. District Court Judge Francis Caffey, New York, who gave Graham and Reynolds, counsel for Quittner, and the attorneys for the defendants 10 days in which to file additional briefs.

Sam Morris Convalescing

Sam E. Morris, vice-president of Warner Bros., is recuperating in the Sydenham hospital, New York, from an operation he underwent there last Tuesday.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

WE have in hand a copy of the Radio City theatre program which arrived at that theatre from the printers only a few hours before S. L. Rothafel had that run-in with the RKO management which resulted in his resignation. In the program is a message from Roxy on the occasion of the first anniversary of the Radio City Music Hall. It is addressed to the public, and says, in part, over Roxy's signature:

"At this time, on behalf of our entire staff, I want to . . . tell you that you have got to love us just a little, because we love you so much."

We do hope that Mr. Rothafel isn't fickle.

Which reminds us of what Marek Windheim, the Polish opera singer, told Joseph Mitchell, New York newspaperman, about his first experience in New York after arriving from Poland.

It seems that Mr. Windheim sang in Brooklyn and then sang for Roxy. "The reason I sang for Roxy," he said, "is that my English was very bad and an American told me the two best ways to learn English are to marry an American or work in an American theatre. I decided to work in Roxy's chorus and learn English. In four weeks I came out with a good knowledge of Russian."

Mr. Alfred Finestone, Esq., newspaper correspondent extraordinary in the wheat belt of Kansas City and thereabouts, takes issue with our recent paragraph about the Paramount publicity department claiming for Cecil Blount DeMille the "honor" of discovering Miss Sally Rand several years ago, long before the young lady made the front pages with her fan dancing.

"Sally was discovered by a 'dinky' little Kansas City commercial film lab some 12 years ago, when she posed as a model for film ads," writes Al. "Later she went to vode and the stage and then took a 'flyer' in films. DeMille may have discovered her then, but it took the World's Fair to 'reveal' her."

Walt Disney and Sally worked together at the same Kansas City commercial laboratory. In those days Sally was known as Billie Beck.

Coincidentally, Chicago's city fathers will not invite Sally back for the reopening of the fair in June. They probably have the young lady's best interests at heart, refusing to interrupt her budding motion picture career on the Paramount lot in Hollywood.

MR. JOSEPH P. POLLARD has unearthed for the delight of the less serious minded a neat half-dozen lallapaloozas from the court calendars of 1933, as follows:

The proceedings against American cowboy films in the movie houses bordering the Hungarian Great Plain, so the herdsmen would no longer neglect their work to dream of Hollywood movie heroes.

The Chicago petition to vacate the injunction forbidding the petitioner to communicate with her divorced husband. "He won our last argument fourteen months ago, and I can't get over it. All I want is a chance to clear my record," she said.

The unsuccessful suit brought by a Hollywood movie extra to recover $50 pay instead of $20 when he discovered himself in a closeup of the film.

The suit filed by the Eskimo girl who won the first beauty contest held inside the Arctic Circle, a suit against the metropolitan newspapers that failed to mention her in their list of the year's great events.

The suit that a Chicago wife brought against her husband to recover the $2,000 she had paid to various taxi-drivers during the year for delivering the inebriated husband to their home C. O. D.

The action brought by a New York businessman against the telephone operator who kept telling his customers that his line was out of order, and who transferred the calls to her father, a business rival of the plaintiff.

TALE-TELLING is a pastime and an art traditionally the outgrowth of long, lonely evenings by winter firesides in places where there are no movie houses just around the corner and no radio set in the front parlor.

Nevertheless, Broadway still has its folk tales—tall yarns that originate mysteriously—even though the thought of legend and folklore in connection with the bright lights of Broadway seems fantastic in itself.

What appears to be the most recent addition to the town's folklore deals with a ghost reported to be haunting the subways and playing nerve-shattering pranks on those staying out late of nights.

It seems that two middle-aged ladies went to a Broadway picture palace one evening and found themselves at a few minutes after midnight in a subway station nearby, waiting for a train to take them to their suburban homes. There were only a few others on the platform, and among them was an elderly man, tall, well-dressed and very nervous. His constant pacing brought him close to the ladies several times, and they were deeply struck by his pale, haggard face. They commented upon it to each other.

Soon, the subway train rolled into the station, and the horrified women saw the man jump from the platform directly under the wheels. They screamed, and one of them fainted.

After the excitement had subsided a bit, a search revealed that there was no mangled body on the tracks—nor any faintest sign of one. Yet both of the ladies swore they had seen the man hurl himself into the path of the roaring train. Maybe it was something they et.

"It is easier," says RKO, "for studio wardrobe women to drape a voluminous gown, such as one worn by Thelma Todd in 'Hips, Hips Hooray' (advt.), than it is to properly fit the picture's chorus girls in their abbreviated costumes."

"The reason," they said, "is because the chorines' garbs are so very scanty that they must be painstakingly fitted exactly so—with no room to spare for guess work!"

'MATERIAL FOR A NEAT FILM COMEDY'

Says Benjamin DeCasseres, Essayist and Critic, of "Big-Hearted Herbert"; Other Plays Current on Broadway Are Discussed From the Angle of Camera

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT

Here is the raw material for a neat picture comedy. It is dramatic, clean and sometimes hopelessly inane. It would never break any box-office records; but having that quality of recognition—of "Why, I know a family like that!" pull—which always gets underneath the skins of the Family Bosom audiences of the We-are-just-folks circuit, it might pay to do it with a comedian of the kidney of J. C. Nugent, who as a grouchy head of a big family walks off with the show.

"Big-hearted Herbert" is from a story by Sophie Kerr. The Kalness family—middle-class decidedly—and their friends are up against Papa Herbert Kalness, fat, fat-headed, scowling, apoplectic, growling, nagging, bragging, agin everything. He's a "self-made" bladder.

He is against the boys going to Harvard or eating bananas. He's against his wife's stylish friends—he orders them out of the house as they are about to sit down to dinner.

So the wife and children turn the tables on him. They dress as slovens and forget their table manners when he brings an important customer and his dainty wife to dinner. It works. Big-hearted Herbert is tamed to a blubber.

In its present form it is burlesque; but it has the elements of a big comedy-drama; or it may be played Mack Sennett style. The audience enjoyed it uproariously.

Picture value, 65 per cent.

OLIVER OLIVER

Do you remember Paul Osborn's "The Vinegar Tree"? Well, if you know the excellent from the commonplace, you of course voted that comedy, both as a play and a picture, a corking fine piece of work.

"Oliver Oliver," by the same brilliant Mr. Osborn, is not as variegated in its comedic possibilities or as penetrative in its character work as the first work; but it is, for all that, an exceedingly enjoyable and often hilarious bit of aristocratic hokum.

For picture possibilities, "Oliver Oliver" is a dainty bit for Mr. Lubitsch or one of his school. It is high class, Ritzy, sophisticated, as brittle as a Dresden china teacup, and with intelligent dialogue-twirlers will do much to lift pictures another notch into the mythical ermine-spats-monocle dimension.

It's a week-end saga. Guests of Constance Oakshot (Ann Andrews—blondly sparkling) and her son Oliver (Bretaigne Windust—suave, sophisticated, an epigram-hurler) are another fellow, still another fellow from Ohio, and Judith Tiverton (Alexandra Carlisle—grumpy, satiric, superb—and her handsome daughter Phyllis (Helen Brooks), the latter the bone of contention, as she is rich, and the Oakshots are down to their last claret-cup.

The rivalry between the other fellow and Oliver, the manipulations of the mother to get "the richest man in Ohio," and the racy verbal harpooning of one another as they sit around are all there is to this bit of fluff; but it kept the audience amused.

It's the sort of thing that I, personally, cannot see too much of on the screen—done by an intelligent director—and Herbert Marshall-Leslie Howard-Genevieve Tobin-Alison Skipworth?

Picture value (I regret to say) is not over 60 per cent.

CURRENT PLAYS AND FILM VALUE

Plays of the Broadway stage discussed by Benjamin DeCasseres this week are rated by him as follows in the light of their potential value as screen material:

"Big Hearted Herbert"—65 per cent.
"Oliver Oliver"—60 per cent.
"Half-Way to Hell"—40 per cent.
"The Gods We Make"—30 per cent.
"Growing Pains"—60 per cent.
"Under Glass"—25 per cent.

HALF-WAY TO HELL

The title, of course, spells Hollywood. And this lurid, hard-breathing melodrama by Crane Wilbur will undoubtedly make a grand old-timer for the lovers of melodrama. The thrills will have to be slicked up a bit.

At present the play, which quickly folded, has plot-laryngitis and dialogue-arthritis. But that's where the scenarists come in.

It's all about Captain Zebulon Brant, a hijacker, who is going to die. He buys an island off of the mainland somewhere.

He gets his relatives to yield up their jack to him and puts it all in a chest.

Inviting his kin to the island, he begins to knick 'em off one by one. There are axes, arrows, a lunatic, a Chinaman—they all Do Their Part.

There is no mystery in this play, but Hollywood's choicest will no doubt fix that up.

Picture value, 40 per cent.

THE GODS WE MAKE

One of the most hopeless plays of the season, "The Gods We Make," produced by a John Cameron and writ by the unknown Messrs. McCall and de Lozier, circles around the panic of '29 and some moneyed women.

Picture possibilities are more potential than actual. It may make one of those things that Alan Dwan used to do in five days and that Jimmy Cruze said he could do in forty-five minutes.

Dick Webster, Texas Oil Johnny. Wife won't divorce him.

Merle Cavendish is having engine trouble with the market and with her swain (Lloyd Hughes, of the old Vine street lot). Lloyd sends Merle to hospital.

Now there is a four-cornered mazuma-and-sex catch-as-catch-can between Webster, Merle, Lloyd and Ara Gerald, with a grand exposé scene in which Ara saves Webster, the Texas oil snorter, from ruin.

Can be whipped into shape for the old guard 10-cent trade.

Picture value, 30 per cent.

GROWING PAINS

A pleasant little picture with some exciting sex-primpings and much of flaming, adolescent, dumbbell youth can be made from this comedy—"Growing Pains"—byAurania Rouverol, with Junior Durkin (now decaying into early manhood) as the star.

It's all about a whole raft of mercurial kids in a Northern California university town who are just beginning to explore the secrets of necking in the gloaming, drinking rowdy punch and beating the traffic cops with the new Ford. And there's a gorgeously beautiful find for Hollywood in Jean Rouveral.

The father especially, a bookish university prof., is full of the meat of droll comedy, for he hasn't the slightest idea what all this hell-raising sex-jittering is about. A nice Roland Young part.

A picture (and a play) not to be taken seriously, but made for speed, fun and the generation Just Awakening. There's a good dialogue base.

Picture value, 60 per cent.

UNDER GLASS

Eva Kay Flint and George Bradshaw wrote "Under Glass," and so far as pictures go it would make one of those smart, sophisticated plays that are often of doubtful b. o. value.

Gizzard of the story is a young married couple, Tony and Steve (Stephanie to nobody), who are always picking on one another. They live in her father's house. He is a widower and has a few blue-ribbons himself from the necking paddock.

There is not much action stuff in this unblushing opus, but for picture purposes the dialogue will have to be manicured and bobbed.

It's all cheesy to me; but such things do get on the screen.

BRITISH INDUSTRY SEES POTENTIAL BENEFITS IN NEW FILM INSTITUTE

Industry's Suspicions Melt Away as Organization Outlines Aims; Test Will Come in Practical Operations

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

Aims and objects of the British Film Institute are outlined for the first time in a brochure just issued from its headquarters. Ever since the first vague proposals to create such an organization (about 18 months ago), the trade has been wondering what it was all about, and for lack of information became suspicious.

Now it is made apparent the Institute is not the leech, hanging on to the industry for what it can bleed out of it, that it formerly was taken by some to be. Their new pamphlet disposes of all that, and indicates that the Institute can both directly and indirectly be of much service to the motion picture business, though there's a question whether the position is made clear enough.

Cites Ways It Can Help

From what I subsequently learned from Reginald V. Crow, secretary of the organization, there are ways in which it very definitely can assist the trade, by encouraging a new type of patron into the theatre and by testing the public pulse to find out exactly what type of entertainment the man in the street wants. Basically, of course, the activities of the Institute lie chiefly in the educational and "cultural" field, and so far as that application of the film is concerned nobody can deny its value.

Some of the work on which the Institute is now engaged includes the dissemination of advice on apparatus, supply of films and so on to schools, educational bodies and similar groups; publication of a quarterly magazine and a monthly bulletin of films suitable for educational purposes or of unusual merit; preparation of a permanent catalogue; cooperation with the producers of non-theatrical films by actual presence on the studio floor in an advisory capacity; building up among the public a body of opinion in support of films which possess artistic or unusual merit; and a host of other activities.

It was the contention of Reginald Crow that the present succession of mediocre talking pictures is driving patronage away from the theatres. He contends there are plenty of pictures being produced that are definitely of unusual merit, and which, judged by the standards of the cinema public, are not box office—product like "Morning Glory," "Berkeley Square" and "Power and the Glory." (And what pictures, too!)

Now, says Mr. Crow, there is definitely a public that has been driven away from motion pictures by their mediocrity which would appreciate subjects such as those outlined, but who, having lost interest in motion pictures, are now out of touch. Through the Institute it is considered this section of the public could be reabsorbed into the cinemas.

Closer Check on Requirements

Further, by enrolling these folk in the ranks of the Institute, a closer check could be maintained on the requirements of the public, and assistance in the selection and presentation of material therefore could be given the producers.

As I see it, the argument means the development would have a snowball effect, at the same time swelling the ranks of the box office customers, building up the quality of future entertainment and educating the whole mass of the people to a higher sense of appreciation.

Obviously this is a most laudable aim. As an ideal it is one that will have universal support. Question is, exactly how practicable is it?

The plan of the Board of the Institute is to invite members of the public to become subscribers at an annual fee of twenty-one shillings (say five dollars) and to embrace adult educational bodies and other sections of the community concerned with cultural development. It is calculated that a membership of well over a million persons may be built up this way—a very appreciable body of opinion where the motion picture theatre is concerned.

Wants to See Practical Benefits

My personal attitude is that it will be no easy matter to persuade the normal man or woman to cough up such a subscription; the average person is unwilling to pay out money unless he can see some practical advantage accruing from it.

To me, there seems to be a snag there in the plans. I don't want to be hyper-critical of the venture merely because it is something new; I believe the potentialities of the Institute may be tremendous; but, like Doubting Thomas, I want a more practical demonstration and more convincing proof before I can go all out for it.

And that, I imagine, is how many others will view it.

AIMS OF BRITISH FILM INSTITUTE

The function generally of the British Film Institute is "to encourage the use and development of the cinematograph as a means of entertainment and instruction." In detail, the objects are defined as follows:

To act as a clearing house for information on all matters affecting films at home and abroad, particularly as regards education and general culture.

To influence public opinion to appreciate the value of films as entertainment and instruction.

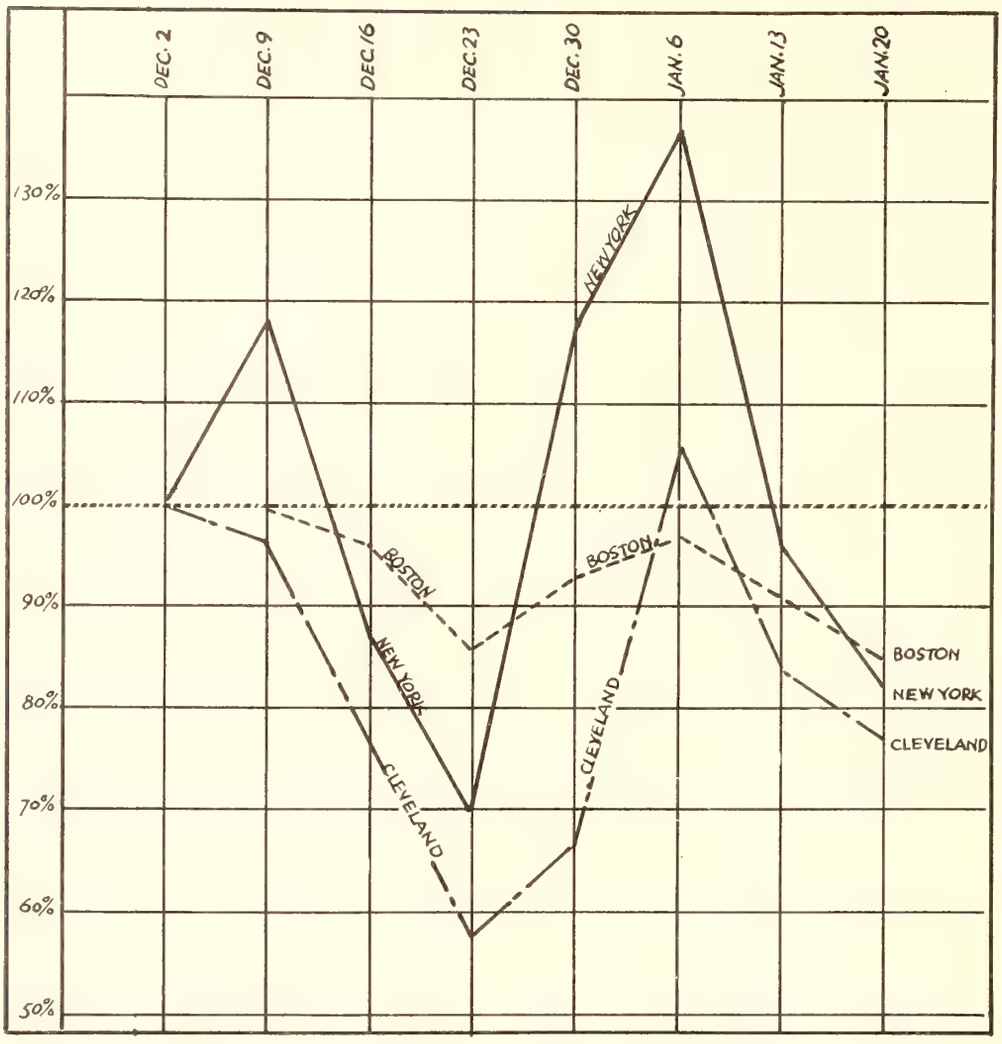
To advise educational institutions and other organizations and persons on films and apparatus.

To link up the film trade and the cultural and educational interests of the country.

To encourage research into the various uses of the film.

To establish a national repository of films of permanent value.

To provide a descriptive and critical catalogue of films of educational and cultural value.



To advise Government departments concerned with films.

To certify films as educational, cultural or scientific.

To undertake similar duties in relation to the British empire.

Columbia Declares Preferred Dividend

Columbia Pictures Corporation has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the preferred stock, payable March 1 to stockholders of record February 15.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box-office receipts, indicates the fluctuations in business for three eastern cities during the eight-weeks period from December 2, 1933, to January 20, 1934. In each city, the gross for the week ending December 2 is taken as 100 per cent for that city.

Urge a Survey of California Houses

The rumbles of the earthquake which visited southern California last March, with a loss of life close to 150 and a property loss estimated at $50,000,000, are still being heard throughout the state and a reconstruction program entailing expenditures that greatly exceed this property loss is underway.

The state legislature, at the 1933 session, passed measures affecting the construction of public buildings, and rulings have since been made making it mandatory upon school boards to place school buildings in an earthquake proof condition. In many communities, splendid school structures have been closed and use is being made of tents.

Professor Bailey Willis, noted earthquake and geological authority of Stanford University, declares that there are thousands of buildings in California that are as much of an earthquake menace as public schools and urges that a general building survey be made in every community, with special attention to theatres and places of public gathering.

Professor Willis places low frame and stucco buildings in the sound class, along with large office buildings and large theatres. Between these two classes of publicly used structures is a wide gap filled with buildings that present a constant danger in earthquake zones. He lists 500 in San Francisco and more than 2,000 in Los Angeles in the latter class, with hundreds in smaller communities.

Last summer a survey was made of buildings on Market street, San Francisco, including theatres of many sizes and types of construction. Out of 450 buildings examined, 74 per cent were found to require reinforcement. Theatres were found to average a higher percentage of safety than buildings used for other purposes, but few were given a perfectly clean slate. In most instances, these were found to be safe for occupants but to present unnecessary hazards to those who walk the streets from parapet walls, signs and decorative features.

A survey of theatres throughout California has been proposed in order that these may be made earthquake resistant to the greatest possible degree. Professor Willis suggests that the survey be made at once and that the responsibility be placed on the owners by notifying them of the facts. Designs for reinforcing weak structures are being developed by engineers and public opinion is being aroused to demand safety in public and semi-public buildings. If plans of state officials are carried out, theatre owners may be required to have safety certificates before being permitted to operate.

Loans of Talent Seen Increasing

Facing an inevitable increase in costs due to the NRA, producers will be more susceptible to loaning their contract players to other studios when they are not needed on the home lot, reports from Hollywood declared late last week.

The practice of interchanging contract players from one studio to another is said to have become more open during the past two months than ever before in the history of Hollywood. It is said that this practice has hit the free-lance player badly, since every contract player loaned out means just one less job for the independent actor.

TARIFF CUT AND ELIMINATION OF ADMISSION TAX CHEER AUSTRALIA

Reduction of Import Duty to Eightpence a Foot Is Compromise; Tax Removal Saves Industry £30,000 a Year

By CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

Motion picture business is looking up in Australia. Two decisions of the federal government of the Commonwealth have been factors in that development.

One was the agreement to reduce the tariff on imported film to eightpence a foot, from the one shilling a foot imposed eight months earlier.

Second was the decision of the Government to evacuate the field of entertainment tax, which means a saving of 30,000 pounds a year to the industry. Theatre men of Sydney say the reduction will be passed on to the public. The removal of the tax is a direct help to city theatres, but it has no direct effect on suburban houses, as it applies only on tickets costing 2 shillings 6 pence and over.

The tariff reduction followed a lengthy debate covering practically every phase of the business, and came as a compromise to the Senate's recommendation that it be brought back to the original scale of fourpence. The industry was not entirely satisfied with the final verdict, recognizing that it represents 100 per cent increase over the duty that obtained a year before, but realizing also that an eightpence levy is better than a shilling a foot. Appeal had been made for sixpence limit.

A feature of the debate was the number of amazingly misinformed statements made, some of them being so incorrect as to appear deliberately distorted.

British Competition

The Minister for Customs, Mr. White, who supported the motion for a duty at eightpence, argued for another inquiry along the lines of the Royal Commission of 1928, which sat for several weeks, spent many thousands of pounds, and got nowhere. He admitted, however, that there first would have to be some alteration in the Constitution, as the Federal Government has no control over general matters affecting the picture business, this power being vested in the States. "It would be beneficial if the States transferred their powers," he said, "so that Federal Parliament could legislate on all phases of production, exhibition and distribution. The industry is particularly one that lends itself to Federal control." He also mentioned the possibility of introducing a quota, while refusing to recommend it without further investigation. Another speaker said an ad valorem duty should be substituted.

To my mind, the only speech worth reporting at any length is the unexpected contribution made by Mr. Thompson from the electorate of New England. Mr. Thompson subsequently crossed the floor of the House to vote in favor of the sixpence a foot amendment. He declared:

"I contend that the matter should be considered not only from the amusement, but also from the economic point of view. I shall not pose as the authority on the merits of moving pictures, but, from what I have seen, I am satisfied that for all-around production merit, British pictures which are sent to Australia are not in the same class as American productions. . . . I do not agree that we should tax every American industry doing business in this country. Each industry should be dealt with on its merits. If we flog the American picture industry there will undoubtedly be an unhappy reaction."

Nevertheless, Thompson's arguments failed to sway the majority, and an agreement on the eightpence duty was reached on the voices.

Up to the Distributors

That verdict means that the Australian distributors of American film, who undertook to carry the burden themselves if the duty was kept down to sixpence, will have to go into a huddle again and decide upon a new policy. Should they decide to carry the load, they will be wishing an additional £47,000 a year on their own backs. The exhibitors, and in turn the public, will have to pay; and whoever cares to study the following facts will doubtless be inclined to agree.

Between 1930 and 1932 Australia's film importations from all sources dropped from 35,971,000 feet to 16 million feet.

Between 1928 and 1932 the tariff varied from one penny and a half a foot to fourpence a foot, and the amount of revenue collected declined from £296,273 in 1930 to £58,101 in 1932.

The sum collected in amusement tax was £76,670 in 1930, but only £28,543 was obtained in 1932. In that time taxable attendances fell from 6,671,000 to 2,142,734.

Gross film sales were £2,095,077 in 1930, but only £1,391,059 in 1932.

In 1930 the eight Australian branches of American distributing companies made net profits amounting to £170,000. These turned into losses of £22,000 in 1931, £41,000 in 1932, and £27,000 in 1933.

The opinion expressed by Customs Minister Forde, that it would be better if the States transferred film powers to the Commonwealth, draws attention to a situation that has long been a sore point with the Federal Parliament. Its inability to legislate on motion picture affairs was really the reason underlying the failure of the 1928 Royal Commission, because, except for such questions as censorship—which is a Customs, and a Commonwealth matter—the Federal administration lacked the power to act on the Commission's recommendations. Evidently exhibitors in Queensland agree with Mr. Forde and believe that the Commonwealth, acting as a unity, could do more for them than the States can do individually, for they recently sent a deputation to Premier Forgan Smith of Queensland, and asked him to revive the old question at the next Premier's Conference. Premier Smith agreed to do so; but so have other premiers in the past and still the States refuse to surrender their rights. It's difficult to say which of the seven administrations involved would make a bigger mess of the job.

States Cling to Control Over Films Despite Customs Minister's Plea for Federal Rule; 3 Premieres; Newsreel Record

Three Premieres

Three Sydney premieres are worth talking about. The first was that of "Dinner at Eight" at the St. James. This town hadn't seen a marquee containing such a galaxy of starring talent since "Grand Hotel," and rolled along according to expectations. The second was "Gold Diggers of 1933," at the State. It coined some terrific money in its first week, though business since suggests that it won't clock as much as "42nd Street" in its subsequent runs. Australia goes crazy for musicals when they're scarce, but give them two or three in a short space of time and they soon cry enough. "Footlight Parade" will have to be good to earn the grosses obtained by its two predecessors. The third place of honor belongs to the locally-manufactured "The Squatter's Daughter," which is proving big box office.

Newsreel Record

American newsreel men, priding themselves on the faculty of shooting the news while it's hot, and of getting it on the screen while it's still sizzling, may not be above learning a thing of two from the unit which turns out the Fox Australian Movietone newsreel each week. Every year there is a race among the newsreel men to reach the screen with a start-to-finish film in sound of the Melbourne Cup, and for 1933 Fox cantered home a winner by some hours.

This year Fox Movietone determined to have its film showing in Sydney—600 miles from Melbourne—on the same night that the race was run, and with the aid of the internationally famous airman, Sir Charles Kingsford Smith, they did it. Less than seven hours after the winner, Hall Mark, flashed past the post, a complete reel was showing in four Sydney theatres.

RKO REDUCES LOSS $7,338,000 IN YEAR

Net Loss Brought Down to $3,356,552 in One Year; Assets Written Down to $69,799,219; Theatre Loss More Than Halved

Radio-Keith-Orpheum, in equity receivership for one year on Saturday last, has reduced its 1932 net loss of $10,695,000 to a net loss of $3,356,552 for 1933.

No plan for company reorganization to end the receivership status has been announced, but it was reported last week that the receiver, Irving Trust Company, might make application for a discharge from that capacity early in June.

At the time of its receivership, Jan. 27, 1933, RKO listed liabilities of $19,500,000 and assets with a book value of $80,500,000. Assets at that time included a $75,000,000 investment in subsidiaries, with cash in the bank reported at $122,106.

The prelude to this report was the 1932 net loss of $10,695,000, which showed the company had an operating deficit for the year of $11,600,000. The first report of Irving Trust as receiver noted that when it took over the RKO administration it came into possession of only $2,846 in actual cash.

Assets Written Down $69,799,219

In one year from the date of its receivership, RKO has written down its assets to $69,799,219. Cash, in current and working assets, approximates $2,500,000. Theatres which had been operating at an average weekly loss of $30,000 at the time of the receivership, had the loss approximately halved for the first three-quarters of 1933, with an indicated progressive improvement still being noted. In addition adjustment of rents on numerous leases, already has brought reductions aggregating more than $250,000 annually.

Also at the time of the receivership there were 162 theatres under RKO operation. Today there are 104, after 58 were dropped by the company and Irving Trust.

In addition to loss in circuit operation there was a loss of $134,000 for the first nine months of 1933 on the two Radio City theatres, the Music Hall and the RKO Center. After changes of policy and personnel, including reduction of operating costs, the two theatres are now reported to be averaging a monthly net of $75,000.

Creditor claims approximating $24,285,143 have been filed against RKO, exclusive of a contested claim for $15,000,000 filed by Rockefeller Center for defaulted rents and construction costs, but approximately $17,400,000 of the total claims filed against RKO are for rentals, and all of them are being contested by the receiver in hearings before a special master.

RKO is continuing its operation out of distribution and other corporate revenue, making no outside loans. Activities of the production and distribution branches are said to have been maintained at a normal level.

All Advertising Taxed in Missouri

National, as well as local advertising copy, placed in Missouri papers, is subject to the recently enacted sales tax of one-half of one per cent, under a ruling by the attorney general in Kansas City. Thus, advertising placed by home office departments of theatre circuits or New York agencies will fall under the levy. Since the newspapers will pay the tax direct to the state, it is believed they will add the amount of the tax to the bill.

The first tax to be paid by Missouri theatres on gross business, as well as other service taxed, will be due and payable February 15, covering sales and services during the last fifteen days of January. Exhibitors will receive tax returns early in February. Picture houses will absorb the tax, because no way can be found to pass it on.

Returns to the state auditor must show the sales of tickets for the month. Overpayments may be credited to the amount due for the following month or months. If the tax for the month is not paid by the fifteenth of the following month, it bears interest at the rate of one half of one per cent a month until paid. In addition, a penalty of 10 per cent of the tax is added for delinquency. If the tax is not paid by the end of the month after becoming delinquent, it is the duty of the attorney general to file suit to collect.

Sees March Ending Objectionable Ads

All objectionable advertising copy of major producers and distributors and affiliated theatres is expected to be out of circulation by the end of March, according to J. J. McCarthy, head of the advertising advisory department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Mr. McCarthy stated this week that a complete "whitewashing" of major company advertising material could not be expected before that time, due to the fact that pictures released prior to December 1, when his department began to function, would be getting general playing time up to that point, being sold and exploited with advertising material prepared for them prior to that date.

Theatre Sues Companies

Legal departments of Fox, Warner and United Artists said late last week they had not been served with papers in the $250,000 anti-trust suit brought against them by the Nithold Brothers Corporation, owner of the Palace, Morristown, N. J. Roth Amusement Company, Morristown, also is named as a defendant.

FWC Settlement Is Set for Feb. 15

Reorganization of Fox West Coast Theatres is expected to be completed by February 15, after more than six months of delay. One of the chief contributors to the tardiness of the West Coast reorganization has been the working out of a satisfactory settlement of claims, involving almost $500,000, held by M. B. Shanberg and Herbert M. Woolf against Fox Midland Theatre Co. The inability of New York attorneys for Fox West Coast, Chase National Bank and other major creditors to agree on the terms of the Midland deal has been reported from time to time as the chief cause of delay in the West Coast settlement.

The stay in the Fox Midland proceedings obtained by Mr. Shanberg and Mr. Woolf, and other actions they have pending in federal court in Kansas City have had the effect also of delaying proceedings in the Fox Rocky Mountain Theatre Co. case.

Because a settlement has been expected, motions by Shanberg and Woolf in federal court to discharge the Fox Midland receiver and return the properties to their control have been repeatedly continued for hearing and will be dismissed when signatures are affixed to the agreement. These actions seek to eliminate the partners as creditors and reinstate them as holders of prior liens on the properties involved, by which they claim they are entitled to $486,927, with interest, as the balance of the original price of $3,476,866 on the theatres sold to Fox West Coast in 1929.

The forthcoming quarterly report of Fox Films, minus Wesco, is expected to show a profit of over $1,000,000.

Public's Reaction Called Uncertain

The reaction of the public to motion pictures is more uncertain at the present time than ever prior to the depression, Carl Laemmle, Universal president, declared in Hollywood last week. Audiences are more discriminating today, he said.

With censorship, local politics and community prejudice as factors of importance, the success of pictures is difficult to determine in general, he indicated. Films of today are better than they have been at any time during the past 25 years, declared the executive, who predicted novelty films would be popular this year, and "honest realism and frankness will mark new pictures."

"There will never be a place for vulgarity," Mr. Laemmle said. "No censorship can possibly be as severe as that practiced in the studios today. We have more 'don'ts' in our code of ethics than any three other industries."

Mr. Laemmle and Carl Laemmle, Jr., arrived in New York this week for several weeks of discussion on 1934-35 product. Universal will produce at least 14 features abroad. With European representatives in New York, young Laemmle canceled his proposed trip abroad. "Sutter'sGold,"planned as a major attraction, will head the new schedule.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Carolina

(Fox-Sheehan)

Romance

A fine and clean story, drama-tinged romance motivating, is paralleled with valued acting, direction and presentation, and Janet Gaynor and Lionel Barrymore head an exceptional cast. "Carolina" looks to be all-audience entertainment. Departing noticeably from current trends, an atmosphere of charming and simple sincerity predominating, the show calls upon many emotions. It is dramatic without being theatric; it develops an inspiring love theme, and through sentimental and mind-clouded Barrymore it introduces a unique story-telling technique.

Actually the picture is a sympathetic study in character contrasts, wherein the traditional pride of the Old South conflicts with the aggressive ambition and determination of the Yankee North. Personalities interpret the theme. The aristocratic elder Connellys, Misses Connelly and Bob, interpret the first relation; Joanna, winsome, courageous and sympathy-stimulating, the second. Buffeted between the two, loyal to one and in love with the other, is Will, scion of the old order.

Localed in Carolina, timed in the early years of the 20th century, the production is rife with faded dreams of the glorious "Lost Cause," vibrant with the thrill of a new agricultural and industrial empire. Against this background revolve the historical drama and romance, love interest, comedy, made uproarious by the character of Scipio (Stepin Fetchit), tragedy of disillusionment, music and specialty and color. At once a prestige builder and a class and mass feature, the show is full of that quality, properly done, that Hollywood has so often promised but failed to deliver.

The story in every phase reaches right in to the heart, and audience sympathy is always directed into the proper channels. The love story that unites the easygoing Southern boy, Will, with Joanna is heart-touching. So is the determination of Joanna to carry on her late father's plan of planting a new crop, tobacco. Equally arresting is the proud determination of Mrs. Connelly to preserve old traditions.

Audiences should thrill to old Bob, eternally living in the days of Fort Sumter and the triumph of Manassas; seeing Joanna as she is, but visioning her as the girl he loved and lost so long ago. As negro choral chantings feature and the Joanna-Will love is born, a surging martial note is struck as time turns back, the Southern heroes appear again and Bob once more dances with the girl of his dream. There is menace to the Joanna-Will romance, too. Mrs. Connelly is determined that it shall not be and the wealthy Virginia is introduced to lure Will's affections that their marriage might restore the threadbare Connelly fortunes. Conflict arises as the frightened, fighting Joanna denounces the woman who stands between her and her love dream and ambitions, a conflict intensified when Will subjugates family loyalty to love, and made inspiring as Bob, again the old soldier, reconciles the spirit of the Old South and the New North ere he parades in martial style to self-destruction.

There is beauty in the climax. After love has ascended over spite, fear and bitterness, Mrs. Connelly reiterates the whole tale to the children of Joanna and Will.

As this show is unusual, it should be sold in unusual style. In name, story and production values, it has everything any one should desire. It's family entertainment, for the youngest youngsters, the moderns and the oldest adults. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Lost Patrol

(RKO Radio)

Drama and Romance

This is a great showmanship picture, one that will test the mettle of every exhibitor who plays it. It's great, first because it dares transgress the most sacred production tenet, telling a romantic and dramatic story without a woman in the cast. It's daring because it confines its action to one locale, a tiny oasis in the sun-scorched Mesopotamian Desert, where the all-man cast lives and dies a heroic saga that every women should love, one to move the heart and mind of every man.

It is hardly to be questioned that "The Lost Patrol" will be one of the year's most discussed pictures, not alone for the subject and treatment, but for the interest-creating and sustaining color, punch and thrill. The reaction of the preview audience visibly indicated that the picture made a deep impress upon women, but don't make the mistake of taking for granted that because the show will be roundly talked about, it will be easy to sell.

In the heart of the desert, the commanding officer succumbs to an unseen Arab sniper's bullet and a British cavalry patrol is lost. As invisible menace threatens, Sanders reads the burial service and the Sergeant takes command. Hours of aimless wandering build a suspense of fear, uncertainty and thrill before an oasis is found. There ensues the gripping drama, emotion stirring romance of men who live to die. In an atmosphere electric with mystery, the never seen Arab foe picks them off one by one, Young Mackay, talking only of his mother, a boy living with his fabled Kipling heroes, is first to go. Sanders, a religious fanatic, begins to crack under the terrific strain of hearing men mock his God. Primal instincts rise. Two would fight to death. There's thrill contracted with poetic beauty as Brown describes his earthly likes. Hale talks of his wife and little "nipper." Morelli recalls his music hall career and his partner, the girl he loved. Bullets take more toll. Two old troopers set out to summon help; they are returned dead, victims of Arab atrocity. Hope of the few survivors blooms and dies as a plane appears, only to have the aviator sniped as he steps from the cockpit. The flaming beacon of a machine gun fired by the Sergeant attracts attention of a distant detachment. The Sargeant, Sanders and Morelli are left. Crude cross in hand, fanatic Sanders martyrs himself to his heavenly ideal. Morelli is riddled as he tries to save the man whose mouthings have driven him to madness. Only the Sergeant lives to mow down a group of marauding Arabs and greet the relief.

That's the story, bare of the sock that is in dialogue and action. "The Lost Patrol" is not stock merchandise. It's a courageous picture; one that courageous, resourceful showmen should welcome. Real showmen will get the spirit of its bigness and daring, the humanity of its drama, the heart-interest of its romance, the thrill of its great adventure. Broadcast, in advance, the unusual appeal of this picture to both men and women. Tell them it's a story of men who dared to laugh and joke; to talk of women, wives, the girls they loved; the life they knew and hoped for as death stood just ahead.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Radio. Executive producer, Merian C. Cooper. Associate producer, Cliff Reid. Directed by John Ford. Screen play by Dudley Nichols. Adaptation by Garrott Fort. Hi, Nellie

(Warner Bros.)

Mystery Romance

In this newspaper picture, all the hokum virility, staccato action and dialogue, semi-mystery, contrasting romance and menace commonly associated with such type entertainment is paraded again. New faces, locales and novelty of set-up appear; yet "Hi, Nellie" is essentially a one-man character drama. Motivated by a meaty he-man atmosphere, the character of screen fare that usually gets a rise out of the male contingent, woman appeal is thin inasmuch as the romantic love-interest angle is subordinate to the other punchy elements. Seconding the primary newspaper theme is the dramatic exposure of a different gangster racket into which the thread and finish of the basic plot is woven.

Definite interest in the show begins immediately. Brad, dynamic managing editor, is demoted for laying off a bank looting yarn that other newspapers played up sensationally. Salt is rubbed in the wounded pride as the publisher, Graham, assigns him to write the "Lovelorn" column. Anathema to his sturdy soul as this job carries the dainty "Hi, Nellie" sobriquet, sharpened by the keen kidding of Gerry, its former conductor and attractive, Brad dogs it for a while. With his erstwhile ace reporter, Shammy, under personal instructions to stick on the Canfield disappearance case, constant derisive prodding arouses the newspaperman instinct in Brad and he fills the Lovelorn column with a human interest sock that makes it a miraculous circulation builder. As Shammy uncovers a lead, Brad, out on a broken-heart repairing mission, stumbles across the story behind the Canfield story.

The yarn moves into a graveyard where Brad, by means of photographs, proves that Canfield was killed by gangster bank looters and that he didn't flee with the people's money. His original theory on the story proven correct, Brad is restored to his managing editorship post and Dawes, his personal villain, is awarded the "Hi, Nellie" job after Gerry, suffering unbearable mental agony, thinks that Brad will sentence her to the post.

There's plenty of exciting action in the show and the comedy is on the same plane. Naturally the personnel and sequence drama builds suspense which should prevent all but the most analytical to anticipate the finale. Authenticity of backgrounds and logical plausibility of story make for realism. Fit this combination of production values and the cast names with that of Muni in advance publicity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Looking for Trouble

(UA-20th Century)

Comedy-Drama

Here's mass stuff. Comedy, romance, drama, thrill, realism and hokum; a novel background for the melodrama that smacks of the grand old ten, twenty and thirty cent variety, topical gags, action and speedy dialogue. Yet the accent is always on the comedy.

It's popular entertainment, sufficiently worthy of appreciation on its production and cast merits, but, offered as it is as a tribute to the spur and safety-belted telephone company "trouble shooters," it has the added advantage of cooperative contact exploitation possibilities.

The show covers a lot of ground, still the basic theme is always present. All the wise-cracking and comedy asides to focus interest on the central plot.

Joe, ace trouble shooter in a metropolitan phone exchange, finds himself teamed with Casey, perpetual ribber, who used to be the big shot of the Asuza office. Romance is quickly introduced, but jealous Joe can't keep from quarreling with temperamental Ethel even though Casey and Maizie set a swell example as to the most approved methods of billing and cooing. On a trouble shooting expedition, Joe unearths a wire tapping stunt that convinces him that Dan, the man for whom Ethel is now working and whom she is using to arouse Joe, is a snake in the grass villain. As Joe and Casey endeavor to unearth the skullduggery, which is Dan's plan to swipe a paltry $2,000,000 worth of negotiable bonds, they are captured by the yeggs. Trussed up, Joe manages to get the fire department on the job by knifing the fire alarm wire in time to save the loot, as Casey is seriously burned.

But the excitement is only beginning. Dan is found dead in his apartment. Ethel is suspected and it looks bad for her until Joe remembers Pearl, Dan's gay girl pal. In some manner he learns that she's hiding out in Long Beach, and after calling several thousand numbers, he finally gets her. Just as he's about to pound the truth out of Pearl, what should happen but an earthquake. Pearl scoots and so does Joe, but a wall falls on her before he catches up. More thrill as he and Casey dig her out of the debris, and Joe, in a maze of hot wires, gets his workset attached to a clear line over which Pearl speaks her confession to the cops before she departs this world.

This picture is like a satisfying sandwich; a good opening and closing with plenty of entertaining meat in between. It looks to have the varied patron-interesting qualities to arouse attention at the beginning, hold it all the way and wind up with a kick-off. It has the material for all adults, and for the youngsters. Full advantage should be taken of the natural telephone company contact.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Women in His Life

(MGM)

Drama

The rapid-moving story of a highly successful criminal lawyer, whose somewhat colorful past contains a bitter pill of memory, eventually swallowed for a permanent cure, helps make this film strong drama, containing considerable which is entertainment for audiences of almost any type. The over-melodramatic enters in one of those saved - at - the - last-moment-from-the-chair sequences, but for audiences which like their hairbreadth escape conclusions, that should be satisfying.

It is of definite importance that the exhibitors concentrate efforts to overcome the wariness the menfolk might have because of the title. Impress the fact that, though the feminine element is a strong motivating factor in the proceedings, it is actually the lawyer's own personal battle with himself and a past he could not forget.

A strong build-up of the elements of the narrative in the selling is particularly advisable, since the cast contains little of outstanding attention-attracting personality. The lead is taken by Otto Kruger, and that excellent former stage player turns in a fine performance. He is worth considerable attention from the exhibitor for future appearances, though at the moment it is probable his name will excite little attention of itself. For the rest, there are Una Merkel, in what is virtually a minor role, Ben Lyon, Roscoe Karns, Isabel Jewell, and C. Henry Gordon.

Kruger, busy, thirsty, immensely successful criminal attorney, is urged by Lyon, his junior partner, to take a case for Irene Hervey, whose father is unjustly accused of murdering her step-mother. Kruger, too much engrossed with Miss Jewell, his latest, ignores the request, even after having promised when the girl unwittingly did him a favor. At all times there remains with him the memory of the wife who deserted him ten years before. Suddenly, after agreeing to undertake the case, he sees a picture of the murdered woman, and discovers her to be his former wife. He collapses, and goes bareheaded in a howling rainstorm to her grave, developing pneumonia and barely pulling through. The father meanwhile has been found guilty and sentenced to death. An appeal is taken, but the original verdict is sustained. Driven by what he considers a debt which must be paid, Kruger enlists the support of the capable Miss Jewell, and together they trap Gordon, gangster leader, who knew the murdered woman, into a confession. The last moment telephone call to the governor saves the condemned man just as the attendant is throwing the fatal switch. Kruger and Miss Jewell, Lyon and Miss Hervey, Karns and Miss Merkel, Kruger's leg-man and secretary, respectively, all plan almost simultanous marriages.

Making full use of the narrative, and the melodramatic conclusion, where it will be of value, the exhibitor will have to sell the story principally, making clear that the film is not exclusively a woman's picture. Miss Merkel's role hardly warrants too emphatic billing, though her name is perhaps the most popular.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Associate producer, Lucien Hubbard. Directed by George B. Seitz. Original screen story by F. Hugh Herbert. Art director, Eddie Imazu. Interior decoration by Edwin B. Willis. Photographed by Ray June. Film editor, Conrad A. Nervig. Release date, December 8, 1933. Running time, 76 minutes.

Four Frightened People

(Paramount-DeMille)

Drama

What obviously was meant to be something of a psychological study of the reactions of four eminently civilized, and diverse, characters when confronted with the terrors and the inconveniences of an enforced trek through the jungle on a South Seas island, has somehow missed that objective, yet remains reasonably effective entertainment.

A Cecil DeMille production for Paramount, the film is from a novel by E. Arnot-Robertson, a fact which is worth noting, but in all probability will mean comparatively little to the exhibitor's patronage. The title is somewhat unwieldy, but may be used to good advantage when coupled with the names of Claudette Colbert, Herbert Marshall, Mary Boland and William Gargan, all of which should look well on the marquee. The only other name of any value is that of Leo Carrillo, a native who wears a civilized tie and fancies himself a white man, to his eventual undoing.

The technical values, as might be supposed, are excellent, the settings actually having been filmed in Hawaiian jungles. Pictorially, the production is highly effective. Hence it might be well, on the whole, to ignore the intended psychology, and let the picture stand by itself, without implication, relying on cast and situation to carry it over with the patronage.

Our four frightened people are Miss Colbert, very old-maidish, be-spectacled school teacher; Marshall, serious-minded, unworldly chemist; Miss Boland, ex-wife of a British Government officer, whose garrulously wagging tongue never ceases talking nonsense; Gargan, loud-bragging correspondent, whose self-assurance is for the most part vocal.

These four, escaping from a tramp steamer when bubonic plague breaks out, make their way to shore, engage the services of "white man" Carrillo to guide them through the jungle to the nearest port. As they struggle along, Miss Boland provides much byplay, via dialogue, Gargan assumes a noisy authority, which annoys Marshall, and the long suppressed inhibitions of Miss Colbert and Marshall receive a devasting wallop. The party is lost, attacked by hostile natives, and Carrillo, declaring they never will harm a white man, finds it true, but also discovers they do not believe him. He dies, Miss Boland is taken as security for promised salt, and the remaining three do the Robinson Crusoe. Miss Colbert, blossoming into a real woman, excites the respect and desires of the two men. She loves Marshall, ignores Gargan. Eventually they reach freedom. Gargan is heard broadcasting his adventures, Marshall divorces his wife and mother-in-law, and takes Miss Colbert from behind her teacher's desk to end the film.

There are unquestioned entertainment values in the picture, and these should be sold for all they are worth. The locale permits of a lobby dressing which should win attention, and the comedy and dramatic situations implied in the story should not be overlooked, tied in with the leading player names. There is selling opportunity here.—AARONSON, New York.

Directed and produced by Cecil B. DeMille. Distributed by Paramount. Photographed by Karl Struss. Screen play by Bartlett Cormack and Lenore Coffee. From the novel by E. Arnot-Robertson. Art direction by Roland Anderson. Release date, January 26, 1934. Running time, 95 minutes.

The Death Parade

(A. L. Rule)

War Pictorial

Colonel Albert L. Rule, whose film "The Big Driye" proved a sensation as a pictorial record of the World War, based on official and authentic pictures made by various government photographers, provides the exhibitor with similar material in "The Death Parade," which was given its world premiere at the Great States Palace theatre, Danville, Ill. In "The Death Parade" Col. Rule emphasizes another aspect of the war—the sinking of ships on the high seas. Great ships are shown in striking close-ups headed for Davy Jones' locker as survivors fight for life, frequently unsuccessfully.

Pictorially "The Death Parade" is all that its name signifies, the unfolding of great sea and land battles being revealed in explanatory dialogue by Col. Rule, who achieves dramatic tenseness in his telling by a straightforward narrative.

America's part in the war seems to have been allotted less than its share of the 77 minutes, but this may be an illusion due to the heavy action in which the doughboys are pictured. Otherwise "The Death Parade" is a noteworthy companion picture to "The Big Drive" and should be timely now that stories of strained relations in the Far East and of building up to naval treaty strength are again on the front pages.—HOLQUIST, Chicago.

The Mystery Squadron

(Mascot)

Action Serial

If the remaining episodes of this new 12-chapter serial from Mascot maintain the standard of the initial three, seen last week, there should be plenty of thrill, action and general excitement for the youngsters and even a bit of lively, if highly fictitious entertainment for the adults. Bob Steele, "Big Boy" Williams, Jack Mulhall are the good masculine names heading the cast and Lucile Browne handles the romantic angle in fairly attractive fashion. The three chapters, "The Black Ace," "The Fatal Warning" and "The Black Ace Strikes," detail the preliminary excitement in which a mysterious squadron of airmen are bent upon destroying or preventing the completion of a power project. Mulhall is the superintendent, Steele and Williams two stunt fliers employed to combat the squadron and uncover the identity of the Black Ace, leader of the marauding band. There is an exciting display of air stunting, dog fights in the air and spectacular crashes. The serial has promise, particularly for the youngsters. Each episode runs approximately 20 minutes.

What's To Do

Amusing

In the "Frolics of Youth" series, a group of high school pupils have their complications in and out of school. It is amusing material, and contains a few laughs, as one youngster defeats the wealthy snob for the presidency of the student organization, then the defeated candidate arranges that the victor's father be given a job in another city. The youngster's day is eventually saved with the aid of his pals, and it is all rather good fun.—Running time, 17 minutes.

The Seventh Wonder

(Monogram)

Interesting

One of the Monogram Port o' Call series from William Pizor in which Deane H. Dickason renders the accompanying description in interesting fashion. The camera is trained upon the streets and countryside of Panama, then concentrates for the most part on the magnificent engineering feat which is the Panama Canal. It is an interesting pictorial and verbal description of the great waterway of which every one knows but which comparatively few have seen.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Mickey Shanghaied

(United Artists)

Good Cartoon

Mickey, our animated hero rodent, and Minnie, his sweetheart, are shanghaied in this entertaining and clever new cartoon. When the peg-legged piratical captain goes after Minnie, Mickey works himself free and after amusing cartoon antics, vanquishes their captor. A good Mickey Mouse subject.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Keeps Rainin' All the Time

(Paramount)

Entertaining

With Gertrude Niesen of the radio as the featured vocalist, this screen song number renders the title song of current popularity. The subject is entertaining, with the animated cartoon pleasing and the bouncing ball hopping about in its accustomed energetic style.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Buddy's Day Out

(Vitaphone)

Fair

The animated youngster, Buddy, takes his girl on a picnic on his day off, and is also forced to take her little brother. As expected, the brother does his best to wreck the party and succeeds quite well, caught in a runaway automobile and enjoying himself immensely. The animation has been bettered in numerous cartoon subjects and the subject matter is not in any way unusual.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Boswell Sisters

Entertaining

There is popular entertainment in this number of the Radio Star series produced by Monte Brice for Universal release. Selling possibilities rest in the personalities of the radio trio, definitely air favorites. Nick Kenny, radio columnist, who is a far better writer than screen personality, is supposedly interviewing the stars. Asked for their greatest thrill, the picture recounts the story of Connie's encounter with a circus lion, revealed at the conclusion as pure fiction. The sisters, of course, render several numbers effectively.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Song Hits

Roy Turk's Compositions

This one-reel Pepper Pot musical consists primarily of a re-singing and playing of Roy Turk's music numbers, but it lacks spontaneity. One brightening touch is a dance team's fast stepping to one of his compositions, and a bit of surprise turn appears for relief at the close when the girl reporter reveals that she is really a deputy serving a summons on the song writer.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Pie for Two

Two Interesting Reels

Jimmy Gleason and his pal, in the business of making a living with the least legitimate work, are attracted to a sprightly home by apple pie. The young widowed mother is having a real job keeping the two youngsters from the "over the hill" busybodies. Both the visitors fall in love with their hostess, and Jimmy learns he's been pleading his pal's case. He leaves them a roll of bills out of the sock and returns to the open road. Not much comedy after the opening sequence, but every minute interesting.—Running time, 21 minutes.

The Freeze Out

Fair

There is a fair measure of amusement in this Moran and Mack comedy, in which the "Two Black Crows" operate a saloon somewhere in the North, dressed appropriately. When a fight starts one of them is knocked out and dreams of a meeting with the devil, which is amusing. Bulldozed into a poker game when one of them returns from a prospecting expedition with real gold, they play it in their own peculiar style. Those who like the comedy blackface team should find the short enjoyable; others will find a laugh or two.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Borah Minnevitch and His Harmonica Rascals

(Vitaphone)

Good

The highly entertaining Borah Minnevitch and his nondescript collection of "harmonica rascals" are fully as enjoyable on the screen as on the stage, and they are well known. Billing the subject should bring results at the box office. In the setting a summer camp, with tents, breakfast over the fire and a practice session on the harmonicas, the gang "does its stuff" in good style. A worthwhile selling number.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Air Maniacs

Fair

The title of this subject is close to the mark with reference to the subject itself. With Vince Barnett at the air field making a nuisance of himself attempting to be the amateur photographer, and John T. Murray directing operations, Frank "Spooks" Clark and Roy "Baldy" Wilson, stunt pilots, go through all their tricks in the air. Barnett accidentally finds himself hooked to the tail of a plane when it goes up, the pilot bails out and Barnett is left in the lurch, so to speak. He crashes, of course, after crazy air antics. With the exception of the air thrill it holds, the short holds little real comedy.—Running time, 16 minutes.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

A couple of weeks ago Ernest Rovelstad of the Herald said that we wanted you exhibitors to help us edit this colyum by writing us direct to Neligh, Nebraska. Quite a number of you have done this but there are a whole lot of you who are so doggone indifferent you haven't done it, and whose fault is it? Indifference is one of the things that has brought on this depression.

This morning the mercury stood at zero. The sun is bright and the weather clear, and if we had a little snow it would be a good rabbit day, but since we haven't any snow, and since our physical condition prohibits us from going outside of the house, it looks like beans and sowbelly for us.

When we try to type this we have to guess at a lot of it. The letter "G" is apt to look like the letter "S," and if some of the words are spelled wrong it will be up to the typesetter to correct them. And speaking of typesetters, did you know that he is one of the most important individuals there is in the newspaper profession? If it wasn't for him where would our orthography and syntax be? Jevver think of that? Someday we hope the government will erect a monument to his memory, and if we ever go back to New York we are going to buy him a glass of buttermilk, and we don't care what it costs either.

As to Greenbacks—

And then there's another thing, as Andy Gump told Min, Arthur Brisbane says that instead of issuing yellow-back interest-bearing bonds, the government should issue non-interest bearing greenbacks to get money to carry on their various activities. We agree with Arthur, but then it won't make any difference to Art whether we do or not. If the government's security is good behind bonds, why isn't it good behind greenbacks?

We are in receipt of a letter from our old friend, G. Larkum Scott, Professor of Music at Spokane, Washington. G. Larkum teaches the young hopefuls, and the larger folks of Spokane, how to toot the horn and finger the ivory. At one time he directed one of the largest bands in the world, a collection of bands numbering in all 200 at a Shrine convention at Los Angeles. G. Larkum used to park his dogs under our table and stow away liver smothered in onions in such quantities that it made him skinny to carry it around. He dwindled down to 210 without his socks on. We'd like to write him direct, but Abner, we just can't do it right now.

Mr. and Mrs. George Moore, theatrical folks of Plainwell, Kansas, wrote us and said, "What's the matter with your colyum last week? Hurry up and get well and don't omit your colyum again, and hurry back here and have some more quail." We were snowed in there some time ago and had to stay there for three days before we could get out, and they fed us on quail. Could anything be nicer? They are the kind of Jayhawkers who make Kansas one of the best states in the Union, outside of Nebraska.

The Rosebud country in South Dakota has been the grasshopper region for two years. Mr. and Mrs. C. Gehlsen of Burke write to know if we are afraid the hoppers will bite us is the reason why we don't come up there to see them. No, folks, we are not afraid of the hoppers, it's just because this is a big country and it takes a lot of time to get over it, but we'll be in to see you. Good luck to both of you, and give our regards to Ira Hewitt.

An Open Letter to James Cagney

Dear Jimmy: We have seen you in a number of pictures and we are giving it as our unbiased opinion that you are par excellent, so to speak, and our judgment is that there are but few out there in that flooded district and earthquake zone who can hold a candle to you.

Please give our regards to our good friends Marie Dressler and Louise Fazenda, and tell all the girls we are still thinking about them.

For the past three or four months business seems to be on the upgrade. Several exhibitors have written us that their business has shown a marked improvement. Walt Bradley, who operates the Moon theatre here, is now taking home pork chops instead of soup bones. If the boys can hold on until grass comes they ought to be all right.

Well, Ernie, it will be up to you now to fill out this colyum. This is as far as we are able to go now. We've got to go and drink a glass of buttermilk, etc., etc.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 209.—(A) Approximately what is the range of angles of incidence of light rays upon the projection lens rear surface? (B) Does the reflection loss due to the range of angles above referred to, amount to much as compared with incidence that is perpendicular to the lens surface? (C) Is the loss of light between the surfaces cemented together in the front end of the projection lens, equal to the loss of uncemented surfaces. (D) What is the ratio of loss through absorption in various grades of glass? (E) What is the total loss in a flint glass lens of 1.61 refractive index?

Bluebook School Question No. 203 was: (A) By what means are lenses corrected for chromatic and spherical aberration? (B) Just why does a lens pin-point of surface offer an entirely different viewpoint from every other pin-point on the same lens? (C) Assuming a glass to have perfectly even density, will or will not a ray of light travel in a perfectly straight line from surface to surface, once it has entered the lens? (D) Why is it imperatively necessary to perfection of action that lens surfaces be optically perfect and perfect in curvature?

The following made good: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; T. Van Vaulkenburg; P. Gaeth, Jr.; H. H. Monefee; R. De Totto; D. Calladine; D. Emmerson; W. Broadbent; G. Thompson; F. Sims and O. L. Davis; D. L. Sinklow; C. B. and L. N. Traxler; T. Malleby; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; K. Griener; F. G. Klar and T. H. Morton; M. U. Sampson; A. L. Dodson; D. Haber and D. Breaston; H. Grant; R. D. Oberleigh and J. Lansing; P. Felt; S. N. Tailer; G. Harrison and F. Harlor; M. F. Fallon; U. L. Danielson; M. Henderson and D. Singleton; K. Ormie; B. L. Banning and L. Jones; F. and J. L. Hanson; N. L. Tomlinson and G. Lathrope; S. M. Trandle; L. B. and D. H. Palmer; D. Danielson and H. Pilson; J. J. Richmond; L. G. Gregeson; D. T. Arlen and M. Spencer; F. B. Tonlinson; M. R. Davidson and R. Schuler; G. R. Squires and B. J. Lyons; L. Daniels; D. D. Davis and L. Thomas; Nic Granby; J. Hendershot; F. L. Granby; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; F. H. and P. Dalbey; D. Howard and D. Kurts; K. Y. Spencer; R. and K. Wells; H. D. Tyler; T. T. Golley; L. M. Ricards; A. Wythe and T. Granger; B. Olmyby and C. L. Cyrus; L. Grant and R. Geddings; F. L. Sanderson; A. M. Krumm and C. H. Hutchinson; H. R. Baldwin; D. L. Lode; F. F. Franks; L. D. Rubin; L. D. Bryant and D. L. Monehan; L. Jansen and B. R. Sanders; K. L. Knight; D. and H. B. Coates; O. Allbright and J. Lansing; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; L. A. Goldman; F. P. Dillon; T. Haugan and J. Turner; F. Davis; R. E. Holmes.

We will let G. E. Doe answer Section A. He says, "For the most part corrections for both aberrations are made by combining flint and crown glass and different lens curvatures, though spherical aberration may be corrected by lens curvatures alone."

(B) G. E. Doe says, "Since lens surfaces, save alone in the case of lenses having one flat surface, present curved surfaces at every point, it follows that each pin-point will present a different angle to all other pin-points on the lens, even those next adjoining, therefore each pin-point of such curved surface will act upon light rays differently from all other pin-points on the same lens.

(C) Evans and Rau say, "Assuming glass to have perfectly even density, once a ray of light has entered, it will travel in a perfectly straight line from surface to surface."

(D) J. Wentworth answers thus: "It has been shown in previous answers to questions that, except for possible variations in glass density, refraction is due wholly to the angle at which light meets a lens surface, and that refraction takes place only at such surface. Should these surfaces be either optically imperfect or not of true curvature, then the light rays would not be refracted as was intended. There would probably be some change in reflection losses, and in a sense, if the condition be a bad one, limited diffusion would be set up.

GOES ABOUT IT THE RIGHT WAY

From a new Bluebook School student, Bernard S. Englander of Philadelphia, Pa., comes this most interesting communication:

"Dear Pop: I am newly enrolled as a member of the Bluebook School, but one who will hereafter answer every question, for the reasons that I want to see exactly what I do know, and to investigate and study that which I do not know. And the best way to commit it to memory is, I find, by writing it down, which operation the answering of your questions necessitates if answers are to be sent in.

"In answering Sections B and C of Question 206, all my data was taken from pages 142 to 144 of the Bluebook, and my answer, based upon them, seems to have been incorrect. Take Figure 36 for example; The incident light is, of course, 100 per cent. The losses are four per cent by reflection at first surface; five per cent by absorption; and four per cent loss at the second surface. The losses then would be four plus five plus four per cent, but let us consider for the moment only the two reflection (surface) losses. Would there first be a loss of five per cent of the total light; and then four per cent of the remaining light? Or would it be eight per cent of the total incident light? If the latter, then reflection losses would be four per cent of the initial 100 per cent, and four per cent of the remaining 96 per cent. In other words if a polished surface reflects four per cent of the original light, refractive index being 1.51, then at the second surface the loss, disregarding loss by absorption, would be only 3.8 per cent of the total incident light. Am I correct?"

With absorption loss disregarded, you are quiet correct, Friend Englander. With absorption loss included, the losses at the second surface would be four per cent of what remained after four per cent of the original 100 per cent if incident light had been subtracted, and then five per cent of what remained. In other words, there would be three successive subtractions; namely, four, five and four per cent.

The real purpose of the Bluebook School is to induce projectionists and those aspiring to become such, to study. In my estimation it would be unwise to risk discouraging men by omitting their names from the published list unless there be very good reasons for so doing. If a man who has regularly "made the grade" fails badly on some question, I omit his name that week and usually write him personally, pointing out the failure and suggesting that he make greater effort to avoid errors in future.

Together for the First Time!

What makes a BIG Picture

NOVELTY — Theme and treatment must be fresh and unusual.

TIMELINESS — People are more interested in today than yesterday or tomorrow.

SEX — The love of man and woman is the most interesting thing in life.

ACTION — Must never stop from opening title to final fadeout.

DRAMA — The dramatic clash of the characters must be strong.

COMEDY — A laugh now and then spices and accentuates a story.

CHARACTERIZATION — Characters must inspire real love, hate or amusement.

PICTORIAL VARIETY — A motion picture's greatest charm is mobility of scene.

MUSIC — That has a logical place in story development.

BIGNESS — Mass scenes with hundreds of people in passionate action.

EXPLOITABILITY — Scenes, characters and situations that lend themselves to graphic, attention-compelling descriptions in words and pictures.

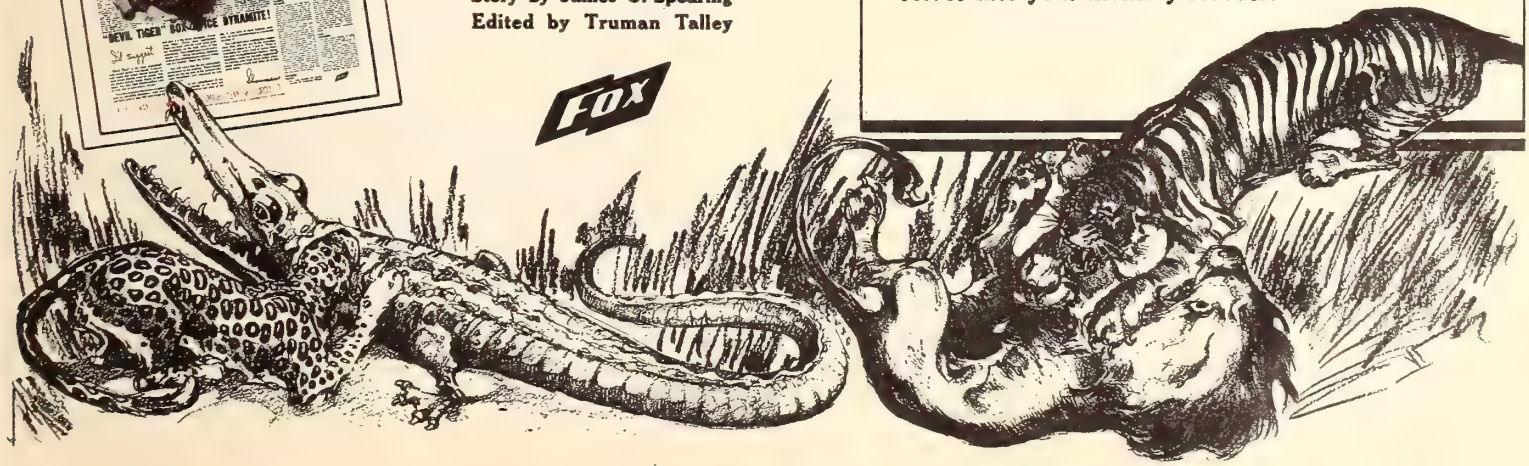
FOX

THEY'LL NEVER FORGET THESE THRILLS:

SEE The lion . . . king of beasts . . . battle the tiger . . . monarch of the jungle . . . roaring, snarling, ferocious . . . vicious teeth rending living flesh in an unforgettable struggle for supremacy.



SEE Hundreds of mammoth Indian elephants in fear-crazed stampede . . . crashing giant trees . . . trampling human life . . . crushing everything before them.

SEE The crocodile and the tiger in a frenzied fight for life . . . lashing, whirling, churning the jungle waters into a deadly scarlet foam.

SEE The hero-explorer trapped in the relentless, life-smothering coils of a 40-foot python . . . and his miraculous escape.

SEE The "Devil Tiger" himself . . . eyes like balls of fire . . . fangs as sharp as ice-picks . . . powerful, crafty, terror-inspiring . . . his black heart haunted by the Evil One himself . . . mad with the thirst for human blood.

SEE These and a score of other sensational thrills . . . each more amazing than the last . . . actual sounds and scenes that will burn themselves into your memory forever.

Reprisal Levies Aimed at France

Moving to revise the tax laws further, the ways and means committee of the House at Washington last week adopted provisions intended to obtain more revenue from American commercial operations in foreign countries, with a special vote to levy reprisal taxes against the subsidiaries in the United States of the concerns of those countries that discriminated against American branches in taxation. The committee made it abundantly clear that the reprisal tax is to be aimed specifically at France.

American companies and individuals in France, especially film concerns, have been the target for a variety of taxes and import quotas the past two years, and while indications are that films will be benefited only incidentally, if at all, for the time being, the ultimate effect probably will mean the lifting of the discriminatory import quotas to an appreciable degree, film circles believed.

Earlier in the week the ways and means committee approved a revision of the income tax rates designed to bring in an additional $36,000,000 annually in revenues.

Thus, motion picture executives and workers would be taxed at the rate of 4 per cent on net incomes over $4,000 and less than $6,000, and graduated up to 59 per cent on taxable incomes of over $1,000,000, which, with the normal 4 per cent rate, brings the total on the incomes in excess of $1,000,000 to 63 per cent.

Columbia Sales Staff Ends Chicago Session

Columbia field and home office executives concluded a two-day conference in Chicago early this week, after a discussion of product expected for the rest of the current season. Joseph H. Seidelman, foreign general sales manager, held a three-day session in London, at which he told the assembled English sales force that business in that country is showing an upward trend. He will visit all Continental exchanges before his return in March.

At the Chicago meeting were: Abe Montague, general sales manager; Jerry Saffron, west coast division manager; Max Roth, mid-west division manager, and Lou Weinberg, Lou Astor, J. W. McFarland and Joe McConville from New York. Also present were the following branch managers: Harry Taylor, Kansas City; Clarence Hill, St. Louis; Joe Levy, Des Moines; Frank Chapman, Omaha; Ben Marcus, Minneapolis; H. C. Chapman, Detroit; C. H. Shalit, Detroit; H. Bissell, Cleveland; A. Moritz, Cincinnati, and Marty Sullivan, Indianapolis.

McAdoo Luncheon Set to Launch Moulin Rouge Tour

Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, of California, will give a luncheon at Washington on Friday for visiting Hollywood screen stars, as the first in a series of affairs which will attend the start of the Moulin Rouge Caravan, the nationwide tour of which will advertise Twentieth Century's film, "Moulin Rouge," which opens in New York next week.

ENGLISH REPORTER CORROBORATES MIX

In a sense corroborating the belief expressed by Tom Mix in a recent interview published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, that the juvenile is a potential audience warranting extra exhibitor effort, one K. H. B., writing in "The Southend Times," English daily newspaper, describes his experience in an accidental attendance at a "kids' matinee" at a local theatre. He found the audience, he recounts, utterly fascinated, and most thoroughly enjoying itself, ready at a moment's notice to hiss the villain to the point of extinction, or roar warnings to and approbation for the sorely beset hero.

Famous Artists Sell U. A. Film

Considerable attention was drawn recently to the novel manner in which United Artists advertised the film "Gallant Lady," in which Ann Harding and Clive Brook are starred. Six famous artists were invited to a preview, and each asked to draw a picture which would indicate the manner in which he believed the film should be sold.

The six were James Montgomery Flagg, Howard Chandler Christy, McClelland Barclay, Diego Rivera, Bradshaw Crandall and Hayden Hayden. The results, which were paid for at the artists' usual rates, were used in advertising the picture, with reference to the artist, and appropriate copy woven about the illustration in each case. Another group of artists is understood to be actively at work already in a similar manner on "Moulin Rouge" produced by Twentieth Century and to be released by United Artists. The work of the artists in the "Gallant Lady" campaign has been adopted by United Artists as the keynote for all advertising on the picture.

Roxy Celebrates First Year Under Cullman Hand

Late last week the Roxy theatre in New York celebrated its first anniversary under the guiding hand of Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver for the house. One year ago the theatre discarded elaborate stage presentations with films in favor of a variety bill, and inaugurated a new low price policy. The theatre reports a consistent increase in receipts and attendance during the past year, the last report of Mr. Cullman showing an operating profit. Mr. Cullman turned over his $100 weekly CWA salary to the compensation department, CWA headquarters announced.

John M. Crinnion, head of Amity Pictures, has announced an arrangement whereby Ben Schwartz, Henry Horowitz and Sol H. Kravitz will distribute the company's product through the New York Amity exchange, at 630 Ninth avenue.

Nine Censors Are Named in Spokane

Perhaps the largest censor board in the country has been named in Spokane, Wash., by Commissioner of Public Safety Colburn. The board of nine serves without pay, and Commissioner Colburn, as official censor, bases his final decisions on their report. The volunteers are Mrs. Edna M. Ahlin, Lucia P. Davenport, Mrs. Helma B. Nelson, Mrs. B. F. Westmore, Mrs. D. E. Crowley, Rev. John F. Blake, Rev. Francis E. Reese, E. W. Jorgenson, Louis Wasmer.

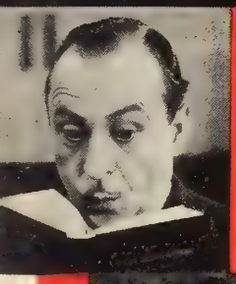
A bill, now in the hands of the House printer, at Boston, provides for the creation of a censor board of five in Massachusetts. "to supervise" the showing of pictures in the state. One woman, one clergyman and three others would comprise the board.

Every deletion ordered by the Virginia board of censors costs approximately $55, exclusive of the expense involved for distributors in shipping, re-shipping, cutting and editing, the board's financial report reveals. The board has averaged one deletion per day during the 11 years of its existence.

Film People, Firms Receive Tax Refunds

Many companies and individuals in or connected with the motion picture business were included in the list of those who benefitted by income and estate tax refunds declared by the bureau of internal revenue.

The list included: Universal Film Manufacturing Corp., $55,547.01 and $36,331.14; Jack G. Leo, $5,868.34; Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., $7,969.94; Wilmer and Vincent Theatre Co., $1,033.65; Balaban and Katz Corp., $3,761.22; Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., $9,897.31; Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., $2,440.25; David M. Loew, $3,135.65; Loew's, Inc., $3,470.31; Rosindale Rialto Theatres, Inc., $1,119.80; Richard A. Rowland, $8,962.76; United Artists, $1,940.08; United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 152 West 42d St., $3,985.02; United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 729 7th Ave., $1,213.04; Universal Pictures Corp., $5,416.02; Walter Wanger, $1,283.23; Warners-First National $2,006.20.



Burkey Anti-Trust Suit Withdrawn in Kansas City

The anti-trust suit of Walter O. Burkey, former Kansas City exhibitor, against 14 distributors and the Kansas City Film Board has been withdrawn upon payment of a small penalty and court costs by the defendants. In exchange for the cash settlement, Mr. Burkey has dropped his motion for a new trial, filed after a federal court jury last year found there was no conspiracy.

Burkey sued for $136,000 damages, charged monopoly and conspiracy to force him out of business, and attacked block booking, arbitration and the former standard exhibition contract. The suit was the first of its kind in this territory. Distributor defendants were Famous Players-Lasky, Paramount, First National, Fox, MGM, Warner, Educational, Tiffany, RKO, Pathe, United Artists, Universal, Vitagraph, and one independent, Midwest Film Distributors.

DE-CODING THE FILM CODE

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

1. PREAMBLE — PRODUCTION AND GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

This article on "De-Coding the Code" is the fourth in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S series and begins the translation of the PRODUCTION part of the code from the legal phraseology into a working language. Distribution and exhibition were treated together in the first three articles, which appeared in the issues of December 23rd, January 6th, January 20th.

Production likewise will be treated in three articles, as follows:

1. PREAMBLE—Being a Translation of the General Application of the Code to Production.
   TECHNICAL TERMS Used in the Production Section of the Code.
   ADMINISTRATION of the Production Section, Committees, Boards.
2. LABOR and EMPLOYEE Provisions which are Applicable to Production.
3. TRADE PRACTICES for Production.

Every producer and studio and film laboratory or company, firm or corporation, association or partnership engaged in production or contracted to engage in production is legally bound under the code—starting December 7th, the date of enactment—regardless of whether or not they sign the acceptance blank provided by the Code Authority, on or before midnight of February 28, which is the revised deadline for affixing signatures to the acceptance blank. Qualified assents are not valid; the blanks must be signed without any reservations in order to be valid.

Failure of any producer, studio or film laboratory, or firm, company, corporation, association or partnership in production or contracted to engage in production, to abide by any and all code provisions, again regardless of whether or not it has signed the code assent, is a violation of the code. The fine for each wilful violation is $500. Each day's offense is a separate violation.

Each producer, studio or film laboratory, or firm, company, corporation, association or partnership in production is bound not only under the specific clauses relating to production, but is also legally bound under the general provisions of the code which are applicable to the industry as a whole.

The fact that a producer, studio or film laboratory or other unit engaged in production had signed the President's blanket reemployment code for all industries early last year, does not remove any responsibilities of the employer from abiding by the requirements of the motion picture code. The President's code was merely a temporary agreement in an emergency and is superseded by the motion picture industry's own code now in effect.

Besides certain general provisions in the code which are applicable to the industry as a whole, there are numerous sections pertaining specifically to production alone. Basically, these sections are twofold: (1) Labor provisions governing wage, hour and working conditions for employees in production; and, (2) Trade practice clauses governing relations among producers and between producers and creative talent or workers.

The mediums for administering the code in the production field are the Code Authority and certain standing and special committees to be appointed by the Code Authority. The standing and special committees, for Actors, Agents and Agencies, Directors, Extra Players, Free-Lance Players, Technicians and Writers, are specifically created by the code to govern the relations between these classes and the producers.

Besides effecting general administration of the code, the Code Authority will determine directly those complaints of unfair trade practices which do not come under the specific supervision of the various standing committees mentioned in the paragraph next above. This procedure regarding the handling of certain trade practice complaints by the Code Authority is unlike the procedure provided for trade practice complaints in distribution-exhibition, where Local Grievance Boards in each of the exchange territories act for the Code Authority in such matters.

There is no method or system provided in the production section of the code for the arbitration of disputes between the employing producers or studios and skilled labor and mechanics. The production provisions state specifically that certain definite wage scales and schedules of working hours shall prevail, and if such scales are not paid by the studios or such working hours are not made effective, then the producer or the studio is violating the code, and the Code Authority shall take action to correct the situation, probably through the local Labor Compliance Board of the NRA.

The code does not give the Code Authority, or any of the boards or committees appointed by it, any "police" powers to prosecute violators of the code. The Code Authority itself, or the boards or committees which it appoints, are intended to effect administration of the code and if any provision or clause of the code is violated, and the Code Authority or its boards or committees are unable to end the violation, then the established NRA or other governmental agencies in charge shall have the power to effect compliance by prosecution or otherwise.

Among other things, the NRA could take away the Blue Eagle displayed by the violator, secure an injunction in the courts, have the courts fine the violator, or cite a violation to the Federal Trade Commission. The Department of Justice is available, too, and, besides, the NRA has its own legal staff.

As was pointed out in the first article translating the distribution-exhibition provisions of the code, it should be remembered that public opinion might easily be an exerting influence to keep a theatre or producer or distributor in line with the code. This is especially important in the motion picture business where the opinion of the masses has always been an important factor.

All Production Units in All Cities Are Bound Under Code Provisions

The motion picture code provisions which are applicable to production set up no geographical boundaries insofar as compliance is concerned. Producers, studios and film laboratories or other companies engaged in production in New York, or any other place, are bound under the code equally as much as their colleagues in Hollywood.

As previously stated, every producer, studio and film laboratory, or other company engaged in production must abide by all of the provisions of the code even though it does not sign the official blank of code acceptance, but if any such producer, studio or film laboratory, or other company engaged in production fails to sign the blank of acceptance on or before midnight of February 28, or only signs the blank with reservations (which holds the signature invalid), then such producer, studio and film laboratory, or other production company shall not be entitled to protection against unfair competition. However, any production company which does not sign the agreement to comply with all the requirements of the code and the National Recovery Act, may be made the defendant of any charges of unfair competition brought against it by another production company which has signed the official blank.

New producers, new studios and new film laboratories or other new companies or firms engaging in the motion picture business shall have a period of forty-five days after they start functioning in which to sign the acceptance blank, and if they do not sign within that period, then they shall not be entitled to the protection and benefits of the code, nor shall they be entitled to file any complaints of unfair trade practices.

All in the industry are bound under the code to pay such levy or assessment that may be ordered by the Code Authority for expenses in administering the code.

Any producer, studio or film laboratory, or firm, company, corporation, association or partnership in production which shall fail to pay promptly any such assessment or levy made by the Code Authority for code expenses, shall not be entitled to file any complaint or grievance nor shall it be entitled to any protection against unfair competition.

However, as in cases of failure to sign the acceptance blank, failure to pay any assessment or levy made by the Code Authority does not

This is the first article of the translation of the PRODUCTION sections of the motion picture code from the complex phraseology of the law into a working language of the industry.

Treated in this article—which was preceded by a series of three articles on distribution and exhibition—are the following production subjects of the code:

Preamble—General Application.
Definitions of Terms Used.
Administration in Production.

In the second article of the production series labor provisions will be translated. Trade practices will be the subject of the third, in their relation to the production of motion pictures.

HOW CODE APPLIES TO PRODUCTION

CODE SIGNING IS PUT BACK TO FEB. 28

The Code Authority was granted permission this week by the NRA to extend the deadline for signing code acceptance blanks from midnight of January 31 to midnight of February 28. It was said that no further extension of the date will be made.

Previously, the NRA had extended the deadline date from January 11 to January 31.

Each producer, studio, firm, corporation, association, company and partnership engaged in production or contracted to engage in production must sign the official blank of code acceptance. Signatures affixed with reservations are not acceptable. Each blank must be signed without reservation in order to be valid.

All are bound under the code, regardless of whether or not they sign the acceptance blank.

relieve any producer, studio or film laboratory, or other company in production, from liability to prosecution under the code, or in case the production company loses any decision in any code action, such production company which failed to pay the assessment for code upkeep shall not have the right to appeal the decision to the Code Authority.

The Code Authority shortly will determine the total amount necessary during 1934 to defray the expenses of the administration of the code, and soon after it will determine the manner and means of collection and the amount to be collected from each of the three branches of the industry.

One corporate signature for a producer or a studio will be sufficient for the various units of such producer or studio.

Each individual producer, studio or film laboratory members of any associations or organizations, such as the Academy, the Hays organization, Film Laboratory Association or of either the independent or the major producers association, or of other such organizations, must sign the code acceptance blank individually, even though the association or organization hereinabove described, has signed the document. The signatures of such associations do not bind the members.

Non-Theatrical Production Units Are Not Involved

Although the Administrator (General Hugh Johnson) says in the code, "It is believed that this code as now revised presents a great advance in dealing effectively with the problems of this industry," the code and all of the provisions thereof are expressly made subject to the right of the President, in accordance with the National Recovery Act passed by Congress, to cancel or modify from time to time any order, approval, license, rule, regulation, provision or clause of the code, or any condition of the code or any conditions imposed on the President upon his approval of the code.

Also, the Code Authority is invested with the right to suggest changes in the code, and, after a hearing, such changes may be effected with the approval of the Administrator and the President.

The code basically is intended to promote fair competition in the industry and in each of its three branches, and to eliminate unfair competition, and to provide minimum wage scales and maximum working hours to aid unemployment.

Nothing in the production parts of the code shall be deemed to apply to the production of 9mm or 16mm films, or to slide films, or to non-theatrical films which are designed primarily for educational, scientific, industrial, commercial, selling or other non-theatrical purposes, or to television of motion pictures; provided, however, that such non-theatrical motion picture activities are not being conducted in competition to an established motion picture theatre. And, if found to be unfair competition to an established motion picture theatre, the Code Authority shall promulgate rules and regulations governing such unfair competition of such non-theatrical or 9mm or 16mm interests, and such rules and regulations shall become a part of the motion picture code.

The Code Authority has three general functions: judicial, legislative and administrative. In production, the Code Authority is in effect a general board of general administration, and is a board of appeals to review the decisions and findings of any boards or committees which it may appoint for production administration, if an appeal from such decision is provided for in the code for the type of case involved.

As a legislative medium the Code Authority, on request and after a hearing, may prescribe additional rules of conduct for production, which, when approved by the President, become a part of the code. In this manner the code may be corrected, amplified and amended.

From an administrative standpoint, the Code Authority is charged with the general administration of the code, and shall appoint for the production field any committee or committees which it deems advisable in order to effectuate the purposes of the code, and the Code Authority shall delegate power and authority to such committees.

The Code Authority embraces definite representation for the creative talent of production, in the persons of Marie Dressler and Eddie Cantor. Provision for other production representation in connection with certain special matters are also made in the code. These are explained later in this article in the part which discusses the Code Authority in detail. Also treated in this article are the various special committees and standing committees for actors, agents and agencies, directors, extra players, free-lance players, technicians and writers.

The legal interpretation of the code rests with the Code Authority in the industry, and with the NRA, no one else.

While the entire production section of the code which pertains to labor and employees will be treated separately in detail in the second article of the production translation, appearing in a subsequent issue, it might be well to mention at this point the certain basic labor requirements to which all producers, studios and film laboratories, or firms, companies, corporations, associations and partnerships engaged in production must abide. These follow:

(1) The compliance by all employers in production with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay and other conditions of employment, contractual and otherwise, which are specified for the various classes of labor, employees and talent, both creative and mechanical.

(2) The right of any and all employees to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, without any interference whatsoever from any producer, studio or company, or company union.

(3) That no employee, or person seeking employment, be compelled by an employer to join any company union, or to refrain from joining, organizing or assisting any labor organization of his own choosing, as a condition for employment by such employer.

(4) That labor classes in production, as in the other branches, shall have a vote on the governing Code Authority when any question affecting such class is to be considered by the Code Authority. Such vote shall be by a single representative selected by such class of employees involved in the question.

Production executives and executive workers employed by a producer, studio or film laboratory or by any other production company, have certain definite responsibilities under the code.

No such production executive or executive worker shall in the regular course of his business activities wilfully violate any of the provisions of the code. And, if such production executive or executive worker is found to have wilfully violated any code provision or clause, he shall be liable to a fine of $500 for each day's wilful violation.

Employees do not sign the code because the motion picture code, like all others under the NRA, is basically a document for employers for compliance by employers.

If, in the administration of the code, it shall be found by the NRA Administrator that there is not sufficient representation of any employer class on the Code Authority, the Administrator shall have the right to add members from any such class to the Code Authority.

As is generally known throughout the industry, the Presidential order which accompanied the code postponed the enactment, at least temporarily, of certain production clauses, pertaining to writers, authors and dramatists, and to excessive salary payments to all workers in the industry, pending an investigation which is already under way under supervision of the Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt. These phases will be explained in a subsequent translation article.

Besides providing minimum wage scales and maximum working hours for some eighty classes of skilled and unskilled laborers and workers in production, the code also specifies wage scales, working schedules and other conditions of employment for extra players, as a class, and free-lance players, also as a separate class.

The provisions of the motion picture code, like all other such documents, are separable, so

TOO MANY PICTURES, SAYS CECIL DE MILLE

Contending that program pictures are nearing the end and that the unit system of production is the plan which would eliminate cycles and result in more quality product, Cecil B. DeMille in New York declared there are far too many pictures produced.

The producer, in scoring mass production, said that one man cannot read 52 stories a year and realize their true merit.

ADMINISTERING CODE IN PRODUCTION

Translating the Film Code

PRODUCTION

Being a translation of the complex legal phraseology of the PRODUCTION sections of the motion picture code into a working language of the industry.

In three previous articles, a translation was made of all of the code's provisions which pertain to distribution and exhibition, which two branches were treated together. These distribution-exhibition translations appeared in the following issues of MOTION PICTURE HERALD: December 23, January 6, January 20. (An index of the distribution-exhibition subjects appeared on page 43 of the January 20 issue.)

The production section of the motion picture code will likewise be translated in three articles, with the first article appearing herewith. A summary of the subjects treated in this first translation article follows:

First Article

PRODUCTION—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION

(1) PREAMBLE—Being a Translation of the General Application of the Code to Production.

(2) DEFINITIONS OF TECHNICAL TERMS Used in the Production Section of the Code.

(3) ADMINISTRATION of the Production Parts of the Code:
Purposes, Personnel, Procedure, Jurisdiction, Duties of the Following:
CODE AUTHORITY
SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR ACTORS

STANDING COMMITTEE FOR FREE-LANCE PLAYERS
SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR TECHNICIANS
SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR WRITERS

that if a court decision should invalidate one clause or provision, such court decision would in no way affect the validity of other clauses or provisions.

2. DEFINITIONS OF TERMS

In order that each member of the production branch of the motion picture industry shall have a more thorough knowledge of the application of the production provisions of the code, a study of the following general definitions of the code that are applicable to production should be made:

1. "MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY" shall be deemed to include, without limitation, the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures and all activities normally related thereto, except as specifically excepted from the operation of the code, as in the cases of uncompetitive non-theatrical and 9mm or 16mm motion pictures, television, and the like.

2. "PRODUCER" shall include, without limitation, any persons, partnerships, associations, firms, companies and corporations who shall engage in or contract to engage in the production of motion pictures.

3. "LEGITIMATE PRODUCTION" shall be deemed to refer to theatrical performances of dramatic and musical plays performed on the stage by living persons.

4. "EMPLOYEE" shall be deemed to refer to and include every person employed by any producer, studio or company engaged in production.

5. "OUTSIDE OR ASSOCIATED PRODUCER" shall be deemed to refer to a producer of motion pictures, including features, short subjects, and/or cartoons, and which producer operates his or its own production unit independently of, though in conjunction with, another producer or distributor under whose trade name or trade mark the productions of said outside or associated producer are released and distributed.

6. "ADMINISTRATOR" shall be deemed to mean the National Recovery Administrator (General Hugh S. Johnson).

7. "AGENT" as used in the production provisions of the code shall apply to any person—including firms, companies, associations, corporations or partnerships—who, directly or indirectly for a fee or other valuable consideration of any nature, procures, promises or undertakes to procure employment for any person for or in connection with the production of motion pictures.

8. "CONTRACT" as used in the provisions pertaining to contractual relations between creative talent and producers or studios, shall be deemed to mean and include not only any subsisting contract with any producer, but also any prior contract with such producer, or with any parent company or subsidiary or predecessor corporation of such producer, provided that the employment under such prior contract is continuous.

3. ADMINISTRATION OF PRODUCTION CLAUSES

A. PURPOSES

1. General administrative agency of the code.
2. Judicial: A supreme court of appeals and review for code matters and from certain decisions of code boards and committees, when such appeal is provided for in the code; the medium for interpreting the motion picture code law.
3. Legislative: To legislate changes, modifications or additional provisions to prevent unfair competition and destructive trade practices.

B. PERSONNEL

1. Representing affiliated producers-distributors-circuits, with a right to vote:

Merlin H. Aylesworth, RKO.
Sidney R. Kent, Fox.
George J. Schaeffer, Paramount.
Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's-MGM.
Harry M. Warner, Warners-First National.

2. Representing unaffiliated producers-distributors-exhibitors, with a right to vote:

Robert H. Cochrane, Universal.
W. Ray Johnston, Monogram.
Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA.
Charles L. O'Reilly, New York TOCC.
Nathan Yamins, Allied.

3. Representing the NRA and the Administration as "impartial" members, non-voting:

Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, in charge of amusement codes.

The code provides for two other administrative representatives on the Code Authority, but these have not yet been named.

4. Representing creative talent in Hollywood, non-voting members:

Marie Dressler.
Eddie Cantor.

When any question affecting any class of employee in production is to be considered by the Code Authority, such class shall be entitled to have one representative sit on the Code Authority, but only for such purpose as involves that particular class of employees. Such representative shall have a right to vote on the specific question and shall be selected by the NRA Administrator from a list of nominees submitted by members of the particular class of employees involved.

The Administrator has the right to add members to the Code Authority from any employer class in the industry, if, in the administration of the code, it shall be recommended by a majority of the voting members of the Code Authority that there is not sufficient representation on the Code Authority of such employer class.

The code recognizes six distinct employer groups in the industry as being entitled to representation on the Code Authority as voting representatives of such employer groups, as follows: Affiliated producers, affiliated distributors, affiliated exhibitors; and unaffiliated producers, unaffiliated distributors, unaffiliated exhibitors.

PRODUCTION AND CODE AUTHORITY

Although the affiliated and the unaffiliated voting members of the Code Authority each have five votes, the whole ten votes are broken down as follows: affiliated producers-distributors-circuits, five votes; unaffiliated producer-distributors, two votes; unaffiliated exhibitors, three votes.

In case of the absence, resignation, ineligibility or incapacity of any of the regular voting producer-distributor-exhibitor members of the Code Authority, then an alternate of the same general class of employers, designated by the member, shall act for him. The alternate must be a bona fide executive and the absent member must certify him as such to the Code Authority, and the Code Authority, by a vote of a majority, has the right to reject such alternate and require that the member designate another alternate. Virtually every regular voting Code Authority member has already appointed a regular standing alternate and these have been accepted by the Code Authority as permanent alternates, and also have been accepted as such by the Administrator.

Neither Marie Dressler nor Eddie Cantor may have an alternate on the Code Authority, and both of these non-voting members representing creative talent are supposed to participate in Code Authority meetings only when questions are being discussed pertaining to the classes which they represent.

If any member of the Code Authority is unable, for any reason, to designate his alternate, such alternate may be selected by the Code Authority and shall be subject to the Administrator's approval, but such alternate must be from the same general employer class as the member for whom he was appointed.

A member of the voting employer class of the Code Authority shall automatically become ineligible to continue as a member when he ceases to be a bona fide producer executive, or distribution or exhibition executive, as the case may be, and his successor will be named from the same general employer class, by the Code Authority. The selection shall be subject to the Administrator's approval.

No individual production, distribution or exhibition company or firm or organization or unit may have more than one voting representative on the Code Authority at the same time.

No member of the Code Authority shall sit on any matter which directly involves his own company or his own interests, and which does not involve his company or interests as a class or in a group. When matters come up which directly involve a member's own company or interests, the Code Authority shall designate an alternate of the same general class, but the alternate shall not be connected with the company of the ineligible member.

The Code Authority is empowered at any time for any reason to appoint boards, committees or sub-committees to effectuate the code, and to vest in such committees or boards any power and authority within the scope of the powers and authority granted to the Code Authority under the code. However, the appointment of such boards or committees by the Code Authority shall not relieve the Code Authority of any of its responsibilities under the code.

A CONCENTRATED TRANSLATION

The translation of the production section of the motion picture code by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, from the legal phraseology into a working language, is being done in such a manner that all related subjects, regardless of their position in the official draft, will be treated together.

For example, to effect a practicable concentration of all related production subjects, all angles in the code pertaining to boards and committees for administering the production provisions, are treated together, and where they have a relation to subsequent articles they will also be mentioned in the discussion of such other subject.

Any action taken by such committees or boards appointed by the Code Authority shall be subject to review by the Code Authority for its approval, if the Code Authority so decides, or where the code specifically states that such action of a board or committee be approved by the Code Authority.

Much of the actual detail work of the Code Authority will be done by committees of Code Authority members, although it is not necessary that members of any committee appointed by the Code Authority be members of the Code Authority. The Code Authority at any time for any reason may remove from any committee appointed by it any member of such committee. The Code Authority is supposed to coordinate the duties of the various committees which it appoints with a view to promoting joint and harmonious action upon matters of common reason.

The broad general powers of the Code Authority to appoint committees are given to it to further effectuate the purposes of the code.

Although, as previously stated, the Code Authority may appoint any number of committees, the code specifically provides the following committee for effectuating the production provisions:

Special Committee for Actors.
Standing Committee for Agencies.
Standing Committee for Determining Status of Offers Made to Talent Under Contract.
Special Committee for Directors.
Standing Committee for Extra Players.
Standing Committee for Free-lance Players.
Special Committee for Technicians.
Special Committee for Writers.

Members of the Code Authority do not receive salaries, nor do the committee members nor members of sub-committees or boards, but, in addition to the appointment or removal of any such board or committee member, the Code Authority has the right to fix the compensation of any person or number of persons whom it may employ to assist it in any capacity whatsoever in the administration of the code. The Code Authority's secretary is paid, and salaries will be given the secretaries of the Local Grievance Boards and the Local Clearance Boards.

The Code Authority may elect its own chairman at its own meetings, and has decided upon the system of alternating chairmen.

The three non-voting members of the Code Authority who will represent the NRA and the government on the Code Authority, and of which Sol Rosenblatt is the only one of this group appointed to date, shall not have any direct, personal interest in the motion picture industry, nor represent any interest adverse to the interests of those engaged in the industry, and are to be the official contacts on the Code Authority of the National Recovery Administration. There may not be more than three such government representatives on the Code Authority, and they must "carefully avoid the fact or appearance of dictation or coercion" and shall function as "co-workers in an undertaking of public interest, concerned only in the faithful administration of the code." Specifically, their duties may be summarized as follows:

1. Refer with recommendation to the Administrator those matters mentioned in the code as being subject to review and/or approval of the Administrator.
2. Recommend to the NRA division administrator such other matters as in his judgment are important to the welfare of the industry, or to the public interest, or to the consumers or employees affected by the provisions of the code. Code violations may be included in such recommendations.
3. Through the Code Authority secure complete assent to and compliance with all provisions of the code by each individual unit of the industry.
4. Assist the Code Authority in connection with the preparation of recommendations for necessary interpretations, modifications, and additions to the code.
5. Warn and guard the Code Authority, and through it, the industry and any units in the industry, against threatened deviations from the code or non-observance of its terms or action contrary to the principle of the National Recovery Act.
6. Constantly scrutinize the operation of the code and see that it does not permit or promote monopolies nor tend to eliminate or oppress small enterprises.
7. Advise with the Code Authority in seeing that its affairs are handled in a cooperative and fair manner with respect to all units under the code, making sure that the provisions of the code are strictly adhered to with an equitable and fair settlement of all matters covered by the code pertaining to the interests of the general public, consumers or employees.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION—DUTIES

The Code Authority may make at any time such rules and regulations as to meetings and other procedural matters as it may determine and shall outline the procedure to be followed by the boards or committees which it appoints.

In administering the code, the Code Authority shall, to such extent and in such manner as may seem most useful, utilize the facilities of the various national, regional and local trade associations and organizations in the industry. Typical of the associations referred to in the code are these which are active in production: Motion Picture Producers' Association, American Society of Cinematographers, the Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sci-

Diamond Named To Head Famous Music Company

Lou Diamond has been elected president of Famous Music Corporation, it was announced last week by Paramount, which recently acquired complete control of the company. Other officers named were Walter B. Cokell, vice president; Norman Collyer, secretary, and James S. Polk, assistant secretary. Mr. Diamond, Mr. Polk, Mr. Cokell and Sidney Justin were elected to the board of directors.

Tri-Ergon Hearing Feb. 2

The sound patent infringement case filed against New York independent exhibitors and distributors by Tri-Ergon has been scheduled for hearing on February 2 in the appellate division of the New York state supreme court. The new hearing is the result of an appeal by Tri-Ergon against dismissal of the suit in a lower court.

Announce New Register

The National Ticket Register Company has announced that their new silent register is to be known as the American Silent ticket register. George Meade, general manager of the Standard Ticket Register Corporation, has arranged for his company to handle the new American Silent.

Several Promoted By Ross Service

Harry Ross, president of the Ross Federal Service, theatre checking organization, has announced the following promotions in that organization:

Walter Brown, manager of the Chicago office, appointed Midwest division manager, with supervision over Chicago, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Milwaukee and Indianapolis.

Arthur Kane, manager of the Los Angeles office, appointed West Coast division manager with supervision over the branches in Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver and Salt Lake City.

Max Ungerman, manager of the Denver office, transferred to Atlanta as manager. Joseph Page, manager of the Indianapolis office, transferred to Denver as manager. J. E. Jolly, manager of the Atlanta office, transferred to Indianapolis as manager. Mr. Page, named Denver manager, was the first employee of the Ross Federal Service.

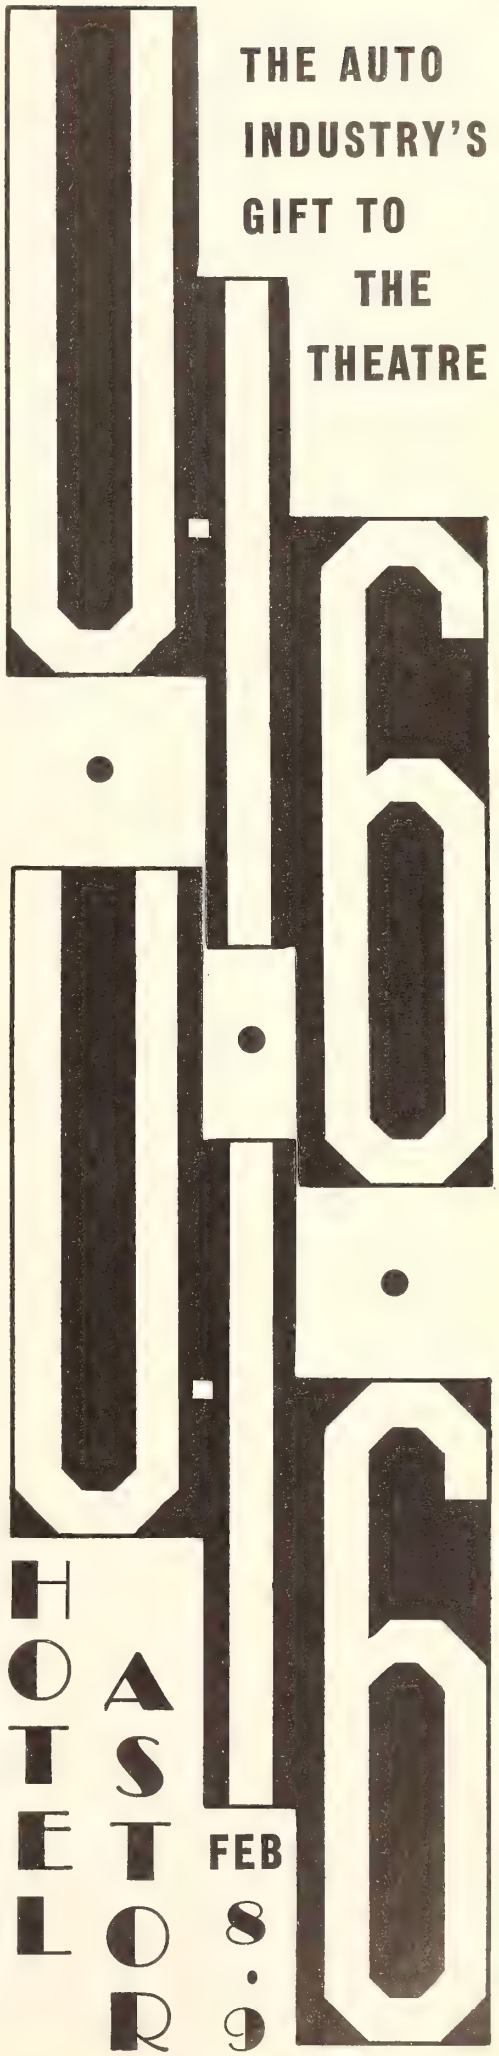
John T. Jackson Is Dead in Michigan

John Thomas Jackson, 68, former theatre owner of Coldwater, Mich., and head of the Jackson Unit Display System, recently was killed instantly when he was struck by an automobile while crossing the street. Funeral services were held January 23.

John T. Jackson, a son, will continue the business. Mr. Jackson is survived by his wife, son and a brother. He had sold the theatre, taken over in the early years of the century, in 1919, when he founded the Jackson Display Company.

Entire Series Booked For Fox West Coast

The entire series of Celebrity Productions' ComiColor cartoon series has been booked for the Fox West Coast circuit by Jack Drum, manager of Allied Exchanges for Southern California. In addition to the Fox group the series has been booked into the Hollywood Theatres circuit and all Warner theatres in Southern California with the exception of two.



Included is a day and date run in two representative first-run theatres, Loew's State in Los Angeles and the Four Star in Hollywood.

International Photographers Elect Strenge as President

The International Photographers of the Motion Picture Industries, Local 644, has elected F. Walter Strenge as president. Other officers elected include: Harry W. Smith, vice president; Frank G. Kirby, treasurer; Tom Hogan, secretary; O. V. Johnson, business representative; F. Landi, sergeant-at-arms; Ray Foster, three-year trustee.

After serving for 10 consecutive years as a director for Warner-First National, Roy Del Ruth resigned last week and established new headquarters at 20th Century.

EIGHT COMMITTEES MAY BE CREATED

ences and the various actors' and writers' guilds, and others.

Directly, or through any committee or board which it may appoint, the Code Authority shall be engaged in all activities pertaining to the administration and effectuation of the code. It shall assist the NRA and the Administrator and the Division Administrator in administering the provisions of the code, in making investigations as to the functioning or observance of any and all of the provisions of the code, either at its own instance or on the complaint of any person, and shall report to the Administrator on such matters of investigation.

The Code Authority shall have the right to make independent investigations, directly or through a committee, of violations or alleged violations of the code by any branch of the industry as a whole or by any person, employer, producer, studio or film laboratory engaged in the industry.

The Code Authority is empowered to collect at any time from members of the industry any and all data and statistics required by the President or the NRA when such requests are reasonably pertinent to the effectuation of the policy of the National Recovery Act. The Code Authority, while it has the power to collect such data or statistics, may only disseminate among the industry's members summaries of the information compiled, and in no instance shall the Code Authority make any individual identification of any person, firm, company, producer or studio to whom the information relates, nor shall the Code Authority disclose individual parts of the information collected, but, as previously stated, shall only release summaries of the whole information, and no such information or statistics pertaining to any one member of the industry shall be revealed to any other.

The Code Authority may also be asked by the NRA to gather statistical information for, and to be turned over to any government agency.

The Code Authority may initiate and consider any recommendations for new regulations or provisions or clauses, including those pertaining to trade practices, and may change any trade practice clauses in the code, after a hearing and with the approval of the President and the Administrator.

After due notice to the industry and a hearing, the Code Authority may prescribe such additional rules and regulations or provisions governing the conduct of producers and studios among themselves and with each other and with their employees. Such new rules and regulations or additions or changes to present code provisions must be submitted after the hearing to the Administrator and then to the President, and, if approved, shall constitute additional rules under the code, and any violation of them shall constitute a violation of the code. Such new rules and regulations or additions are intended to take form as changes in circumstances or experience may indicate the necessity for further preventing unfair trade competition and other unfair and destructive industry practices.

Unlike distribution-exhibition, in which fields Local Grievance Boards shall hear charges of unfair trade practices, the Code Authority, in production, will determine directly certain complaints of unfair trade practices which are not matters to be handled by one of the committees to be appointed in Hollywood to govern the relations of producers with certain classes of creative talent for which the code specifically creates committees. An appeal may be made to the Code Authority from any decision of such committee.

Trade practices involving the relations of agents or agencies with producers, studios, actors, writers, directors and technicians shall be governed by an Agency Committee consisting of agents, producers, and one actor, writer, director and technician, and such committee shall be appointed by the Code Authority and the Administrator.

The Code Authority shall also appoint a standing committee which shall have full power and authority to determine the good faith of any offer made to a creative worker by a producer, in certain instances, as explained later.

The Code Authority may order that no producer employ a creative worker who shall have been found, after notice and a hearing, to have refused without just cause to render services under any contract of employment, but such order shall be approved or rejected or modified by the Administrator. And, if any producer violate such approved order by engaging any such person who has wilfully and without cause violated a contract, then the Code Authority may place any restrictions it may deem proper upon the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures produced by the offending producer. The Administrator, however, shall approve such ruling by the Code Authority.

Should it be determined at any time upon a fair showing, after due notice, that a set of fair trade practices should be adopted governing the relations between producers and any one of the following classes: writers, directors, technicians, actors and agents, the Administrator and the Code Authority shall appoint a special committee for that purpose and the producers and the class interested in such matters shall have equal representation on any such committee.

In its capacity as a judicial branch of motion picture code administration under the NRA, the Code Authority shall be the industry's medium for interpreting the motion picture code law, either on its own initiative, or when asked to do so for specific cases, or upon appeal of a complaining or defendant party in any case or matter decided by any one of the boards or committees. The NRA and the Administrator and the Division Administrator (Sol Rosenblatt), may also render any code interpretations.

Although the Code Authority is intended to effectuate compliance of the code, its powers end when "policing" is necessary to effect compliance either with the code or with the Code Authority's decisions. Actual "policing" and prosecution are matters for the NRA and the federal judicial branches. The NRA may bring to court any persons refusing to comply with Code Authority decisions or persons refusing to stop code violation. The Code Authority shall report such matters to the NRA and/or the Administrator or Division Administrator or to the NRA Compliance Boards, locally or at Washington, or the NRA or Administrator or Division Administrator may turn over such matters to the NRA Compliance Boards or to the Federal Trade Commission or to the federal branch in charge of prosecuting persons so offending.

D. HEADQUARTERS, SUB-BRANCHES

The Code Authority will have its headquarters in New York in the RKO Building, 1270 Sixth Avenue, at Fiftieth Street, in Radio City. These quarters are in charge of John C. Flinn, secretary of the Code Authority. It is expected that the Code Authority will have an office in Hollywood, and an executive officer in charge.

E. GENERAL

The Code Authority shall, at an early date, prescribe to producers and studios, and to all other companies in the industry, the manner and means of collecting funds necessary to pay the expenses of the Code Authority in administering the code.

The amount necessary shall be budgeted by the Code Authority and fairly allocated among the three branches of the industry and assessed against all of the members of production, as well as distribution and exhibition. The Code Authority had not yet decided on the manner of allocation, nor the amount necessary, but the code law definitely says that any person who shall fail to pay promptly any assessment or levy made by the Code Authority, for purposes of administering the code, shall not be entitled to file any complaint under any Article or Part of the code.

Whether those who do not sign the blank of code acceptance shall be compelled to pay their allocated part of code expenses was still a matter for the Code Authority to decide, although everyone in the industry is bound to the law and letter of the code, regardless of whether they sign or not, which would indicate that, inasmuch as the provision for assessments is a definite clause in the code, they would be subject to such assessments even though they don't sign. In any event, each producer, studio or company and other firms in the industry will be notified in due time as to the amount which they shall contribute.

Although not specifically mentioned in the code, the Administration has effected a federal NRA system to aid Code Authorities generally to adjust complaints of code violations by pro-

SOME GENERAL CODE HIGHLIGHTS FOR ALL

The code contains some general provisions which are applicable to every company or employer in each of the three motion picture branches: production, distribution and exhibition. These general provisions follow:

Wilful violation of any code clause is a violation of the law and is liable to a fine of $500 for each day of violation, each day's offense being a separate violation.

"Policing" and prosecution powers are in the hands of the NRA.

The fact that a person or firm signed the President's blanket re-employment code of last year does not remove the necessity for signing the new film code, which supersedes the Presidential re-employment code.

Acceptance blanks are to be signed on or before February 28 to entitle a person or firm to protection against unfair competition under the code's provisions.

The code is binding on all in the industry, whether they sign or not.

The code basically is intended to promote fair competition in the industry and to eliminate unfair competition, and to provide minimum wages and maximum working hours and fair working conditions for employees.

CLAUSES FOR CONTROL OF ALL AGENTS

ARTICLES SHOULD BE FILED FOR REFERENCE

Production folk in Hollywood, and elsewhere, are urged to save for future reference the entire series of three articles, which begin in this issue, and in which the production parts of the motion picture code will be translated from the complex legal phraseology into a clear working language. They are also intended to explain the code's purposes and its application to those in the industry.

Any individual request to MOTION PICTURE HERALD for further information of an explanatory, but not of a legal interpretative nature, will be answered immediately. The Code Authority, and no one else, will interpret the legal meaning of the clauses and provisions of the code.

The translation in MOTION PICTURE HERALD is only a translation, and not a legal interpretation of the meaning of the clauses.

viding for supplementary code cooperation of the National Recovery Administration in the 48 states with all Code Authorities and their boards and sub-committees.

The plan provides complaint adjustment machinery for any industry while such industry is organizing its own machinery and Code Authority and boards, or wherever the Code Authority finds complaint machinery too costly to maintain, or wherever it needs government aid in enforcement.

The new system is not equipped with prosecution powers, but it will cause to be instituted proceedings by proper government agencies against wilful non-compliance with codes.

Twenty-six district NRA compliance directors already have been named in the field and these will be augmented by 22 more in order to make available a director for each state. Branch offices will be established in many of the larger cities.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR ACTORS

A. PURPOSES

To draft further trade practices specifically to govern relations between producers or studios and actors, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, and after giving notice, that such additional trade practice regulations should be adopted.

B. PERSONNEL

The producers and the actors shall be entitled to equal representation, and although the code does not mention specifically the number of such representatives who shall be appointed to this special committee, it appears likely that the membership will consist of five producers or producers' representatives, to be appointed by the Code Authority, and five actors, to be selected by the Administrator or Division Administrator from nominations submitted by actors in an equitable manner prescribed by the Administrator.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The committee shall not be a permanent or a standing committee, but shall be a special, temporary committee and shall be created only for the specific purpose of drafting additional fair trade practice regulations governing relations between producers and actors, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, after notice, that such additional trade practices should be adopted.

The operation of this committee shall not be superseded by the Code Authority's power to prescribe, after notice and hearing, any additional rules for trade practices. It appears, then, that the work of this special committee would take precedence over the Code Authority in the specific matter of drafting further trade practices governing the relations between producers and actors.

The special committee shall make findings of fact and shall make such recommendations to the Administrator as it may deem proper if the committee is unanimous, otherwise separate recommendations may be submitted by any number of committee members, or one set of recommendations may be submitted by each of the two groups of producers and actors, together with a report that the committee has disagreed.

The committee of producers and actors shall not hold any hearing or proceeding without due notice and a full and fair opportunity to all interested parties to appear and be heard.

A complete transcript of all testimony and arguments shall be made by the committee during all hearings and proceedings, and such transcript shall be certified by the committee to the Administrator, and the committee must accompany such certified transcript to the Administrator with the recommendations of the members of the committee, which recommendations must also be certified by the committee.

The Administrator shall approve, reject or modify such recommendations, or any number of them, and may conduct such further investigations and hearings as to him may seem necessary or advisable.

The order of the Administrator shall be final.

The committee, subject to the approval of the Administrator, shall have authority to require all producers to furnish such information as may be desired to effectuate the drafting of any additional trade practices.

The committee shall have full power and authority to prescribe reasonable rules of procedure for determining all matters of dispute or controversy which may properly arise before such committee in connection with this work of drafting additional trade practices.

At the same time that the findings or recommendations and report of the committee shall be sent to the Administrator, such findings or recommendations and report shall be made public in such manner as may be determined by the Administrator. Since this clause was written, the Code Authority has decided that the motion picture trade press shall be the official medium for disseminating to the industry at large any information that is required to be made public.

D. GENERAL

The production section of the motion picture code contains many specific provisions for regulating relations between producers and actors. (These will be enumerated in detail in the third article of this series translating the production section of the code, in a subsequent issue.) In addition to these specific regulations governing producer-actor relations, the code recognizes the possibilities of the necessity of effectuating further trade practice regulations as changes in conditions or experience in administering the code, indicate, and, because the code, like all others, has as its basic intentions the creation of fair competition and the establishment of fair trade practices governing the relations between employers and employees, the code creates several mediums for the drafting and adoption of any additional rules and regulations and trade practices that appear to be necessary. The President is one such medium. The Administrator, the NRA and the Code Authority are others. The Agency Committee, described below, may also set up rules of fair practice governing relations between producers and actors, and, of course, the Special Committee for Actors hereinabove described, is intended for the same purpose.

No such additional rules and regulations or trade practices may be effected, however, without a full hearing and notice to the interested parties or branches of the industry.

STANDING COMMITTEE FOR AGENTS & AGENCIES

A. PURPOSES

To draft and administer fair trade practices among agents or agencies and for agents or agencies in their relations with the producers or studios and in their relations with their clients: actors, writers, directors, technicians.

B. PERSONNEL

The Agency Committee shall consist of ten members, five of whom shall be producers or producers' representatives, to be appointed by the Code Authority, and the other five to consist of one agent, one actor, one writer, one director and one technician, and this second group of five is to be selected by the Administrator from nominations submitted for each of the classes named, respectively, by the agents, the actors, writers, directors and technicians, and these nominations are to be made by these individual classes in such equitable manner as may be prescribed by the Administrator.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The Agency Committee was created basically to create fair trade practices among agents or agencies and for agents or agencies in their relations with the producers or studios and in their relations with their clients: actors, writers, directors, technicians, and, in this connection, the code specifically mentions certain trade practices which shall govern agencies, and, in addition, gives the committee power to draft additional rules and regulations and trade practices as the necessity arises.

Trade practices specifically mentioned in the code for agents total five, and any producer who, directly or indirectly, transacts any business relating in any form to the production of motion pictures with any agent or agency who, under the procedure hereinafter set forth shall be found by the Agency Committee to have violated any one of the five provisions, then such producer shall be in violation of the code. All agents and agencies in motion picture production shall be bound under these five provisions, or any others which may be added from time to time in the prescribed manner. The five agency provisions now in the code are as follows:

1. No agent or agency shall give, offer or promise to any employee of any motion picture producer any gift or money or gratuity to influence the action of such employee in relation to the business of his employing producer or studio. This is intended to prevent payment by an agent to a production executive of any sum for the securing of special privileges or a contract or a film engagement for the actor, writer, director or technician client of the agent, in the company or the studio of such production executive.

2. No agent or agency shall alienate or entice, or shall attempt to alienate or attempt to entice, any employee under written contract of employment, from such employment, or to try to induce or advise without justification any employee to do any act or thing in conflict with such employee's obligation to perform in good faith any contract of employment with any purchaser or studio, whether such contract or obligation to the producer or studio be oral or written.

3. No agent or agency shall knowingly make any materially false representation to any producer or studio in negotiations with such producer or studio for or affecting the employment or contemplated employment of any actor, director, writer or technician represented by such agent.

4. No agent or agency shall violate or evade or shall attempt to violate or attempt to evade, directly, or indirectly, any provision in this section, or any provision in Part 5 of Article V of the code, which has to do with the socalled practice of "talent raiding." (Note: Pending further investigation, this Part 5 of Article V was suspended by order of the President when he signed the code last November.)

5. No agent or agency shall fail or refuse to register as an agent, in the event and when such registration is decided upon by the Agency Committee, and no agent or agency shall transact business as an agent or agency after his resignation shall have been revoked, canceled or suspended, in the event that such registration procedure is decided upon by the Agency Committee.

Another provision in the film code, affecting both producers or production executives and agents or agencies, says that it shall be an unfair trade practice, and, therefore a violation of the code, for any producer, or any employee of a producer, directly or indirectly to engage in, carry on, or in any way be financially interested in or connected with the business of an agent or agency, without making known such fact to the Agency Committee within twenty days from the effective date of this code—December 7—or if such interest is acquired following December 7th, then such producer or producer's employee shall make known such fact to the Agency Committee within ten days after the acquisition of such interest.

The Agency Committee shall require after the acquisition of such interest that public disclosure of such acquisition of interest be made in a manner as it may deem advisable. Also, the Agency Committee shall make such further rules in connection with this section of the code as it sees fit, and such further rules shall be subject to the approval of the Administrator before finally effectuated.

CODE AUTHORITY AND THE NRA

The motion picture industry's Code Authority is the administrative and interpretative governing board of the code in the industry, and, in addition, is charged with effecting compliance of all those in the industry with the code's provisions.

It has no police powers, but shall report wilful code violations to the NRA and the NRA will then attempt to end the violations, and, in case it is unsuccessful in this connection, the NRA has the power to bring the matter to the courts to settle.

In order to administer the code provisions governing relations between producers and agents, writers, directors, technicians, contract players, extras and free-lance players, the code creates special or standing committees for each of these classes, and the producers and each class shall have equal representation on such committee. The structure and modus operandi of these committees are the subjects of this first article on the translation of production provisions of the code.

With regards further trade practices for agents or agencies which shall be necessary from time to time, the code specifically says that the Agency Committee may, after due notice and hearing, and with the approval of the Administrator, set up rules and fair trade practices governing agents.

Also, the Agency Committee is empowered to set up rules and fair trade practices governing relations between producers and agents, writers, actors, directors and technicians. The Agency Committee must give notice of such impending additions or changes, and a hearing must be held, and such additions or changes must be approved by the Administrator.

The operation of this Agency Committee shall not be superseded by the Code Authority. It appears, then, that the work of this committee would take precedence over the Code Authority in the specific matters of governing relations between agents and producers, actors, directors, writers and technicians.

In order to effectuate this part of the code pertaining to agents or agencies and their relaform terms and conditions for all agents and and technicians, the Agency Committee has the power to recommend to the Administrator uniform terms and conditions for all agents and an appropriate procedure for the registration of all agents and agencies with whom producers may transact business relating to the production of motion pictures, and the Agency Committee may also recommend to the Administrator uniform terms and conditions for the suspension, revocation, or cancellation of any such registration ("license").

Such recommendations of the Agency Committee, together with the recommendations of each or any individual Committee members, shall be submitted in writing, together, to the Administrator. And then the Administrator, after such notice and hearing as the Administrator may prescribe, may approve or reject or modify such recommendations. Upon approval by the Administrator, such recommendations shall have full force and effect as provisions of the code and any violation of such approved recommendations shall constitute a violation of the code.

No agent shall be deprived of the right of registration without affording such agent a full and fair opportunity to be heard, and no agent shall be deprived of the right to register even after having been heard by the Agency Committee without the approval of the Administrator.

Should the Agency Committee decide at any time to provide for the registration of agents, as described in the foregoing, then all persons regularly transacting business as agents at such time shall be entitled to registration as a matter of course, provided, however, application is made for registration to the Agency Committee within thirty days after the Agency Committee decides upon effecting registration of such agents.

The Agency Committee shall have power and authority to prescribe reasonable rules of procedure for the determination by it of all matters of dispute or controversy which may properly arise before the committee, such as disputes or controversies among agents or between agents and a producer, actor, director, writer or technician.

The Agency Committee shall make findings of fact concerning any dispute or any matter coming before it pertaining to the relations of agents among themselves or pertaining to the relations of agents and producers, actors, directors, writers and technicians. And the Agency Committee shall make such recommendations to the Administrator as it may deem proper if the Committee is unanimous, and if the committee is not unanimous in its recommendations, then separate recommendations of any number of members may be submitted to the Administrator, together with a report that the Committee has disagreed.

No hearing or proceeding of any nature, in this connection, shall be conducted by the Agency Committee without due notice and a full and fair opportunity shall have been given to all interested parties to appear and be heard.

A complete transcript of all testimony and all arguments of all hearings and all procedure shall be made by the Agency Committee and such transcript shall be certified by the Agency Committee, and the Committee shall also certify the recommendations of the members of the Committee, and such transcript and such recommendations shall then be sent to the Administrator. The Administrator shall approve, reject or modify such recommendations, or any of them, and the Administrator may conduct such further investigations and hearings as to him may seem necessary or advisable.

The order of the Administrator shall be final.

The Agency Committee, subject to the approval of the Administrator, shall have authority to require all producers to furnish such information as may be desired to effectuate the provisions of this part.

D. GENERAL

The term "agent" or "agency" as used in the foregoing shall apply to any person, including firms, companies, partnerships, corporations or associations, who, directly or indirectly, for a fee or for other valuable considerations, procures, promises to procure, or undertakes to procure employment for any persons for or in connection with the production of motion pictures.

The production section of the motion picture code contains many provisions for regulating relations between producers and agents, actors, directors, writers and technicians. (All production trade practices will be enumerated in detail in the third article of this series translating the production section of the code, to appear in a subsequent issue.) In addition to these specific regulations governing such relations, the code recognizes the possibilities of the necessity of effectuating further trade practices as changes in conditions or experience in administering the code indicate, and, because the code, like all others, has as its basic intentions, the creation of fair competition and the establishment of fair practices governing the relations between employers and employees, the code creates several mediums for the drafting and adoption of any additional rules and regulations and trade practices that appear to be necessary. The President is one such medium. The Administrator, the NRA and the Code Authority are others. The Agency Committee, described in the foregoing, may also set up rules of fair practice governing relations between producers and agents, actors, directors, writers and technicians. The special committees for actors, writers, directors, technicians are others that are intended for the same purpose.

STANDING COMMITTEE FOR DETERMINING OFFERS TO CONTRACT TALENT

Because the President believed that further investigation is required with respect to problems generally affecting unfair competitive methods for the services of employees of producers rendering services of an artistic, interpretative, technical, supervisory or executive nature, (such unfair competitive methods known as star "raiding" or talent "raiding"), the Executive Order of the President, accompanying the approved code, suspended from operation Part 5 of Article V of Division B, which pertains to such unfair competitive methods.

Meanwhile, this Part 5 of the production section of the code shall not become effective pending further report from the Administrator, after investigation, as to whether such provisions should be indefinitely suspended or modified, altered or changed, or whether they shall become effective at all. Such investigation is already under way in Hollywood and is being made by Division Administrator Rosenblatt.

Writers, authors and dramatists are not included in this clause, but all other contract talent is included, such as players, stars, actors, directors, studio executives, supervisors, producers, technicians and others of the contract classes.

In addition to providing a method and means whereby one employing producer shall or shall not make offers to such talent as described above and under contract by another employing producer, when such contracts are nearing expiration, this part of the code also authorizes the Code Authority to appoint a standing committee which would have full power and authority to determine the good faith of any offer made to contract talent by a producer. However, because of the uncertainty of the future of this clause regarding the final form it will take and the manner in which it will operate, including the standing committee, publication of the details of the modus operandi of this committee is being postponed until such time as the Administrator definitely decides the future of the code clause described in outline hereinabove.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR DIRECTORS

A. PURPOSES

To draft further trade practices specifically to govern relations between producers or studios and directors, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, and after giving notice, that such additional trade practice regulations should be adopted.

B. PERSONNEL

The producers or studios and the directors shall be entitled to equal representation, and although the code does not mention specifically the number of such representatives who shall be appointed to this special committee, it appears likely that the membership will consist of five producers or producers' representatives, to be appointed by the Code Authority, and five directors, to be selected by the Administrator or Division Administrator from nominations submitted by directors in an equitable manner to be prescribed by the Administrator.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The committee of directors and producers shall not be a permanent or a standing committee, but shall be a special, temporary committee and shall be created only for the specific purpose of drafting additional fair trade practice regulations governing relations between producers and directors, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, and after giving notice, that such additional trade practices should be adopted.

The operation of this committee shall not be superseded by the Code Authority's power to prescribe, after notice and hearing, any additional rules for trade practices. It appears, then, that the work of this special committee would take precedence over the Code Authority in the specific matter of drafting further trade practices governing the relations between producers and directors.

This special committee shall make findings of fact and shall make such recommendations to the Administrator as it may deem proper if the committee is unanimous, otherwise separate recommendations may be submitted by any number of committee members, or one set of recommendations may be submitted by each of the two groups of producers and directors, together with a report that the committee has disagreed.

The committee of producers and directors shall not hold any hearing or proceeding without due notice and a full and fair opportunity to all interested parties to appear and be heard.

A complete transcript of all testimony and arguments shall be made by the committee during all hearings and proceedings, and such transcript shall be certified by the committee to the Administrator, and the committee must accompany such certified transcript to the Administrator with the recommendations of the members of the committee, which recommendations must also be certified by the committee.

The Administrator shall approve, reject or modify such recommendations, or any number of them, and may conduct such further investigations and hearings as to him may seem necessary or advisable.

The order of the Administrator shall be final.

The committee, subject to the approval of the Administrator, shall have authority to require all producers to furnish such information as may be desired to effectuate the drafting of any such additional trade practice regulations.

The committee shall have power and authority to prescribe reasonable rules of procedure for determining all matters of dispute or controversy which may properly arise before such committee in connection with this work of drafting additional trade practices.

At the same time that the findings or recommendations and report of the committee shall be sent to the Administrator, such findings or recommendations and report shall be made public in such manner as may be determined by the Administrator. Since this clause was written, the Code Authority has decided that the motion picture trade press shall be the official medium for disseminating to the industry at large any information that is required to be made public.

D. GENERAL

The production section of the motion picture code contains many provisions for regulating relations between producers and directors. (These will be enumerated in detail in the third article of this series translating the production section of the code, in a subsequent issue.) In addition to these specific regulations governing producer-director relations, the code recognizes the possibilities of effectuating further trade practice regulations as changes in conditions or experience in administering the code indicate, and, because the code, like all others, has as its basic intentions the creation of fair competition and the establishment of fair trade practices governing the relations between employers and employees, the code creates several mediums which are empowered to draft and adopt any additional rules and regulations and trade practices that appear to be necessary. The President is one such medium. The Administrator, the NRA and the Code Authority are others. The Special Committee for Directors is another, as described in the foregoing.

No such additional rules and regulations or trade practices may be effected, however, without a full hearing and notice to the interested parties or branches of the industry.

STANDING COMMITTEE FOR EXTRA PLAYERS

A. PURPOSES

For the drafting and administration of rules and regulations to be adopted by casting agencies and producers with respect to their treatment of and with respect to their relations with extra players; to investigate conditions of employment for extras with a view to making recommendations to the Administrator; to effectuate the code provisions which pertain to extras and their relations with producers and casting agencies; to supervise and to interpret the terms of any provisions made for extras, and to receive and pass on any complaints and grievances made by extras against casting agencies and producers or studios; and to cause a reclassification of extras and extra talent.

B. PERSONNEL

The Code Authority or Administrator shall appoint a committee of a permanent nature, and to be representative of producers (employers), extra players and the public, and such standing committee shall be empowered to appoint sub-committees for any purpose. Members of the standing committee appointed by Division Administrator Rosenblatt are: Chairman, Mrs. Mabel Kinney, California Industrial Welfare Commissioner; Representing Producers: Fred Pelton, B. B. Kahane, M. H. Hoffman, Pat Casey and J. P. Normanly; Representing Casting Directors: Phil Friedman and Dave Werner; Representing Actors Equity: Charles Miller; Representing Extra Players: Allan Garcia, Larry Steers, Lee Phelps, J. B. Russell, Una Hopkins and Fred Burns.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The production section of the code has a special division intended to regulate conditions of employment for extras. It says that a standing committee shall be appointed to provide for rules and regulations to be adopted by all casting agencies, and producers, and such standing committee shall effectuate the purposes of the provisions pertaining to extras, and shall interpret the terms of any provisions made for extras and shall supervise the same, including those provisions already incorporated in the code, and shall receive and pass on any complaints or grievances involving extra players, especially those pertaining to conditions of their employment, and shall otherwise aid in effectuating the extra provisions of the code, subject to review by the Administrator. All activities of the standing committee, or of any sub-committees appointed by it, shall be subject to review by the Administrator.

Such standing committee under the supervision of the Code Authority or the Administrator shall cause a reclassification of extra players and extra talent, to be undertaken, based upon the following qualifications for such extras:

(a) Extra players shall be those who by experience and/or ability are known to be competent to play group and individual business parts and to otherwise appear in a motion picture in other than atmospheric or crowd work.

(b) Atmosphere people who are not to be classified as dependent on motion pictures for a livelihood, but who may be recorded, listed, and called upon for occasional special qualifications not possible of being filled from the regular registered extra players.

(c) Crowds not classified, including racial groups, location crowds where transportation is unpractical and crowd assemblies of a public nature.

Among other conditions specified in the extras part of the code to come under the direct supervision of the standing committee for extras is a minimum pay scale for extra players, atmosphere people and crowds, such minimum pay being as follows:

(1) Extra players shall be paid a minimum of $7.50 per day, with this minimum to be graded upward according to the character and importance of the work, the performance and the personal wardrobe required.

The minimum salary for Class A "dress" people is to be $15 per day, provided, however, that if an extra player who is employed as an extra, is required to play a part or bit with essential story dialogue, such extra player shall not be deemed to be an extra player for that part, and shall become a bit player, and his compensation for such part or bit shall be fixed by agreement between such player and the producer for whom the part or the bit is undertaken, but the minimum compensation to such part player or bit player shall not be less than $25 for such part or bit. This means that whenever any extra player speaks any dialogue, regardless of how little, such player automatically becomes a bit player for purposes of that particular performance, and the performance of such bit by an extra player shall not cause the extra player to lose his registered standing as an extra player.

(2) Atmosphere people shall be paid a minimum of $5 per day, and any extra player who is registered may accept atmospheric work without losing or jeopardizing his registration as an extra player.

(3) Crowd players shall be paid a minimum of $5 per day, provided that this minimum shall not prevent the employment of large crowds under special circumstances at a rate lower than the minimum. In other words, the minimum of $5 per day each for crowds may be lowered if such reduction will permit of the employment of larger groups.

(4) Transportation to and from locations shall be paid to extra players by the producer. There shall also be paid to extra players for interviews and fittings the payments provided for in Order 16-A of the Industrial Welfare Commission of the State of California; except that in the event that any interview extends beyond one and one-half hours, the extra player, even though he is not engaged, shall receive not less than one-fourth of a day's pay —or $1.88—and, if any interview shall extend beyond two hours the extra player shall receive an additional one-fourth of a day's pay for every additional two hours or fraction thereof.

In addition to any other conditions which it deems necessary, the standing committee for extra players shall provide for specific working conditions, and shall supervise such working conditions, as follows:

(a) In casting bureaus and casting agencies, casting and employment by interviews of women and children shall be done by women casting officials and men by men.

(b) No person shall be employed as an extra player or atmosphere worker who is a dependent member of the immediate family of any regular employee of a motion picture company, or any person who is not obliged to depend upon extra work as a means of livelihood, unless the exigencies of production, reasonably construed, require an exception to be made. And further, no one shall be employed as an extra player or atmosphere worker on account of personal favoritism.

The purpose of this clause is to spread the work for extras, and it was made known in Hollywood last week that a special sub-committee, to be appointed by the standing committee for extras, will supervise the regulation of this clause, and make thorough investigations of the extras' employment situation with a view to making recommendations for changes, even if changes in the code are found to be necessary or advisable.

(c) A day's work for an extra in any state shall be eight hours, with overtime as provided by the existing requirements of the California State Industrial Welfare Commission.

(d) No person coming under the classifications of extra player or atmosphere worker (excepting crowds) shall be permitted to work in more than one picture for the same day's pay, including overtime.

(e) Rotation of work for all registered extras shall be established by the standing committee for extras to such reasonable degree as may be possible and practicable.

(f) No person who is not a registered extra player shall be requested by a studio casting office from any outside casting agency, and each registered extra player shall be provided with a card for identification; suitable regulations for carrying out this provision shall be adopted by the standing committee for extras.

D. GENERAL

The standing committee for extra players, as described in detail in the foregoing, made its first report, the other day, to Division Administrator Rosenblatt, in Hollywood, and on the basis of this report Mr. Rosenblatt recommended the appointment by the standing committee of various sub-committees to look into problems affecting extras. Mr. Rosenblatt added that should this procedure fail to correct the situation pertaining to extra players, then changes would be made in the code to effect such remedial measures. It was the opinion at the meeting of the standing committee for extras that provisions in the code pertaining to such players were adopted before conditions could be properly analyzed, and that now such investigations as are necessary will be made. The sub-committees started work immediately.

STANDING COMMITTEE FOR FREE-LANCE PLAYERS

A. PURPOSES

For the drafting and administering of rules and regulations governing working conditions, minimum adequate compensation and the relations between producers or studios and casting agencies with so-called free-lance players receiving compensation of $150 or less per week; to investigate conditions of employment for free-lance players with a view to making recommendations to the Administrator; to effectuate the code provisions pertaining to free-lance players and their relations with producers and casting agencies; to supervise and to interpret the terms of any provisions made for free-lance players, and to receive and pass on any complaints and grievances made by free-lance players against casting agencies and producers or studios.

B. PERSONNEL

The Code Authority or the Administrator shall appoint a standing committee for free-lance players, to be representative of the producers (employers), the public and free-lance players. The committee may appoint sub-committees.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The committee and/or the Code Authority, after investigating present conditions pertaining to free-lance players, shall undertake and provide for rules and regulations to be binding upon all producers with respect to free-lance players who are not of the extra classifications, but who do receive compensation of less than $150 per week, and this standing committee of producers-public and free-lance players shall effectuate any provisions of the code pertaining to free-lance players and shall interpret the

TECHNICIANS & WRITERS MENTIONED

PROVISIONS ON LABOR TO BE EXPLAINED NEXT

The compulsory labor provisions of the code in production will be explained in the second of this series of articles in which the legal phraseology of the production provisions of the code is being translated into a working language.

These labor provisions probably are more important at the moment than the trade practice clauses and provisions in the code which are intended to create fair competitive relations between producers.

terms of any provisions made for free-lance players, and shall supervise these provisions and shall receive and pass on any complaints and grievances made by free-lance players against producers or studios, and shall otherwise aid in effectuating the free-lance provisions, subject to review by the Administrator. All activities of this standing committee for free-lance players, or of any sub-committees appointed by it, may be subject to review by the Administrator.

Such standing committee for free-lance players, under the supervision of the Code Authority and/or the Administrator, shall make full investigation with respect to all working conditions of such free-lance players, and shall undertake and provide for, by the rules and regulations hereinabove provided for, with respect to hours of employment, rotation and distribution of work to such reasonable degree as may be possible and practicable, and minimum adequate compensation for such free-lance players.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR TECHNICIANS

A. PURPOSES

To draft further trade practices specifically to govern relations between producers or studios and technicians in production, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, and after giving notice, that such additional trade practice regulations should be adopted.

B. PERSONNEL

The producers or studios and the production technicians shall be entitled to equal representation, and although the code does not mention specifically the number of such representatives who shall be appointed to this special committee, it appears likely that the membership will consist of five producers or producers' representatives, to be appointed by the Code Authority and five production technicians, to be selected by the Administrator or Division Administrator from nominations submitted by production technicians in an equitable manner to be prescribed by the Administrator.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The clause creating this special committee of of studio mechanics of the socalled labor groups, of studio mechanics of the socalled labor groups, skilled or unskilled (electrical workers, property men, carpenters and the like), whose wages are specifically provided for in the code, but it does refer to production technicians such as cameramen, sound experts and the like.

The committee of producers and technicians shall not be a permanent or a standing committee, but shall be a special, temporary committee and shall be created only for the specific purpose of drafting additional fair trade practice regulations governing relations between producers and production technicians, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, and after giving notice, that such additional trade practice regulations should be adopted.

The operation of this committee shall not be superseded by the Code Authority's power to prescribe, after notice and hearing, any additional rules for trade practices. It appears, then, that the work of this special committee would take precedence over the Code Authority in the specific matter of drafting further trade practices governing the relations between producers and production technicians.

This special committee shall make findings of fact and shall make such recommendations to the Administrator as it may deem proper if the committee is unanimous, otherwise separate recommendations may be submitted by any number of committee members, or one set of recommendations may be submitted by each of the two groups of producers and production technicians, together with a report that the committee has disagreed.

The committee of producers and production technicians shall not hold any hearing or proceeding without due notice and a full and fair opportunity to all interested parties to appear and be heard.

A complete transcript of all testimony and arguments shall be made by the committee during all hearings and proceedings, and such transcript shall be certified by the committee to the Administrator, and the committee must accompany such certified transcript to the Administrator with the recommendations of the members of the committee, such recommendations also to be certified by the committee.

The Administrator shall approve, reject or modify such recommendations, or any of them, and may conduct such further investigations and hearings as to him seem necessary or advisable.

The order of the Administrator shall be final.

The committee, subject to the approval of the Administrator, shall have authority to require all producers to furnish such information as may be desired to effectuate the drafting of any such additional trade practice regulations.

The committee shall have power and authority to prescribe reasonable rules of procedure for determining all matters of dispute or controversy which may properly arise before such committee in connection with its work of drafting such additional trade practice regulations.

At the same time that the findings or recommendations and report of the committee shall be sent to the Administrator, such findings or recommendations and report shall be made public in such manner as may be determined by the Administrator. Since this clause was written, the Code Authority has decided that the motion picture trade press shall be the official medium for disseminating to the industry at large any information that is required to be made public.

D. GENERAL

The production section of the motion picture code contains many provisions for regulating relations between producers and the creative production workers. (These will be enumerated in detail in the third article of this series translating the production parts of the code, in a subsequent issue.) In addition to these specific regulations, the code recognizes the possibilities of the necessity of effectuating further trade practice regulations as changes in conditions or experience in administering the code indicate, and, because the code, like all others, has as its basic intentions the creation of fair competition and the establishment of fair trade practices governing the relations between employers and employees, the code creates several mediums which are empowered to draft and adopt any additional rules and regulations and trade practices that appear to be necessary or advisable. The President is one such medium. The Administrator, the NRA and the Code Authority are others. The Special Committee for Technicians, as described hereinabove, is another.

No such additional rules and regulations or trade practices may be effected, however, without a full hearing and notice to the interested parties or branches of the industry.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR WRITERS

A. PURPOSES

To draft trade practices specifically to govern relations between producers or studios and writers in production, if and when the Administrator determines, upon a fair showing, and after giving notice, that such additional trade practice regulations should be adopted.

B. PERSONNEL

The producers or studios and the writers shall be entitled to equal representation, and, although the code does not mention specifically the number of such representatives who shall be appointed to this special committee, it appears likely that the membership will consist of five producers or producers' representatives, to be appointed by the Code Authority, and five screen writers, to be selected by the Administrator or Division Administrator from nominations submitted by screen writers in an equitable manner to be prescribed by the Administrator.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

"Because the President believes that writers, authors, and dramatists are engaged in purely creative work," those production code provisions with respect to problems generally affecting unfair competitive methods for the services of writers, authors and dramatists were ordered by the President not to become effective with respect to such screen writers, dramatists and authors.

However, the clause creating the special committee for screen writers would, if the need arises, permit of the appointment of such a committee to draft any trade practice regulations necessary or advisable to govern relations between the producers and the screen writers, authors and dramatists.

The committee of producers and screen writers shall not, then, be a permanent or a standing committee, but shall be a special, temporary committee and shall be created only for the spe-

OLDEST HOUSE RUNNING

Quill Pen of Georgia's Governor In 1818 Gave the Savannah Its Start; Films Upset Tradition

A chill wind blew through the streets of Savannah, Georgia, one morning toward the end of the year. The date, exactly, was December 19, 1818. Governor Rabun, of Georgia, dipped a quill into his heavy brass inkwell, scrawled his name on a document before him—and thus began what has been called the oldest theatre in the United States continuously in operation since its founding, changed in structure but still occupying its original site.

That document was a charter, approved by the legislature, for the corporation to be known as Stockholders of the Savannah Theatre, and marked the culmination of efforts in that direction by public-spirited citizens of the city underway since 1816. On March 1, 1819, the first trustees were elected, including Alexander Telfair, James Morrison, J. P. Henry, James Bilbe and Peter Guerard. The city of Savannah subscribed for 20 shares at $4,000, while the par value of the stock, fixed by the charter, was $300 per share.

Deplored "Steeple" Hats

On Bull Street, facing Chippewa Square, a trust lot had been conveyed to the company. On this site the Savannah theatre was erected. Sharply critical was one "Sam Touchstone," writing in the Gazette of the opening night performance late in December, 1818, but critical more of the audience than of the comedy play, "The Soldier's Daughter," in several acts and numerous scenes. Bitterly did "Mr. Touchstone" complain of the headdress worn by the gentler sex in the audience, which, he freely declared, "might be mistaken for the steeple of the new brick church." Annoyed also was our critic with those patrons who caused the crackling of peanuts and the general rude conduct in the galleries that night.

The designer of the building is said to have been William Jay, responsible for many of the most beautiful architectural achievements of which the old Savannah could—and did—boast. A writer of the period, one "Peregrinus," described the building carefully. There were two rows of boxes, supported by sixteen castiron fluted columns, with gilt capitals and bases. Golden eagles and green wreaths on a white background decorated the lower tier, while a crimson pilaster with gold decoration was between the boxes.

Cooper Also There

Crimson draperies contrasted with the white ceilings. The box seats were covered with crimson and the pit seats boasted green, with orange velvet cushions. Fashions, in theatres as in other things, have indeed changed. The drop curtain, painted in far-off New York, was notable for its highly elaborate symbolical design of the muses, with the addition of figures of Ben Jonson, Colley Cibber, Shakespeare and some of his characters.

A farce, "Raising the Wind," followed "The Soldier's Daughter" at the Savannah, with players who came over from Charleston handling the roles, and headed by Mr. Phillips. He sang in no less than six operas, part of the company's repertoire, before he returned to Ireland, and his company continued at the theatre until the end of the season, April 5, 1820. The great tragedian, Thomas Althorpe Cooper, then in his prime, succeeded Mr. Phillips, but he made only a few appearances.

The first manager of the Savannah theatre was a Mr. Selfert, whose wife, an actress, entertained Mr. Selfert's patrons with performances of Lady Teazle, Juliet and other famed roles. The usual program nightly was a double-bill, with an opera and a farce, or a tragedy and a comedy. No mention is made of the admission price, and speculators, it is thought, had very little opportunity. Sharing honors on the program were two somewhat conspicuous playwrights popular at the time, one Sheridan, the other Shakespeare by name. There is definite, irrefutable evidence, also, that Mr. Phillips actually sang some popular melodies as well as the classical opera, for it is noted that one winter night in 1819, while the wind howled outside, he moved his audience deeply with the touching strains and lyrics of a notable ballad of the day, "May We Never Want a Friend Nor a Bottle to Give Him."

To the Savannah theatre, as to all things, came many changes in the long full century and more since that day when Governor Rabun of Georgia quilled his name on an act of the state legislature. War, fire, pestilence swept the community, but still the Savannah theatre stood. Physically it changed from time to time, as materials—and fashions—gave out. No longer is the legitimate drama enacted upon the beaten boards of that stage. Science, and the dramatic art which came in its wake, have replaced the drama of yesterday. Today, still crowded with tradition, the home of memories, the talking motion picture holds sway. Fred G. Weis is the Mr. Selfert of the moment, and still the Savannah theatre entertains the citizens of Savannah. Basically, only the medium has changed.

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Robert Armstrong, Dorothy Wilson—Made us a good Saturday program. Played Dec. 30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS QUEEN MURDER: Adolphe Menjou—Played this one one day. It did not do so good yet it's a fair picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 3.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FOG: Mary Brian, Donald Cook—Very ordinary, and they wanted extra money. Don't let them kid you. The scenes were all foggy.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: Rex, William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—Broke all kid records, and drew enough adults to help us pay for some of these so called specials. If your crowd is intelligent enough to enjoy westerns, get plenty of paper on this and make yourself some money. Our landlord would like to see us get 12 a year like this. Running time, 66 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—Extra business on 10 cent nite. Don't pass this up.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson—This will stand some advance ballyhoo because the title does not convey the true type of story to the patron. My bet is that had the title been "Apple Annie, or a Lady for a Day," it would have sold itself much better, and this is my tip to anyone playing it, to play up "Apple Annie." Played it too close to Christmas to make any money, but it is good. Running time, 97 minutes. Played Dec. 22-23.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young —A splendid entertainment. A little too sexy perhaps. I don't know why, but it was a flop at the box office even with extra advertising.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princes Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young —These sex pictures are driving my trade to their firesides. This is a great picture, and truly Mr. Borzage can be proud of the performances of all the cast but there are so many ways to entertain people without these "baby" situations. Business good Monday matinee, then the toboggan. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16-17.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

MASTER OF MEN: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—Very good pragram picture if you have Holt fans. In fact, it's one of Jack Holt's best pictures.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—A good performance by all of the cast. Plenty action and good story. However, my audience likes Tim best in a cowboy suit. Business good. Played Jan. 12-13.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—This is the cleanest, best acted, best directed and all around entertaining picture we have run in a long time. Tim McCoy better in this than any western he has made, was the opinion of our patrons. By all means, play it. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 11.—Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. Small town patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—A good picture of this kind. I bought it for a western. Better watch those or you'll get in bad with your western fans.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

RAIN OR SHINE: One picture stands out more prominently than all other Columbia's the last two years, and that one is "Rain or Shine." It was a typically true to life story and it made a hit. Some came three nights to see it. Why not make more of these types.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—This picture is a mighty good example of the real value of "What the Picture Did for Me." I booked it solely on "exhibitors' reports." Nearly every exhibitor made money with it and reported it very, very suggestive. I finally bought it, trusting to make some money, and that the customers wouldn't kick too much on the dirt. Result: third highest gross in 1933. Yes, it is very, very suggestive.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

WHIRLWIND, THE: Tim McCoy—This is another good western picture from Columbia. Full of action and thrills and sure to please the average western fans. In addition to the regular action of the western picture, this one adds a tough wrestling match and some good bronc riding and steer bulldogging. Play this and let your patrons tell you how good it is. Business very good. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 6.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

First National

GOODBYE AGAIN: Warren William, Joan Blondell—What a pity to waste such a cast on such. Warners must be forgiven, with so many consistently good pictures, for permitting such as this to come through. Drawing power, none.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Lyle Talbot—A good little picture, nothing big, but pleases well. Good for any date, especially a preview. Played Jan. 3-4.—Claud Thorp, Gem Theatre, Ryan, Okla. General patronage.

HEROES FOR SALE: Richard Barthelmess—What a pity to kill a star like he once was. Pass it up. Sordid. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Jan. 3-4. —G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

I LOVED A WOMAN: Edward G. Robinson, Kay Francis—Mighty good entertainment. Well acted. Holds attention from beginning to end. Of course, it depends on type of picture one likes. Had one party say it was the best picture he ever saw. Played Jan. 2-3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Frankie Darro, Rochelle Hudson—This is a great picture for both young and old and should teach a good lesson to every young boy or girl in the country. Every father and mother in the country should take their children to see this picture. The trailer from Warner Brothers sold this picture for us. I cannot understand why every producer does not make his own trailers. Best business on Wednesday in two years. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—A pleasing picture. Good business Christmas Eve and night. I have seen better roles for Gaynor. Henry Garat's English is hard to understand, and there are lots of better looking and acting troupers walking the streets of Hollywood. Played Dec. 24-25.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ARIZONA TO BROADWAY: Joan Bennett, James Dunn—A pleasing program picture that will satisfy. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Nov. 17-18.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter, Helen Vinson, Warner Oland—Trite run of the mill stuff. Baxter deserves better than this one. The old story, wives abroad, falling for the charmer, husband to the rescue and so it goes. Just another that leaves no ripple in the public imagination.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, Charles Rogers—This is the first time I have ever reported twice on a show. I sent my other report in a day or two after running, but have had so many excellent comments on it since that it is deserving of special mention. Any exhibitor that did not use this (it is on last year's group) should set it in on his best nights. This is one picture that will please, immensely, every patron in your house.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

DEVIL'S IN LOVE, THE: Victor Jory, Loretta Young—Loretta Young is well liked in my theatre and I played this picture with "Life in the Raw," which I shouldn't, because they are both very good. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Jan. 4-5.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Extra business and everyone pleased. I think the story from which this was taken created extra business.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

F. P. 1: Conrad Veidt, Jill Esmond—Here is one foreign picture that is OK. It has a lot of action, and the idea of the floating platform in the middle of the Atlantic is of interest to everyone, because it will soon be a reality. It lacks a great deal of being a four star picture, but still it's worth running, and will please. Played Jan. 12-13.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Story is good. Censored; hurt picture in spots. Business good. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Our patrons liked it. Good entertainment. Played Jan. 7-8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—My people didn't like this as well as some of her previous efforts. It will get by, though.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronge.

I AM SUZANNE: Lilian Harvey—A mighty fine production. A little slow getting started but mighty fine entertainment of the lighter type. Was afraid of the satisfaction to the male (adult) element. However, they liked it. It was unusual in its theme. Did not draw but guess this Harvey girl is not well enough known yet. However, those who do know her like her. Running time, 101 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

I AM SUZANNE: Lilian Harvey, Gene Raymond —If it is the unusual that will get you business that picture is "Suzanne." Jesse Lasky has bold ideas, and this picture may hit. It is puppets that do most of the dancing and inasmuch as these are rarely seen in this country, the picture has a chance of getting business. The music is catchy and there is some good chorus work in the picture, and the puppet work is good. The kids will go for plenty. If there was any criticism it was that there was a little too much of it in the picture. But it is different. We had a few walkouts on it; it drags in a few places. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—While it is a western, it is good entertainment for anyone who likes a good lively show, with an appeal that makes it good for any small theatre. Played Dec. 25.— George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—Average Zane Grey western which seemed to please all western fans Running time, 62 minutes. Played Dec. 8-9. —J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—Did you ever see a George O'Brien flop? Well, I never did. This one is a nice western picture. Well done. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Jan. 4-5.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor —Something different, having to do with the kidnap racket. Tracy is always good.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY and MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—Very nice musical shows. Good. Fair business and customers pleased. Watch out for "I Am Suzanne." It's a frost. However, if your people like puppet shows, it's okay. Too bad to spoil Lilian Harvey's record with this.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—One hour and thirteen minutes of real entertainment, and what a splendid actress is Lilian Harvey. Supporting cast good. Competition from weather kept me from making money, but no fault of the picture. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Jan. 8-9.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—If you desire some nice sweet musical comedy you can't do wrong on this one. It can stand a build-up with the catchy theme song "Gather Lip Rouge While You May" and this will put over the new English star in the picture, for she certainly pleases, both with looks and voice. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 27-28. —Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MY WEAKNESS and MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey—Very nice musical shows. Good. Fair business and customers pleased.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

OLSON'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel—A dandy slap-stick comedy. Pleased all on dime nite.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—A very sweet picture, the ladies love it, but it is more of a parlor society drama than the light comedy one is led to believe, so does not go over with the children. If your patrons like Gaynor, you can sell it by the star, but the customers here were not very enthusiastic over the story on the whole. Fair business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Des. 15-16.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Norman Foster, Marian Nixon—A picture with such drama that in spots you will feel tears trickling down your cheeks. It's a change in pictures that lots of your patrons will love. Played with a Charley Chase comedy and went over big.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Marian Nixon, Norman Foster—This picture has the things that make a really great picture. Of course, if they look for a wishy washy love story, this is not it. But the ending will be so much to their liking that they will forget the sad part of it. Drawing power real good. The best midweek business in several weeks.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborohood patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Colleen Moore, Spencer Tracy—I class this one as OK. Put on a beauty contest second night, and they all came. Running time, 90 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—A good western to average business. Played Dec. 8-9.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHANGHAI MADNESS: Spencer Tracy, Fay Wray—Have read adverse reports on this, but I thought it a very good picture for one day, Saturday or Pal nights. Our people liked it. Played Jan. 9-10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHANGHAI MADNESS: Spencer Tracy, Fay Wray—This picture will please much better in the sticks than in the cities. Plenty of action. Running time, 72 mnutes. Played Dec. 29-30.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—An offscreen voice tells most of this story and it is a very good picture for any Friday and Saturday. The horse is wonderful. It is not strictly a western. Rather a story of the horse that resembles the Old Black Beauty that was released years ago. But the picture will please if they like animals. The story that goes with it is good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley—A horse picture, and a dandy. Play this up if you have the action fans.—C. V. Hunerberg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—One of Will's best. He always draws good here, and this will bring them back next time. By all means play it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Jan. 9. —Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. Small town patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster—Not the very best. But a good picture. Best draw the first night showing. Name of this picture attracted attention in lobby, and the posters I used were very attractive also. That got them in the first night showing. But the picture, we all know, must have class to draw big second and third nights. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons. Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster Drew a few who had read the story. Men walked out on it. The old, old story of a rich old man with a young wife. Just more talk about having babies. Another two days lost for us. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 8-9.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Freuler

DEADWOOD PASS: Tom Tyler—One of my severest critics said it was the worst he ever saw. However, it got them in on the Saturday before Christmas, which is a tough spot for any picture. Played Dec. 22-23.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MGM

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Madge Evans, Otto Kruger—You cannot find much fault on this one. It's full of good looking women and they please my men folks, and they do things that please the female folks. I'd say we have what we want in this one. —Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Madge Evans—Just fair and subject matter old. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Jan. 10-11.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—When you see this one you will be disappointed and you will never want to see another like it. We never can get people to come to our theatres playing pictures like this. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 28. —Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Great. As nice a show as you ever want. Grand entertainment. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Jan. 12-13.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Good enough for any theatre is what I think of this one. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—It is just Ed Wynn. No support, no story, just the Fire Chief in his regular line. We played it one night, Saturday, with strong shorts, and got away with it. Those that like Wynn will like it, and those that do not will not like it. Too bad they did not spend some money on this besides Wynn.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—A splendid show. Will please everybody. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Jan. 7-9.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—I haven't played a better picture than this one. You will do your part when you play it. Give it the NRA signature and call it the four star class picture. It's worthy of the highest class of boost. Running time, 85 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DAY OF RECKONING: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—This is very good entertainment. Miss Una Merkel is splendid as well as Stuart Erwin. Would not recommend for your best days. Played Jan. 4-5.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Jean Harlow, Wallace Berry—This picture would make a number of "Hollywoods on Parade." Each star has their bit to do, and do it well. Running Metro's super-specials with me is just like my game of poker. After I put up my money I struggle to get it back. And I didn't on "Dinner at Eight." Running time, 87 minutes. Played Jan. 10-11-12.—C. H. McCroskey, Allied Theatre, Dermott, Ark. Small town patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—I do not know what to say about this picture. We got a fairly well filled cash register from the two nights run on it. You won't see dress-up folks in it and you won't be bothered with much music; no songs and no dance halls. But you will get enough of talk to last you till the cows come home. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART: Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Thought this much better than "Tugboat Annie." Seemed to please all that saw it. Played Dec. 31.-Jan. 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante—Fair. The Baron, Durante and Ted Healy and stooges can do better. Plenty of laughs, but after 25 minutes or 30 minutes becomes tiresome. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 19-20.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young—Nothing more than a program picture. Business not up to the average. Ricardo Cortez plays his usual role. If you can get them in, it will please 50 per cent. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Jan. 9-10.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter—This picture will please in parts but there are parts in it that are slow. Nothing but light fun, no feeling to it, nothing real, just a picture. Running time, 91 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Myrna Loy, Max Baer, Walter Huston, Jack Dempsey—A very fine piece of entertainment. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Jan. 1-4.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Jack Dempsey, Myrna Loy, Walter Huston, Max Baer—Well, it is a big boxing picture along the line we have seen before. It has got so now we cannot make this class of pictures a good draw for our box office the second night. Shoot it big for the first night showing and send it back home. Keep up hopes and smile for better pictures just around the corner. Running time, nine reels. Played Jan. 9.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SHOULD LADIES BEHAVE?: Alice Brady, Lionel Barrymore—There is a lot of entertainment in this picture. My patrons liked it very much. Alice Brady talks a little too much, but it's a good story and will please in large and small towns alike. Played Jan. 12-13.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SHOULD LADIES BEHAVE?: Alice Brady, Lionel Barrymore, Conway Tearle—If you want your patrons talked into boredom, this is your picture. Dialogue, and that is all. While there are a few laughs and it is supposed to be comedy-drama, the laughs do not make up for the lack of any kind of action. It is smartly produced and that is about all. It will flop the second day, or anyway, it did for us, very badly. We had a number walk out on it, and that is not so good. It is not a small town picture by any means. Too slow.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SOLITAIRE MAN: Herbert Marshall, Elizabeth Allan—This one failed to register at my theatre. When they do not click at the box office we lose money, and yet we have to pay for them just the same. Pictures like this one make a theatre man say, well I would sell out and quit if I could. We little theatre men have lots of money invested putting in the finest equipment money can buy and you know if we live we must have the best pictures. Ask Mr. Kuykendall why he sold some of his theatres. Part of it, I bet, was bad pictures and that would be his answer Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons. Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady, Franchot Tone—It is a wonderful picture but we got a bad print, and did not satisfy those that came. Running time, nine reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—Shame on you, Leo. Terrible flop. Barely brought film rental. Another cat in the bag. Tell us about the next one, please.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins—Here is one of the best pictures of the year with Lionel Barrymore at his best. It is a comedy and drama of rural American life and is clean entertainment for the entire family. The story, acting and direction are perfect. The excellent supporting cast includes Franchot Tone and Stuart Erwin. Picture excellent, but business for one day only fair. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Jan. 11. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper. After the first night I stuck my head out of the door to see if they had all gone home. I expected anything because I know they did not get their money's worth.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace

Beery—Yes, this was truly a credit to Leo's efforts. A very good picture and a good crowd.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy—Not up to expectations. Fair comedy. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Dec. 24.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

Majestic

HEARTS OF HUMANITY: Jean Hersholt, Jackie Searl—This picture has good story and cast, but poor directing and recording. Ran it one day, Wednesday, Jan. 10, and made almost enough to pay the usher. Running time, 65 minutes.—R. H. Russ, Camera Theatre, Stillwater, Okla. Small town and college patronage.

Paramount

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—Very finely done from a story and production standpoint but not satisfactory to adult trade. I did better than expected but believe it was because it had powerful child appeal and I purposely did not run a kids' matinee with the result that parents came at night with the children.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Jack Oakie, Richard Arlen, Bing Crosby—One of the worst box-office flops I ever played. With ideal winter weather conditions on a three-day run, this did not do nearly average two-day business. Several remarked that they didn't care for it. I think it is very much over-rated, and a program price is every bit it is worth. One grand disappointment!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Fredric March, Gary Cooper, Miriam Hopkins—Who would have ever thought of casting March and Cooper in a comedy? Can you imagine "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" jumping out of the jack-in-the-box. These stars are too good to use in comedy, as they are both out of place. The picture is just fair entertainment but draws a little above average because of the cast. Edward Everett Horton is very good, and the story is okay. It's just an average picture with a splendid cast. Played Jan. 14-15.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Gary Cooper, Frederic March, Miriam Hopkins—Great. A dandy. Spicy, but no one will object. Done in a nice way. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Jan. 14-16.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Gary Cooper, Frederic March, Miriam Hopkins—Here is something really new in pictures. Your patrons may not think so much of a girl who loves two men, but they will rave about the brilliant dialogue and masterful direction. Gary Cooper and Fredric March as comedians will bring the house down. Business good. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Jan. 14-15-16.—R. H. Russ, Camera Theatre, Stillwater, Okla. Small town and college patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—We have never been able to put the Four Marx Brothers over. Struck the worst weather of the year and did very well, considering. Everybody that saw it liked it, especially the kids.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419: James Dunn—One of the best program pictures made by Paramount last year. The story plot is exceptionally good and just about the right amount of comedy mixed in to make this an unusually entertaining picture. It is certainly worth subbing for a new show for exhibitors that did not play it last season.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419: James Dunn—Nothing big, but it pleased a one-night crowd. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—A program picture with a so-so cast that drew better than some of the so-called specials and pleased 100 per cent. Don't pass it up. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Charles Farrell—Disappointed. Not well received. Subject matter poor. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Marguerite Churchill, Charles Farrell—Well acted, but tell me who wants a mess of stuff like this. Did not please and did not draw. Good actors placed in bad spots. It can't do much for you.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen—Did not draw at all. I think our farmers are so full of their own tobacco problems that they were not interested in those of the wheat farmers. However, it is an extra good picture with Elizabeth Patterson and Roscoe Ates as the hired girl and hired man supplying tip top comedy.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen—Stress the comedy in this and take the sting out of the "Hell." A fair program picture, but short, so bolster it up with good musical shorts, etc. Running time, 68 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West, Cary Grant—Mae West has real personality, and does perfect acting, but more than that, she has box office plus. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Dec. 4-5-6-7 to capacity house.—R. H. Russ, Camera Theatre, Stillwater, Okla. Small town and college patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, W. C. Fields—A musical comedy with a good cast. Sub-zero weather ruined our business, but the picture pleased. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Jan. 1.—C. A. Gordon, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—A fine production and a splendid vehicle for Cooper. Not a regular western. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Dec. 20-21.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Here is a dandy Saturday picture. Grownups as well as children will enjoy it. Clean. Played Jan. 6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: George Raft, Clive Brook, Helen Vinson—An excellent picture, taken from every angle. Good entertainment. Helen Vinson one of the most pleasing feminine stars that has ever graced our screen. Business 90%. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1-2.—R. H. Russ, Camera Theatre, Stillwater, Okla. Small town and college patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper—You can't want a better picture than this. The role fits Gary to a "T," and Fay Wray and Frances Fuller are outstanding. Played it Christmas week to fair business and pleased audiences. Running time, 85 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper, Fay Wray—A pleasing, slow-running, sleepy story built around nothing. Would not please over fifty per cent. It's not the kind. Has nothing outstanding. Gary Cooper good.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—A real show. Will suit 90 per cent of the cash customers. Business off, but no fault of the picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March—Saved this for Christmas. First night business was fair, but with 20 below on both the second and third nights, the final gross was very, very bad. It is a great production but will not please the majority. Several remarked that it had too many cruel scenes. I trust that Paramount's class "A" pictures this year will go over better than they did here last season.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers, Jack Haley—This is another musical with comedy and drama, slightly different from the usual type of musicals. The interpretation of Sally Rand's fan dance at the end is elaborate and will create much talk. There are many popular song hits in this. Good entertainment for the whole family and will please any average audience. Played two days to good business and pleased about 90 per cent. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Jan. 8-9.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—This is a big picture done in a big way. I doubt if a big part of movie patrons are ready to accept nudity in the manner shown in this. True, it is a marble statue, but none the less the conservative element will be somewhat shocked with the nudity element in this. Aside from that it is holding drama with a happy ending. Drawing power average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—Drew well and pleased all. All any showman asks. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Jan. 1-2.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—Proved a good Christmas attraction. Folks liked it very much. More story than most musicals, but also enough music to satisfy those who want it. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Dec. 25-26.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, Cliff Edwards, June Knight—Very good little musical with some extremely funny comedy. Fair busines. Played Jan. 12-13.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Charles Bickford, Judith Allen—An interesting, timely picture, well produced. Went over nicely, but got no money. It had no big stars. A director's name don't mean a big lot at box office.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

THREE-CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen, Mary Boland—A half-crazy family, and a mama who plays the stock market. Good comedy, all nonsense. Pleased the majority of those who saw it. Business 100%. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Dec. 23-24-25.—R. H. Russ, Camera Theatre, Stillwater, Okla. Small town and college patronage.

THREE-CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen—This picture will not create talk, but is a satisfactory program offering. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Jan. 12-13.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott—Very good. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Dec. 30.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Zane Grey and Paramount together make a combination hard to beat. This is excellent and our Saturday night crowd ate it up.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Entertaining western from Zane Grey tale. Don't think it had any more thrills than the original silent version, but it pleased. Always glad to see the old-timers who helped put this over—Harry Carey, Raymond Hatton, Monte Blue and Noah Beery. Running time, six reels. Played Jan. 12-13.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—Here is a prize package in the amusement line. It has practically everything one could ask of a good movie. Go after it, bring them in, the picture will deliver what your patrons want. Drawing power a little above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston, Buster Crabbe—Splendid. It has everything. One of the best that we have ever run. You can lay to this one with all you have. A swell story. Plenty of action and produced right up to the minute. They don't come any better in westerns than this one. There is an innovation; as the characters come onto the screen there is the name of the player and his character designated at the bottom. Frankly, I think that this is a good idea. I know that many people are puzzled as to who the cast is in a lot of pictures. Someone who is mentioned in the cast but is new to them and they like to know who they are when their work stands out. Esther Ralston is back and did a nice piece of character work and she can ride like nobody's business.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston—A mighty fine bunch of entertainment. Well acted and directed. Pleased about all of the folks. For a western it was a dandy.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—Another good drawing card. A little different slant on an outdoor picture with Kentucky feud story. Running time, 65 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—Very good. Two good dance numbers and of course Bing Crosby croons. Bad weather cut attendance, sleet storm. Seems one gets the bad breaks when they have a good picture and good weather with the clucks.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Judith Allen—Good story and grand comedy. Drew very well considering that all tobacco markets in the state are closed. The farmers commented on Judith Allen. Running time, 75 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby—Nice musical. Good business for the time of year. Played Dec. 15-16.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin, Raymond Hatton—A cross between a Zane Grey western and a Mack Sennett comedy. Good entertainment, and pleased more than the average. Running time, 59 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—R. H. Russ, Camera Theatre, Stillwater, Okla. Small town and college patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Dvorak—Our patrons thought this clever and entertaining. Was free from objectionable, boudoir, etc. Played Jan. 6-8.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Principal

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—The picture really is a serial, but the first one comes in eight reels and is supposed to be a feature. Then there are eight chapters that run from there on. I ran the first one four days and broke all box office records since I went into sound, December 11, 1930, and next chapter held up equally as well. Don't see how a person can help but make money if they advertise same. I gave away 1,000 Tarzan Bars the first two days, and it is sure a money-maker.—Ned Tweeden, Princess Theatre, Fargo, N. D. General patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—Drew better than expected, and seemed to please.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

AGGIE APPLEBY, MAKER OF MEN: Wynne Gibson, Charles Farrell—Just fair. A little rough for the average female patronage. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Dec. 13-14.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding—Where do the four stars come in? There is no connection between the ratings given in Liberty and the box office receipts. Give us comedy, music and action.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne—Very good. Great for women. Had on an average two women to every man. Great business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Jan. 17-18.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett—Not up to the standard for Constance Bennett. It would have been much more satisfactory if I had got a good print. It may be that Constance Bennett doesn't go over so good here. Had few satisfactory comments. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Jan. 2-3.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

CROSS FIRE: Tom Keene—Just a good mixture of everything that makes a good picture for a small town—comedy, fighting, action and melodrama. Played Dec. 30.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—These boys are still good, but they haven't any chance to demonstrate in this picture. It's a lot of half-baked gags that don't get over. Bert and Robert better get some better stories soon or they will be through before they realize it. Played Jan. 1.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—A very good picture, and Ann Harding and William Powell make a good co-starring attraction. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 5-6.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond—Great entertainment and pleased our people very much. Music and photography the best of the musicals. Has plenty of novelty and action. Get behind it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GOODBYE LOVE: Charles Ruggles, Verree Teasdale—Mediocre picture, only partially redeemed by work of Ruggles. Double edged "wisecracks." A wasted piece of film and a wasted evening for the patrons. Played Jan. 5-6.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING KONG: Robert Armstrong—Picture greatly exaggerated, but that was only secondary. It brought the business. People are looking for something unusual these days and this was one of them.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—The masterpiece of the year. We never played a picture that so universally pleased. We are playing it back a second time. Don't pass this up.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Very fine and well liked, especially by women. Brought out a lot of people who seldom attend the theatre. Running time, 115 minutes. Played Dec. 25-29.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—The popularity of the book brought out good business, and the picture pleased about 80 per cent. Well directed picture. However, Miss Hepburn's voice is terrible to me. Running time, 107 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8-9.—C. H. McCroskey, Allied Theatre, Dermott, Ark. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Almost broke the house record. The grandmothers will come out with one ticket and four kids under six to see it, and all the women folk and girls will rave, but the men won't be crazy about it, but since the whole family is going, they go too. One of the least expensive in advertising we ever ran. Just tell them when and where—they know more about the picture than you do. Held up fine for four days. Running time, 115 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—Very fine production. Everyone seemed to like it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 22-23.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—This is not a small town picture, and in spite of all the advertising Hepburn is getting, did not draw the average gross, and heaven knows the average is low enough. The small town exhibitor should have a 50 per cent concellation privilege on every contract in order to take out the very numerous pictures unsuitable for the "sticks."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—My people are getting very critical. A year or two ago they would have called this good, but they criticized it quite a bit. Played Jan. 14-15.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—A nice, entertaining picture of light comedy-romance. Pleased, but had no draw.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding—This was one of our best liked pictures. Romance, lovely clothes, splendid acting and everything that goes to make up a modern love story made it thoroughly enjoyable.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—A fair picture and a fair crowd. Give us more comedies and more musicals. Give us pictures closer to home. Give us more pictures of the Wheeler and Woolsey type, clean, wholesome entertainment, but not the type of "So This Is Africa."—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

United Artists

BITTER SWEET: Anna Neagle, Fernand Graavey—Take my advice. If you're lucky enough to have it under contract, pay for it and hand it back. First night 75 per cent of my patrons walked out. Just a waste of film. Hope my patrons forgive me. Running time, 93 minutes.—Margaret R. Vandenberg, Crescent Theatre, Grand Haven, Mich. General patronage.

SEVEN CONTRIBUTORS START THIS WEEK

Seven—count 'em, seven—new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" make their reportorial bow in the department this week. From Montana to Virginia and from Philadelphia to Oklahoma come these latest exhibitor reporters. They are:

Perry L. Lessey, Diamond theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.; R. H. Russ, Camera theatre, Stillwater, Okla.; Ned Tweeden, Princess theatre, Fargo, N. D.; Margaret R. VandenBerg, Crescent theatre, Grand Haven, Mich.; J. C. Darst, Dante theatre, Dante, Va.; H. O. Ekern, Rex theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont.; and C. V. Hunerberg, Princess theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa.

Hunerberg's letterhead carried the following: "No depression here. Still alive and healthy. We can't show all the pictures so we show only the best."

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper—A wonderful, fine picture and drawing power good second and third night. Running time, nine reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Jackie Cooper, Wallace Beery, George Raft—A natural. Has plenty of rough and tumble action, and with three stars like Beery, Raft and Cooper, what more do the patrons want for their money. There is something wrong if you don't go over the top with this one. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Dec. 18-19.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A EYHOLE: Constance Cummings, Russ Columbo, Paul Kelly—Well, it is O.K. Lots of good things in it. Give it two stars and pass it on. It will click three nights good at your box office. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman, Elissa Landi—It's a picture, one star playing a double part. But it drew a fair crowd for me. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman, Elissa Landi—Ronald does some great dual role acting in this picture, but it was just a little sophisticated for this district and especially Christmas holidays, so that we didn't do anything extra with it. Suit the large city houses better than the small suburban houses, unless you are in a classy residential suburb where the people appreciate highbrow stories. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Dec. 25-26.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PRIVATE LIFE OF HENRY VIII, THE: Charles Laughton—Wonderfully acted and wonderfully photographed. In fact, a great picture from a production standpoint. Some liked it and some did not. Not much drawing power in a small town.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RAIN: Joan Crawford—With Joan Crawford losing her drawing power, and being so old, this was a flop here, also we were in the middle of a three weeks' overdose of rain, so the people were naturally fed up on rain in general and the title may have been against it. Running time, 94 minutes. Played Dec. 20-21.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—A very good production that proved to be very entertaining to our people. Not a big picture but good for the average town patrons. Played Jan. 6.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris—Positively the best audience picture I have exhibited. It has everything, and if by chance there is anyone who does not like this picture, take it from me, they are screwy. Chester Morris does himself some real acting in this, the whole cast, in fact. It is a real picture. Big enough for any house.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight, Neil Hamilton—A lightweight musical comedy. Fair biz. Played Dec. 17-18.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Another great audience satisfying comedy from Universal. They like Summerville and Zasu Pitts.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Gave this a tough midweek date and it drew them in. The moral of this opera seems to be that if a guy is old enough, ugly enough and rich enough, it is all right to shake him down for a hundred grand. Slim Summerville better go on an 18-day diet or some of these days he is going to be Fat Summerville. Played Jan. 9-10.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Two good performances being ruined by too many productions. They do their part, but too much of anything gorges, and my customers are getting foundered on this pair. Played Jan. 17-18.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—These stars always get the dough. By far the best drawing card of the season. Long live Summerville and Pitts.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Did good business on this one. First one of the Summerville and Pitts team. It's just a picture. Nothing extra about it. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Jan. 1-2.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carrillo—Well, it is really good. But like all others it seems too much of a mockery, too much make-believe. They turn it all into fun. You cannot get them to thrill you. No melody, no feeling to them. They come in the theatre, see it, go out and forget it. Nothing in this kind of picture to give them a heartache, to make them want to see it over again. Running time, eight reels. Played Jan. 10.—Walter Odom & Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Leo Carrillo, Mary Brian—This picture has everything to please any kind of patrons. Excellent show with plenty of action, comedy and everything necessary to make it a good production. Played Dec. 16.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale, Donna Damerell—The radio stars, and what a flop. Put it on your off night, and be 'way off when they go out. —C. V. Hunerburg, Princess Theatre, Parkersburg, Iowa. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts —On account of a bad print on the first showing, I brought this back and did a satisfactory business on a bargain night. This is easily the best picture so far turned out by this popular combination.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—Played on Saturday and Sunday and the only "football" picture ever to gross expenses. "Mighty fine picture," they all said.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—Good football picture. Business just so-so. Played Dec. 29-30.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SECRET OF THE BLUE ROOM, THE: Lionel Atwill, Paul Lukas, Gloria Stuart—A good mystery story. Drew well and pleased us and our patrons. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 6-7.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

S. O. S. ICEBERG: Rod La Rocque, Gibson Rowland—Years ago "Uncle Carl" used the slogan, "Use the brains God gave you." Looks like the grand old man forgot that slogan or maybe his office staff never heard of it or they would not have released this picture during the zero and sub-zero season. Picture okay of its kind, but what little chance it had at the box-office went aglimmering with near-zero weather whereas it would have done a whole lot better in hot weather and helped our cooling plants cool 'em off. And now comes Metro with "Eskimo." —Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard, Ruth Hall —Visualizing the world's popular cowboy song into celluloid, Ken Maynard dominates the western region with his finest outdoor accomplishment since his entrance in the motion picture field. The story centers chiefly around wild horse habitat with battles royal between the breed for supremacy of the mesa, and contains a human angle chuck full of action, uproarious comedy, with a touch of good western. Music which will add to the appeal of all entertainment seekers of the outdoor field. Ruth Hall holds the feminine spotlight with her usual top notch performance with an able cast supporting. This undoubtedly is the finest western material Universal has released in years. One hour of guaranteed clean cut entertainment. Universal has achieved further success and are on their way to another big year of progress in motion picture entertainment. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 12.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

TERROR TRAIL: Tom Mix—This very good western drew the best bargain night business I have had for several months. Played the same week as "College Humor" and on a Wednesday night did more than twice as much business as "College Humor" did on Sunday night. "Strange as it seems" or "believe it or not."—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Warner

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck—A very good picture, several favorable comments, no kicks on this picture. Just a real good evening's entertainment. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1-2.—Claud Thorp, Gem Theatre, Ryan, Okla. General patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—A very elaborate picture. Personally I did not like it as well as "Forty-second Street" or "Gold Diggers of 1933." I ran this in very bad weather and therefore no extra business. Played Jan. 7-8-9.—Claud Thorp, Gem Theatre, Ryan, Okla. General patronage.

FORTY-SECOND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels—This is an excellent musical picture and seemed to please very well. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Dec. 1-2.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William—A very good musical picture with an excellent cast, good story, good dancing, good music, beautiful settings, but still it lacked that certain something which "Forty-second Street" had. Running time, 98 minutes. Played Dec. 29-30.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—A good western with plenty of action and comedy. Played Jan. 16-17. —Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Although this is an old picture, it was very satisfactory and pleased the majority. The sound and photography okay as well as story and acting. This picture should go over good in any small town. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell—Fair picture. Not much business. Played Dec. 10-11.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LIFE OF JIMMY DOLAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Fair picture. Fair business. Played Jan. 7-8.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy, Bette Davis—Although this picture is old it is an excellent one and seemed to be liked by practically everyone. Played Dec. 15-16.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ALL'S WET THAT ENDS WET: World of Sport —A very good sport reel with plenty of action.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT DAZE: Smith and Dale—A better title would have been "Fire Sale," with the director firing the alleged comics before the picture started.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN TENTS: Smith and Dale—Positively terrible.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MICKEY'S TENT SHOW: Mickey McGuire—Clever as well as entertaining. One of the few McGuires that is good. Clever Mae West gag. Good for all classes. Running time, 17 minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MICKEY'S TENT SHOW: Mickey McGuire—A great two-reel comedy for Saturday night.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

STRANGE CASE OF POISON IVY: Sunrise Comedies—Again Columbia gives the public another comedy, and poor is hardly the word to express this one. If you have seen this you will agree with me. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Educational

BEANSTALK JACK: Terry-toons—A good short anywhere you put it.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BOY, OH BOY! Andy Clyde—Andy Clyde's are as good as any they make. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. C. Darst, Dante, Dante, Va. General patronage.

GIT ALONG LITTLE WIFIE: Taylor Holmes—Just fair. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LEAVE IT TO DAD: George Bickel, Johnny Harron, Fern Emmett, Jane Dale—Although players are unknown here, it went over in good shape. Several good laughs. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIDSUMMER MUSH: Charley Chase—About on a par with others. Good. Running time, two reels. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WILD ELEPHINKS: Popeye the Sailor—Good. Up to standard. Running time, one reel.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Fox

ADVENTURES OF THE NEWSREEL CAMERAMAN: My patrons like them. Newsreel clips. Treat of a complete and different thrill subject each time. Running time, ten minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MAGIC CARPET SERIES: The only scenics worth running, if you must run scenics.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MOVIE TINTYPE SERIES: Terrible—too long. Paramount's Screen Souvenirs have several oldtime subjects to the reel, but ten minutes of a 1910 Edison drama drive people nuts. Not old enough to be really funny, either. Running time, ten minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MGM

BACKS TO NATURE: Thelma Todd, Patsy Kelly —Here is a comedy with plenty of good laughs. These girls are very good.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

BEAUTY AND THE BUS: Todd and Kelly—Good comedies are so scarce that it is a pleasure to get one like this. Is entitled to a good spot on your program.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Ted Healy and Stooges —Very funny. Feature this, you won't regret it. Good dance trio in this subject. Healy and stooges are a great combination. Running time, 18 minutes. —Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—Chuck full of laughs from start to finish. Just a dandy comedy. If you have a weak feature put this with it and you will get by. It's a riot.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—A good comedy. Lots of laughs and that's what we want.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FLIP THE FROG SERIES: They please as well as Mickey Mouse.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

FREE WHEELING: Our Gang—The Gang up to some new tricks that register 100 per cent with both young and old alike. The trick taxi in this is good for a few laughs by itself. Running time, 20 minutes. —William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

HAPPY WARRIORS: Oddities—Very good Oddity. Plenty of laughs with Pete Smith. Clever reel. Running time, nine minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Pitts and Todd—A fair comedy, but I've seen better Pitts and Todd comedies than this one. Running time, 19 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MR. BRIDE: Charley Chase—For a Chase comedy this is poor and too suggestive to the point of being vulgar. Had some customers who objected to our showing such a comedy. Running time, 19 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B.C. Neighborhood patronage.

NERTSERY RHYMES: Musical Comedies—The best of the Colortone Reviews so far. This one is a riot of beauty and comedy. Give it your preferred time, and if you have not played it, go back and pick it up. Ted and his Stoogies furnish the comedy and the girls set the balance.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NERTSERY RHYMES: Musical Comedies—This is one of the best musical comedy shorts we have had the pleasure of witnessing. 100 per cent entertainment. Running time, 18 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PLAY BALL: Willie Whopper—A good cartoon.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TAXI BARONS: Taxi Boys—Fair comedy, but the patrons are not over-enthusiastic about these Taxi Boys comedies, and they will have to be much better before they will like them. Running time, 18 minutes. —William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

THUNDERING TAXIS: Taxi Boys—A fair Taxi Boys comedy, using a few more old tried and true comedians in this one to put it over. Running time, 18 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

AROUND THE CALENDAR: Grantland Rice Sportlights—A single reel sport that makes a good filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HENRY'S RADIO SHOW: Lanny Ross, Annette Hanshaw—A swell one-reeler. Many stayed to see it a second time.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN HENRY'S RADIO SHOW: Lanny Ross, Annette Hanshaw, Don Voorhees—An extra good reel of various radio stars doing their stuff. Went over fine. Running time, 11 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KENNEL KINGS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—An excellent sport reel that will please all dog lovers, and who does not like a dog?—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MEET THE CHAMP: Eugene Pallette—Mostly funny.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT: Betty Boop, Rubinoff and Band—I consider this the most outstanding cartoon I've seen in months. Not only will the people who enjoy good music enjoy the way this overture is played, but the cartoon drawings are unusually clever also. Please, Paramount, why can't you and Mr. Rubinoff combine on "Poet and Peasant," "Barber of Seville," "Merry Wives of Windsor" and other overtures. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIALS: Just about like Pathe Reviews, some are good, others only fair.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL (No. 4): Just the average pictorial.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PLEASE: Bing Crosby—Very good comedy with just enough singing. They don't want to make Crosby too common, however, or he will lose his drag in features. Running time, two reels.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

POPEYE THE SAILOR: Betty Boop Cartoon—No better cartoon on the market. Kids eat it up. Running time, eight minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS (No. 7): These old-time reminders are always good for a few laughs and the patrons go for them every time, no matter what the rest of the bill may be. Running time, ten minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SEASIN'S GREETINKS: Popeye the Sailor—Popeye is running Mickey Mouse a close race with our people. This the best one so far. Play it on Sunday.—C. L. Niles, Theatre, Anamosa, Oowa. General patronage.

SEASIN'S GREETINKS: Popeye the Sailor—Another good Popeye cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WALKING THE BABY: George Burns, Gracie Allen—Where this is liked it will go. About the same as their other releases. Running time, nine minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N.D. Small town patronage.

WATER LURE: Grantland Rice Sportlights—Another sport that makes a good filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WATER LURE: Grantland Rice Sportlights—Grantland Rice Sportlight of swimming, diving, surfboat riding and other water sports. Very entertaining. Running time, ten minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHEN YUBA PLAYS THE RHUMBA ON HIS TUBA: Mills Brothers—Fair. Mills Brothers heard throughout entire cartoon. See them only two minutes of entire reel. Running time, nine minutes.—Perry L. Lessy, Diamond Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. Neighborhood patronage.

WOODEN SOLDIERS: Betty Boop Cartoons—A very clever cartoon that will please the grownups as well as the kids. Deserves your best cartoon dates.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

CAMPUS CODES: Sunrise Comedies—This one is not so good. You can get by with this one. Running time, two reels.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

CENTURY OF PROGRESS: A good picture of the World's Fair. It seemed to be an attraction.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GALLOPING FANNY: Cubby, The Bear Cartoons—A dandy cartoon from RKO and the house was a roar of laughter.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PATHE REVIEW (No. 6): The making of champagne in France, a London penthouse and a good quartet singing a "hill-billy" song made this very enjoyable. Running time, ten minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RUNAWAY BLACKIE: Fables—Very ordinary cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

THROWN OUT OF JOINT: Harry Sweet, Harry Gribbon—I sure like to see Sweet make comedies with Gribbon. They sure make 'em good. It's too bad we lost a great comedian such as Harry Sweet.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

United Artists

FATHER NOAH'S ARK: Silly Symphonies—This is a good cartoon comedy, photographed all in beautiful color and is excellent entertainment for both young and old. Producers say that the public does not want color, but it is the very life of these shorts. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphonies—This was a repeat run for this one and it is almost as much of a draw as Mae West. They seem to share the honors as the best box office draws. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborsood patronage.

TOUCHDOWN MICKEY: Mickey Mouse—As good as ever. Mickey sure keeps making them bigger and better than ever. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B.C. Neighborhood patronage.

BIG BENEFIT, THE: Mentone No. 3—The kids in neighborhood put on a benefit show to raise money for a swimming pool. Very cleverly done and very entertaining. Running time, 21 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BIG BENEFIT, THE: Mentone No. 3—If you want a comedy to please children as well as the adults, play this one. Running time, two reels.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FIVE AND DIME: Oswald Cartoons—This is a very fine Oswald cartoon. Let's have more of them. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

IN THE ZOO: Oswald Cartoons—Don't miss running this cartoon. There's a big laugh when the moths eat the fur off the black bear, and Oswald gives the bear a hair tonic that restores the fur. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MERRY OLD SOUL: Here is a fine cartoon and out of the ordinary. Book it on your best nights.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MISTER MUG: James Gleason—A great comedy with Jimmie Gleason. A clever story and cleverly done. Pleased the grownups and also the kids.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BARBER SHOP BLUES: Claude Hopkins and Band—This is the second time we have played this band act. When they make them any better, we wish to know about it.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

C'EST PARIS: Broadway Brevity—An excellent color musical. Pleased about 100 per cent. So far all Broadway Brevities have been satisfactory.—J. C. Darst, Dante Theatre, Dante, Va. General patronage.

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Melody Masters—A good musical cartoon, using magazines and movie stars for the background. Good entertainment. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SEASONED GREETING: Lita Grey Chaplin—Here is another very good Broadway Brevity from Warners. Running time, two reels.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: Pick and Pat—A dandy two-reel musical minstrel show. Running time, two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Merry Melody—This is a good cartoon comedy of a department store with music and lots of laughs. The caricature of Laurel and Hardy and impression of Mae West get the majority of laughs. Good entertainment for the whole family. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

AMMUNITION WINS BATTLES

In an unsigned letter received a few days ago, a manager takes us to task for not fighting more vigorously the battle against long hours and "seven day" weeks.

For this correspondent's information, the back files of the Managers' Round Table Club pages should be sufficient answer to his complaint. In the issue of Aug. 12, 1933, page 63, under the heading, "A Call to Arms," we expressed ourselves as follows: "If yours is a situation that needs assistance, if you know of a case that calls for attention, write us immediately. Communications will be held in confidence, names will not be divulged. These reports will constitute the ammunition with which we will wage the battle." We emphasized this again in the following issue, that of Aug. 19, but the responses from managers in the field for one reason or another were unfortunately too few to do any good.

And, although our unknown correspondent commends us for being the only publication with sufficient courage to fight in behalf of the forgotten manager, he also states that it is too bad that we could not carry through.

With this last, we must disagree. We can carry through and will, providing managers supply the evidence, for it would be decidedly less than wise to plead before the code board without the backing of an adequate number of "abuse" cases.

We've been fighting for the managers right along, but no battle can be won decisively without sufficient ammunition. Words alone won't do it.

And for that matter, neither will anonymous letters.

ADVERTISING VIA RADIO

During a recent conversation with a visiting member from Chicago, he stated that in his opinion showmen as yet have not hit upon many effective methods of selling theatre tickets over the radio. And while he agreed that commendable progress had been made in the past few years, it was his contention that in comparison to other proven angles of motion picture theatre advertising and exploitation, radio in general was returning few dividends.

Up to a certain point, there is a lot of truth in what this manager says, but we cannot agree with him unreservedly. Among the campaigns received by this department, quite a few include radio tieups that possess the elements of box office merit, which inclines us to the belief that eventually this medium will lead to more concrete returns at the cashier's window.

However, discussion of this subject in the Club columns by "air-minded" managers is to be encouraged, and we are pleased therefore to present, in this issue, some radio observations by Round Tabler Morris Rosenthal, who is bringing more than local attention to his theatre via the wave-lengths. His article rates thorough analysis.

Radio has grown to mammoth proportions and, as an aid to increased theatre attendance, should not be disregarded wherever these facilities are available.

CONTESTS IN THE CODE

Among the code hairs and knots to be split and untied, is a definite ruling on contests of one kind and another. Though the code is specific, there seems to be some uncertainty in official minds regarding final disposition of what has for many years played an important part in theatre exploitation.

There are contests—and contests, as no doubt the theatremen among the code authorities realize, and this thought may have much to do with the hesitation in making a hard and fast decision. But whatever the reason, we do not incline to the absolute abolishment of all contests, although there are certain methods of prize awarding that theatres can well do without.

The question should be given further study before definite commitments are made.

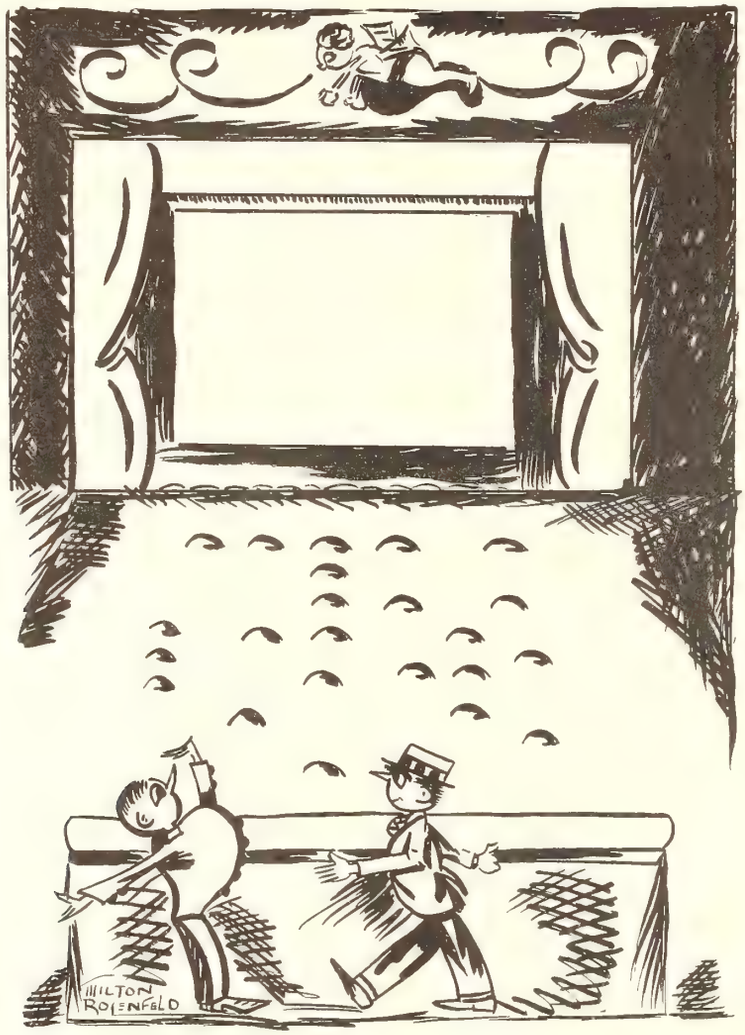
THAT "ESKIMO" EXPLOITATION

The campaigns already put over on the pre-release engagements of "Eskimo" are not only distinguished for their general box office effectiveness, but mark a distinct step forward in actual aid to the manager who is to play the picture.



This is distinctly indicated, first, in the excellent press book containing the actual "meat" of the above mentioned campaigns, and second, the special "Eskimo" exploitation section in the January 27 issue of the Herald, that certainly must advance the cause of strong ticket-selling promotion in the mind of every showman at all concerned with the future of the industry.

We have stated frequently in these pages that if 1934 is to be a big year for motion pictures, the finest brand of showmanship must be displayed to bring it about.

The M-G-M broadside is much more than a gesture in this direction.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

"Larst aisle 'ovah' for seats, sir."

Two Ace South American United Artists Campaigns

A neat campaign on "Samarang" in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, was turned out by Enrique Baez, United Artists' manager, who used a number of ideas from the press book and the New York campaign to bring a lot of attention to his show.

Two novelties proved to be much in demand; one, the press book "Java-knees" grass skirt card, and the second, "Samarang" love pearls, which were attached to the cards, the copy explaining that they would bring luck in love. Baez reports the South American temperament being what it is, these cards were much in demand.

A high spot of the campaign was the inauguration of the "Samarang Club," first put over in New York and reported in the Club columns. The beaches adjacent to Rio de Janeiro made this idea very appropriate and it was followed through with publicity through the newspapers, letters on special letterheads to leading citizens, and other ideas that gained it wide notice.

Another United Artist representative to secure a lot of publicity breaks is Guy P. Morgan, general manager in Buenos Aires, Argentine, who helped sponsor a diploma to Walt Disney from the Academy of Fine Arts in Buenos Aires. The idea was worked out in cooperation with a leading evening paper which also put on a Mickey Mouse puzzle contest, the opening shot being a four-column full cartoon of Mickey himself announcing the event, with many readers reported to have taken part.

Boucher Plants Some Ace Front Page Stories

Much front page publicity was forthcoming when Frank Boucher contributed the use of the Maryland Theatre and a special program for Hagerstown's Christmas fund for needy children. The program was arranged by the local Girl and Boy Scouts and the children of course were admitted in return for a toy or package of some food product.

On "Prizefighter and the Lady" Frank put over a smart idea by getting one of the leading local sport columnists to devote his entire column a few days in advance of the showing to a blow by blow description of the Carnera-Baer fight in the picture, as though it were being reported from the ringside. Following this was an explanation that the battle could be seen in the picture, the title, theatre and date being mentioned.

This strikes us as a rather ingenious idea in selling the attraction to local sport fans and Boucher is to be commended for putting it over so effectively.

Educational Idea Exhibited at Roxy

Something distinctly out of the ordinary in tieups has just been put over at the Roxy, New York, in the form of a finger painting exhibit sponsored by many prominents for the benefit of a children's fund and to which many leading artists have contributed canvases composed in this medium of painting.

An accurate replica of an artist's studio was constructed in the balcony foyer of the theatre where an artist was in attendance every day to demonstrate and explain finger, or (as it is also known) "brushless" painting. Over 100 completed paintings in this medium were displayed in the main foyer, the collection including a wide variety of subjects from the work of four-year-old children to the compositions of mature artists.

Noted educators, including Angelo Patri, cooperated enthusiastically as they feel that finger painting is a valuable educational medium for children and is now being used in many progressive schools.

Showmen on the alert for different school tieups might investigate the possibilities of this idea, and no doubt Morris Kinzler, Roxy ad chief, will be willing to send along the details to all interested members.

"Havana Widows" Presents Come Right Off the Boat

Taking full advantage of the early publicity on national repeal, members are tieing this in to their advance on "Havana Widows" by the distribution of those candies containing something "very nice," and advertising the giveaway as "right off the boat."

This gag was plugged in ads and dealers' heralds by Exploiteer A. J. Kennedy, for the date at the Spreckels, San Dieo, Cal., a local candy manufacturer supplying the sweets and advertising the handout at the theatre.

Two classified hookups were made, the first a holiday rhyme contest, in which readers were required to add a last line to a published rhyme, this to be selected from the ads on the page. The other was the "find your name in the ads" gag, both returned plenty of free theatre advertising.

This attractive window was one of the many secured by Manager Joe Di Pesa in his advance campaign on "Roman Scandals," Loew's State, Boston. Note the prominent position of the stills and theatre credit card.

Ace Lobby Gags on "16 Fathoms Deep"

With a most unusual action lobby display, that not only filled the sidewalk but spilled out into the street, Manager Leo Justin and Ad Chief Stockton Leigh smashed over Monogram's New York premiere of "Sixteen Fathoms Deep" at the Mayfair Theatre, to a gross that is reported to have made it possible to hold over the picture.

The front consisted of a large tank into which a professional diver submerged and performed, and besides this an elaborate miniature of an undersea scene was also exhibited, controlled by an electrical mechanism which caused the figures to animate. Other water angles were a display of diving suits, nautical equipment, sponges and plaques of giant fish, besides an unusually attractive poster and cutout display with the billing set in colored relief letters.

Many window and dealer tieups were made in principal sections of the city, one of the most prominent being a large Fifth Avenue window in the offices of the Southern Pacific Railroad in which were reproduced blowups of the principal characters in full colors, theatre credits and stills set against the background of grey tones cut to resemble giant waves.

Sell Policy Change In Four Day Drive

Putting over a campaign on four days' notice to advertise a change of policy was the recent job put over successfully by Manager Moe Baranco and Ad Chief Lou S. Hart at the Audubon, New York City. It was a sweet selling drive that evidenced quick returns, the new vaudeville and picture combination proving a draw and bringing patrons from far away points in Bronx and Westchester County, in some cases 20 miles from the theatre.

With the new policy running smoothly, these showmen turned their attention to the proper exploitation of "Little Women." Featuring this campaign was the planting of over 1,000 poster cards in the new Independent Subway which runs through many sections of the theatre's drawing area. This unusual break was secured free of charge with the promise of a future contract, and being the first local theatre to break space in the new subway created more than passing comment.

An effective window display and contest was tied into a nearby Woolworth store with a package of new "New Movie" magazines carrying a Hepburn cover picture. The package was displayed in the window and prizes awarded to those guessing nearest the exact number. Other prominent windows were also secured and all neighborhood libraries distributed imprinted book marks.

An extensive mailing list was contacted, programs distributed house to house, imprinted paper napkins were utilized freely by neighborhood restaurants, and framed midget window cards were placed in many ace locations.

Excellent newspaper publicity was secured in the Harlem and Bronx sections of three New York papers, and extra billing was employed to spread the news of the date.

MANAGERS READY FOR NEXT AWARD

Theatremen In Many Spots Report They Are Readying Entries for February Award; Deadline for January Is Feb. 10

by A-MIKE VOGEL

And now the spotlight swings to the second month's Quigley Award, for the best campaign selected by the judges on any picture played during February. Quite a few of the members and other showmen who have already sent in their January entries assure us that they will be heard from again in February, and during the following months also. Which is sound thinking, as there are twelve plaques to be given, one a month, plus the Grand Award, and the competition is open to managers everywhere in the world on any product, major or independent, domestic or foreign.

Twelve big opportunities to garner a Quigley Award, so managers who would like to send entries on January pictures may still do so, as the deadline for the first month's award is yet a week away, February 10.

CAMPAIGNS ALREADY RECEIVED FROM SHOWMEN IN 19 DIFFERENT STATES

The response from the field indicates that managers all over the nation are right in the thick of the fight, and striving for the honor of being the first to win worldwide recognition for their showmanship. And worldwide it will be, for unusual publicity will be given the winner.

At this writing, entries have been received from the following states, covering the country from east to west, and north to south: Oklahoma, Tennessee, Colorado, Virginia, Wisconsin, New York, Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Kentucky, Iowa, Massachusetts, Texas, Illinois, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, California and West Virginia.

WINNERS WILL BE HIGHLY REWARDED, IS OPINION OF COMPETING MANAGER

That in addition to the Awards, and the unusual distinction to be accorded them, the winners of the monthly plaques and of course the fortunate recipient of the Grand Award will be otherwise rewarded, according to the opinion of a well known Round Tabler, who is competing for the prizes.

"I'm going to work very hard to win at least one of the Awards," he states, "because if I do I know that it means an immediate raise of from ten to twenty dollars, and a much larger house to manage. And although," he continues, "no definite promises have been made by my superiors, I know these will be forthcoming."

The certainty of this member's statement is borne out by the attitude of numerous theatremen and other industry leaders who see in the Quigley Awards a ready opportunity for advancement. And as many of these leaders are on the Committee of Judges, what better opportunity does a showman ask to show his ability.

Seven days to the January deadline! Look for the first winner in the issue of February 17, and more power to you all!

THEATRE RADIO ADVERTISING

Connecticut Showman Analyzes Radio Advertising for Pictures And Details Broadcast Methods

by MORRIS ROSENTHAL
Manager, Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn.

In this article, "Rosy" inaugurates what we anticipate will be an informative series on what members are doing on tie-ins with their radio stations to sell more tickets. The second article, to be published in an early issue, is from the able pen of Manager John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, and others will follow. Showmen who have used, or are using, the radio as part of their advertising and exploitation are invited to forward their experiences, which of course will be chronicled for the benefit of interested managers.—A-MIKE VOGEL.

A good many exhibitors go to the expense of buying radio time and paying good money for several 50-word announcements daily, mention the name of their attraction and the stars and then forget about it. The chances of listeners hearing this message are perhaps one in 720 minutes, figuring the average small town station to operate 12 hours daily. Where the station operates more hours, the chances diminish. No exhibitor would think of using billboards five minutes daily and then covering them up the balance of the day. In order to get his full value he uses them 24 hours daily.

Morris Rosenthal

When considering how to use the radio to my advantage some years ago I decided that I must have a message of great appeal to the majority of listeners to make them want to hear this message. From the number of fan magazines and syndicated studio chatter I decided to become an air columnist and give the public information condensed, brief enough and interesting enough to make it worth their while to listen in. I then sold the station on the idea and the Film Chatterer became a standard part of their weekly broadcasts. The first few broadcasts were done very quietly with no ballyhoo and then we commenced to put little contests in the program with offers of theatre tickets for prizes. I tied in last month with a Sunday paper to exploit the 10 best pictures as a contest with a trip to New York to the winner.

Idea Proves Quick Hit

Fan mail began to pour in. One week, two and the next week perhaps five letters, until one week the mail ran into several hundred. People commenced to stop me on the street and congratulate me on the type of program. Then as opportunity presented itself, where I ran a musical picture I had a guest soloist sing the theme number of the picture. I use only two outright plugs during a 15-minute broadcast period and that only for the current show. As my show opens on Friday and my broadcast is the same night at 7:45, it gives me an opportunity to sell the show and it has been proven that a good many listeners will leave for the theatre immediately after my broadcast if my sales talk has been effective.

Due to the popularity of the program the local station will cooperate in other ways with the theatre. Short radio scripts on some picture. Bands plugging the theme songs from a musical that I will play in a week or two. Soloists using these numbers in advance. A few passes do the trick. I keep on good terms with the radio editors and get mention in their columns whenever I play radio names, either in shorts or in features.

At the present time my program is broadcast over two stations, Bridgeport and New Haven, and it benefits theatres in both cities from an actual check up with other theatre managers. This coming week I am on a statewide program to deliver a talk on Motion Pictures and the Community. Radio has been to me a means of reaching unknown people weekly. We give it the same careful attention that we would some special ballyhoo. This despite the fact that radio does not cost our theatre a penny.

Free Orchestrations Help Trewhela's Date

If Johnny Trewhela decorates all his mailing envelopes in the same manner as the one recently received by this department, then a lot of folks out in that section of the country are being continuously reminded of the attractions at the Fox Judith, Lewistown, Mont. In bold, red crayon, the front of the envelope is lettered, "See other side" and completely covering the reverse side is flaunted the following, "You know—Always a good show at your Judith—The Wonder Theatre."

As usual, this able Round Tabler is cracking the front page of his newspaper with some good box office stunts. A recent story detailed Trewhela's cooperation in helping to put over a local Printers' Ball, in which he wired New York for orchestrations of the song hits of "Footlight Parade," and turned them over, free of charge, to the dance orchestra. The picture opened at the Judith the day after the ball, so John's generous gesture certainly helped to tilt his gross, besides adding to his prestige.

Fashion Tieups for "Gallant Lady" Date

Two facts are confirmed in the recent campaigns on "Gallant Lady," the first, that Ann Harding's pictures drawn by prominent artists and illustrated in last week's issue, are grabbing off a lot of newspaper space, and the second, that Ann certainly makes a grand fashion model.

The last is mentioned because of the ace tieup made with Macy's on the New York engagement, at the Rivoli, in which the store announced the opening of its Cinema Hat Shop with a four column full ad in the New York papers, illustrated with six different poses of the star wearing the new hats. A further hookin on this angle was a display in three prominent Macy windows, the ads and the displays of course, giving big mention of the picture, theatre and date.

The slant was plugged further with over 30 other fashion windows in prominent stores in different exclusive shopping centers of the city, colored enlargements of the Harding drawings and stills from the picture forming the background of these various displays.

All the F & W Grand stores in the city co-operated by decorating the booths of a cosmetic display with stills from the picture, the center of each given to a large theatre poster, as can be seen in the accompanying photo. The newspaper ads on this attraction also brought attention, the art and copy being highly delicate in appeal, effectively selling the picture. Sounds as though a pretty thorough campaign was put on.

Hendricks Lands Feature Story on "World Changes"

A two-week advance advertising and publicity campaign and a traffic-gathering street parade, portraying the old and the new, were highlights of the campaign Bill Hendricks staged to put over "The World Changes" at Warner, Memphis, Tenn.

The parade was the direct cause for a swell story in one of the leading newspaper columns and came about in this fashion: An old time pump engine retired from the Memphis fire department for over 20 years was resurrected for the parade and the driver engaged for this special occasion was the same one who had guided this horse-drawn vehicle when both were in active service years before.

The stage was therefore set for an interview with this old time fireman and Hendricks lost no opportunity in selling the idea to the columnist, who gave it plenty of space, including full theatre credits.

"Eskimo" Campaigns Click Down South

A good deal of ace exploitation on "Eskimo" is reported from some of the early southern engagements where Billy Ferguson, MGM exploitation chief, has been working with theatremen in different spots. Below are some of the outstanding ideas put over in Miami, Louisville, New Orleans, Norfolk and Houston.

Olympia, Miami, Fla.

Manager Francis Falkenburg turned loose a flock of stuff that caught the attention of the tourists and residents of this resort city and which no doubt helped them to forget the heat. A flash lobby front got a lot of notice with lighted six-foot letters atop the marquee and a cutout box in the lobby which carried copy on a roller operated by an electric motor.

Stills were frozen in ice cakes and placed in front of the theatre, and a unique street bally that stopped many a foot was that of four dark complexioned girls dressed in white fur Eskimo outfits, visiting every prominent spot in Miami and on the beach, and riding up and down the main streets atop a bus promoted on this campaign (see photo).

The telephone gag was used effectively by planting a squad of operators in a prominently located store and having them call various numbers. Set pieces and stills from the picture were used as store decorations and crowds were attracted to see this flash exhibit. Six-inch silk Eskimo badges were worn for a week in advance by ushers, cashiers, porters, soda jerkers and bellboys in various hotels, and a strong billing and newspaper campaign rounded out this well executed drive.

Loew's, Louisville, Ky.

Manager Walter D. McDowell distinguished his engagement by the presonal appearance of Captain Volney Phifer and his penguins, also Earl Hammond and his dog train, Phifer making appearances on the stage and also showed the penguins at a nearby University and in local department stores. The dog train made a swell street bally and the papers ran pictures of it in which local prominents were shown in the driver's seat.

The telephone tieup detailed above was also used here, and loudspeakers were hooked up so that passersby could hear the girls phoning subscribers regarding the picture play dates and highlights.

Post cards were mailed to a select list of local teachers and club women and announcements of the appearances of Phifer and Hammond were sent to a list of dog lovers. Mail boxes in all leading hotels were stuffed with heralds which were also distributed through the residential districts.

Miniature Home of Author Used as Display

A reproduction in miniature of the home of Louise Alcott, creator of "Little Women," was a very unusual sales angle that was used to good effect by Manager J. C. Lund, Kenosha, Kenosha, Wis., in his campaign on this picture, both interior and exterior being shown through the courtesy of the local library association, who displayed this very interesting exhibit (see photo) for a month in advance with posters announcing the engagement.

Editorial comment, rarely given in favor of local motion pictures, was another highlight of Lund's campaign. The editorial went to great lengths to justify attacks on certain types of pictures, but found nothing but praise to give to "Little Women" and strongly urged all readers to see it, ending with these words: "It will be an influence for good in this community, an example of the movies meeting the highest ideals of the industry."

In exchange for the cordial cooperation of the library authorities, Lund presented five copies of the book to the children's branch, this being good for special stories in the papers mentioning the picture.

Taylor "Sweethearts" Marie Dressler

Practical showmanship was evidenced in the Buffalo campaign on "Her Sweetheart," "Christopher Bean," wherein Manager C. G. Taylor of Shea's stressed the sweetheart angle in most of his advertising.

For instance a tieup with a local candy company resulted in thousands of candy kisses placed in envelopes with copy to the effect that they were given by the world's sweetheart, Marie Dressler. The confections were distributed a day in advance by a number of pretty girls on the main streets and in the lobby of the theatre.

The A. & P. Stores were tied in to a special sale on their Sweetheart soap, also using special window displays in all Buffalo stores, "Sweetheart" copy was the theme of a tieup with all florists, the same idea being carried out with a number of leading jewelry stores.

On "Blond Bombshell," Taylor put over a very good "Whoozit" contest with one of his local papers to plug the classified columns. For the benefit of those who have not used it, the contest takes the form of a number of questions which are answered in the classified ads, each question starting with the word, "Whoozit." For instance, "Whoozit adjusts sewing machines for 75 cents," etc.

Payne Plants Features On "World Changes"

Very intelligent use was made of his newspaper publicity by Manager Earle Payne, Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., on "The World Changes" by the planting of two special features which sold the background of the story.

One was two column story illustrated by clippings taken from the back files of the paper, these detailing the General Custer massacre, the discovery of gold in Alaska and the shooting of the late President McKinley. This all was tied into the story of the picture with the title, theatre and date carried in the head.

Payne got another sweet break with a four column cut and story that carried an interview with an old time Louisville bootmaker who described many of the events that had taken place in the 60 odd years he had spent in that city, the heading for this spread being, "Venerable Philosopher Tells How World Changes."

WARNING TO EXHIBITORS

The following letter from Tom Edwards, Eldon's Ozark Theatre, Eldon, Mo., speaks for itself. Exhibitors are requested to watch for the man referred to and to notify Tom in case he shows up.

DEAR MIKE:

I am writing you in regard to a man who hooked me on some merchants' tickets, and if you would put a notice in the Herald regarding him, it might save some other exhibitor the same trouble that I am having.

A man by the name of Alexander and his wife made a contract with me to sell the merchants tickets, and he agreed to put cards in their windows to let the public know they could get them there. He was to get all the money he collected from them.

After he got through selling, he left town and didn't even leave me a list of the merchants he sold. Now I find that he promised them all a trailer on the screen about their place of business, and it has certainly put me in a mess, as I can't afford to have the trailers made, and wouldn't run a large number of them if I could. Also, he didn't put any cards in their windows. But the main thing is that he never mentioned trailers to me, but did to all the merchants he sold. He was traveling in a Hudson sedan and, if possible, I would like to let my brother exhibitors know about him.

Strong Campaign by Oklahoma Crew

Reopening the Midwest Theatre in Oklahoma City, Okla., with "Footlight Parade," City Manager George Henger, Manager J. M. Schoeppel and Roy Brewer, art department head, cooperated in a campaign that did full credit to their efforts.

Due to the importance of the event, permission was secured to hang a large banner across the street in front of the theatre, and in addition every bus and street car was placarded with the attraction and date. Further, a large banner 9 feet by 15 was erected at the top of the marquee, and extra paper of all sizes was posted in the city and within the entire trading area.

Special tieups were made with all music stores, in which the song hits were advertised with extra newspaper displays and windows that included cutout figures of the girls and stars. A similar hookup was made with the leading department store in addition to a pretentious flash inside the store. Besides this, the store also imprinted and distributed 20,000 heralds at no cost to the theatre, sales people placing these in every outgoing package.

An out-of-the-ordinary front was used, efforts being made to duplicate as near as possible the display put on by the New York Strand, and many comments confirmed the opinion that this was the most elaborate flash yet used by any local theatre (see photo).

Extra newspaper space was taken, radio announcements were made and numerous other gags were put on by this active crew to properly inaugurate the reopening of the attractive house, for which these keen showmen rate an extra bow.

Brown Constructs "Peep Show" For Lobby Display

The title of the picture gave Bill Brown his inspiration for an effective lobby idea when he built his campaign on "Broadway Thru a Keyhole" around a "peep show" for the date at the Marboro, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Bill had his house artist construct a large box of compo board and on the two sides and front cut out a number of keyholes in different positions, the general color scheme being dark blue.

On the inside of the back board was placed an insert surrounded by star stills, and the other sides inside the box were papered with copies of Walter Winchell's column. A blinker system of vari-colored lights supplied the illumination, and the only lettering on the outside was "peep show" in white tinsel cutout letters.

Some Good Reading Slants on "Henry VIII"

For their date on "The Private Life of Henry VIII," Charlie McLeary and Bob Etchberger, Loew's Regent, Harrisburg, Pa., featured their campaign by planting the press book drawing contest in one of the papers, this being given generous publicity.

The book angle was also emphasized by a tieup with local libraries whereby special imprinted bookmarks were distributed in every branch, and a tieup with the leading news agency obtained inserts in many current magazines. An interesting cooperation was effected with some of the production stills showing the banquet scene, whereby two prominent restaurants gave entire window displays to these shots in conjunction with food displays.

WASHINGTON PARTY

Wire has just been received from Walter Morris, chairman of the Washington get-together arrangements committee, that the Managers' Round Table party is definitely set for Saturday, February 17th, starting at 11:30 p. m. at the Club Michel, 14th and Thomas Circle, N.W., Washington, D. C. The affair will be stag and the price, including dinner and beer, $1.50, with plenty of swell free entertainment provided by Carter Barron and Guy Wonders.

All managers are invited, including non-members, and if you are within reaching distance of the Capital, come over and have the time of your life. Forward reservations now to Walter Morris, Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Reid Puts On Many "Bowery" Slants

A campaign vying in effectiveness with many of those put on in bigger spots was whipped across by Manager Kenneth Reid, Loew's Broad, Columbus, Ohio, on "The Bowery," in which novel street ballys, tieups and displays were judiciously mixed to attract attention from every quarter.

Thousands of cards in laundry packages were distributed, as were copies of the press book "Bowery Gazette"; bumper cards were placed on all taxis and 200 confectionery stores carried window streamers on a Coca Cola hookup. All empty stores in the downtown area were also secured, their windows decorated with cutouts and posters.

Three attractive street ballys were arranged, the first with two men dressed in old time police uniforms who patrolled the main streets with theatre signs on their backs. The second bally was a sound truck; and yet another was an old time bannered hook and ladder fire truck, with driver in character (see photo).

All radio stations were promoted to broadcast old time songs and mention of picture and theatre, night clubs put on Bowery night and the opening of the picture was signalized with an appropriate "Hollywood" treatment.

Women Praise Boston "Prizefighter" Preview

To ensure favorable reactions from his woman patronage, Manager Joe DePisa, Loew's State, Boston, Mass., aided by Bert McKenzie, MGM exploiteer, arranged a preview on "Prizefighter and the Lady" to which were invited representatives of women clubs as well as sport editors and picture critics. An immediate result was a hearty letter of endorsement from the head of one of the most important woman's groups which was blown up for lobby display.

Sport columnists of course came across handsomely with praise, including a rave from Bill Cunningham, nationally known sporting authority, all of which were given suitable lobby flash.

Style angles were not neglected, a fur tieup netting a radio broadcast and fur window display built around Myrna Loy, and other fashion windows were secured as well as displays in many sport goods stores. Hat and shoe merchants used the tieup stills on Baer and Carnera and full newspaper coverage was obtained, as besides the many breaks in the English papers, the Italian and Jewish press carried many stories on the two fighters, and endorsing the picture.

George Tyson and Christy Wilbert thought up this one on "Only Yesterday," at the Ambassador, St. Louis.

Botwick and Wilson Put On Toy Matinees

Even the toughest newspapers are now opening up to theatres putting on Christmas shows for the needy, one of the latest instances being the swell publicity obtained by Round Tablers Harry Botwick, Paramount, and Harry Wilson, Grand, both in Rutland, Vt., in their local papers.

For two weeks before the parties, there was daily mention of the coming events, a food and toy show at the Paramount, and a food matinee at the Grand, culminating in two-column stories and cuts showing the contributions in the lobbies of the theatres.

The gifts were made up into baskets and distributed through the Red Cross and Salvation Army lists. The deliveries were made by the trucks of the Rutland Daily Herald and transportation was also furnished by other interested merchants.

The generous cooperation given by Botwick and Wilson indicate why they rate the many breaks they receive from their papers.

M-G-M Issues Unusual Press Book on "Eskimo"

Packed with plenty of punch is that MGM "Eskimo" press book, in size, quantity and quality of selling ideas topping anything in this form that has been turned out lately. The book is in two sections, one entirely given over to exploitation, turned out by Billy Ferguson's department and the second section devoted to publicity, display ads, posters, accessories, etc., each page the approximate size of a one sheet.

The first pages of the exploitation section are devoted to reproductions of the tieups of the various nationally advertised brands of products as used in the picture, with the names in red lettering for easy identification; then follows a number of pages filled with pictures and descriptions of the stunts put over on nine pre-release engagements. Besides all this, there are an additional number of ace tieup ideas, including an entire page detailing a plan for grade school educational promotion.

Many of the display ads are duplicates of those used on the pre-release dates and the publicity stories are fashioned along the lines of those most in demand of newspapers. Posters and accessories are illustrated in full color and the books include various samples of advertising tieups available to managers who have dated the picture.

Ace Capital Opening On "Footlight Parade"

An extensive campaign that culminated in one of the most brilliant previews the night before the formal opening was executed by Frank LaFalce, Washington Warner Bros. Theatres ad chief, with the aid of Bill Ewing, Maurice Blouin and Manager Walter Morris of the Metropolitan, where the picture was shown.

The event was advertised well in advance in all newspaper copy, and special tickets made up on velour finished stock were placed on sale two weeks ahead of the date in all local houses of the circuit. Many leaders in Washington political and social circles were present, the opening being covered by all Washington papers with reporters and photographers. During the evening, messenger boys paraded the streets carrying jumbo congratulatory telegrams from the stars. (See photo.)

Tieups were many and effective and included windows in numerous prominent stores. Leading orchestras played the song hits in hotels, ballrooms and over the radio, music stores gave full endorsement and ballyhoo records were distributed in shoe shine parlors, radio stores, etc., for use on their amplifiers.

Gum stickers were placed upon outgoing mail from all Warner theatres for two weeks in advance, novelty bottle openers were distributed at soda fountains, and a laundry tieup was made for extensive package stuffing. In addition to extensive newspaper publicity, two contests were also planted.

LaFalce's Oversized "Telly"

British Member Puts Over Good Co-op Page

Though single and double truck pages have served as stock exploitation ideas for many years on this side, the snappy co-op page put over by H. B. Harris, General Manager, Exchange Kinema, Lincoln, England, on "Good Companions," is the first one we have received in some time from across the water. Eight merchants share the page, with the center given to the theatre ad and a three column story of the picture.

Harris contributed to the recent children's Christmas fund, an annual event in his city, by distributing 200 tickets in the holiday baskets for "Alice in Wonderland," the Exchange being one of the few theatres in England having a print for Christmas week. Local papers made mention of this on the front page, together with a plug for the picture from Harris himself.

We are pleased to have heard again from this progressive British Round Tabler, whose effective campaigns have been previously chronicled in the Club columns.

Further, it is interesting to know that the advertising and exploitation being put over by our brother members across the water is rapidly becoming more skilled and effective. It was not so long ago that foreign theatremen lacked experience in putting over campaigns along American lines, but today they are whipping across a lot of stuff that is on a par with some of our best over here.

MANAGEMENT

To the manager who is frantically running around in the hope of improving unsatisfactory business . . . . attempting to help matters with the pitiful remedy of "putting out another thousand heralds" . . . why mince words? Let's be honest with ourselves and place the blame of shameful results where it belongs. MANAGEMENT . . . . that's what makes or breaks the backbone of theatre operation.

Somewhere in this vast business is a man who can manage your theatre successfully. Let's subscribe to that idea, and then humble ourselves to a point where we find out what is really wrong with us. We will come to the realization that the major portion of our business troubles can be traced to three sources: 1—Wrong thinking, or lack of any thought; 2—Something you are doing that you should not do; 3—Something that you haven't done at all.

Let's take stock of ourselves . . . . let's look our managerial shortcomings squarely in the face . . . frenzied showmanship methods are an evil of the past. It is the fellow who analyzes his business, who has confidence in his courage and ability, who will pull through and make a mark for himself now.

Quit thinking of yourself in the terms of a theatre manager . . . actually, you are a big business man, a highly specialized merchant charged with the selling of the world's most perishable merchandise, motion pictures. Put a price tag of 'profit' on every picture that is charged to you . . . . then move Heaven and Hell to sell it . . . . . success in the show business is a matter of applied thought.

Turn over a new leaf in the administration of your theatre . . . . . no matter what you have done in the past, no matter how you are thinking, do something you haven't done before . . . . . and Do It Now—from "THE ST. LOUIS SHOWMAN," by LETO HILL, ZONE MANAGER, WARNER THEATRES, ST. LOUIS, MO.

WHY DELAY ANY LONGER? JOIN NOW

J. SAYER SEELY

assists Bob Ungerfeld at the RKO Regent Theatre, a nabe house in upper New York City. We're looking forward to this member going places and doing things and unless we miss our guess he'll be handling a house of his own before very long. It was nice to have seen you at the get-together, Sayer, and be sure to drop in and say hello whenever you're down this way. Best regards to Bill and Don.

believe it or not, but Joe has just signed on the dotted line. He is city manager for the Tri-State Theatres Corporation, with headquarters in the Capitol Theatre Building, Sioux City, Ia. We're sure he needs no introduction to these pages, because we've already published some of his excellent campaigns. This is simply a formality, Joe, and we thank you for the nice things you say about the Club.

may be found managing the Bell Theatre in Scranton, Penna. Scranton sure is a go-getting town so far as showbusiness is concerned and some of our finest members hail from there. Don't consider your duty ended now that you've joined, Walt, remember it goes still further. We expect to have your contributions.

manages the Grand in Lisbon, Ohio, and he's the first member we've had from that city, so we're expecting things. We're glad of the opportunity of acknowledging your application and hope you'll send us some of the material that goes to make up this department each week. Shoot along the dope, Bolender, on what you are doing to boost the box-office and we'll pass it along the line.

is the manager of the RKO Capitol in Cincinnati, Ohio, and he's still another new Club member in line for introduction to the rest of this organization. Meet the rest of the boys, Jack, and then prove to them that you intend to do your share of good work by sending along some showselling ideas. What was that last stunt you pulled that helped boost trade? Send it on and leave the rest to us.

is the general manager of the Compania Cinematografica India at Caracas, Venezuela and he subscribes and applies for membership at the same time. The boys are always interested in the activities of our foreign membership and we hope to hear from you soon.

A. M. DELGADO GOMEZ is the manager of the Compania Cinematografica India in Venezuela and between him and Mr. Rivero if we don't know how things theatrical are going down his way, we'll be sorely disappointed. So for the New Year make a resolution to keep us informed, will you?

manages the Fox Sunkist Theatre in Pomono, Cal., and doubtless basks in that well-known sunshine while we freeze here in the throes of a young blizzard. Well, Stan, you have plenty of brother members in your city who have contribtued for some time, so you'd better join the parade and get busy.

is up in Hartford, Conn., where he manages the Lyric Theatre. Hartford is a great showtown, Bill, and we number many active members from up there. Your application is received with interest, because we'd like to see a little friendly competition go on from Hartford. So, let's hear from you as soon as you can get something in to us.

is another lad to join from Hartford. Joe is managing the Astor Theatre there and sends his subscription along at the same time. Joe meet Bill and Bill meet Joe, unless you both know one another already. If you don't, we introduce the two of you across the round table and hope that things will begin to hum up there.

GEORGE MILLER

may be found managing the Eagle Theatre on Third Avenue, New York City. The Eagle is a neighborhood house in a congested district and we're sure all your brother members would be interested in reading how you keep everybody happy and coming to the house. Don't you ever get up this way, George? The latch is always off and you're welcome.

assists R. D. Reed at the Central Theatre in Newark, N. J. He was recently promoted from doorman to his present job and from all accounts he will go far. The Central is a Warner house and since they are an up and coming lot over there in Newark, we're sure he'll learn showbusiness in the right way.

sends along his subscription and asks to be enrolled as a member at the same time. Jimmy manages the Lyric Theatre in Fitchburg, Mass. Do you know Eddie Haley at the Fitchburg? If you don't go over and meet him, you know all you boys should know one another and the Club's a great medium for just that.

assists Maurice Bliss at the Boston Road Theatre in the Bronx section of New York City and he comes well recommended by Maurice. Well, Harry, you've got a good teacher in your boss and we are hopeful of receiving plenty of fine material from your house now that the two of you are active members. What say?

is the general manager of a chain of five theatres known as the Habana-Delicias in Ponce, Puerto Rico, and we have several brother members in Puerto Rico. As a matter of fact, one of our most active men there, Mr. Gelabert, who is in San Juan, writes and tells us he's paying Club headquarters a visit sometime in March. Well, we don't know how far San Juan is from Ponce, but maybe the two of you could get together and make the trip. What do you say?

is another youngster to join us from Brooklyn, N. Y., where he manages the Sumner Theatre. I guess we have about every Brooklyn manager tied up as a member of the Club, Greenberg, and they're a pretty active bunch. You'll have to step on the gas and send along your campaigns; you know your duty doesn't end with having signed on the dotted line; you've got to let the rest of us know what you're doing.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

Coming: A Fourth Year of

ACHIEVEMENT

SINCE Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was introduced early in 1931, its revolutionary qualities have fulfilled every hope and prediction of its sponsors. It has helped cameramen and producers so tremendously . . . it has affected the motion picture art so profoundly . . . it has contributed to so many cinematic triumphs, that a further prediction can now be made: In its fourth year, as heretofore, this Eastman film will be an important factor in the most conspicuous motion picture achievements. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

NEW YORK CRITICS

WHO SHOUTED THEMSELVES hoarse OVER WARNER BROS.'

THIRD SUCCESSIVE BROADWAY HIT, WE RECOMMEND

SMITH BROS.' VITAMIN A COUGH DROPS

It takes healthy throats to sing such ecstatic praise as this for Paul Muni in "Hi, Nellie!" But good old Smith Brothers will get these talented larynxes back in shape in plenty of time for plenty more raves for Robinson in "Dark Hazard," Kay Francis in "Mandalay," Blondell and O'Brien in "I've Got Your Number," "Wonder Bar," and "As The Earth Turns."

REGINA CREWE in N. Y. AMERICAN—

"Wuxtry! Wuxtry! There's a good picture on Broadway! Vivid as this morning's headlines. What a show Muni gives! A pretty mixture of comedy and melodrama, with one supplementing the other in fast, actionful sequences building excitingly to a slam-bang climax. You eliminate all gamble by seeking screen fun at the Strand."

WANDA HALE in DAILY NEWS—

"A treat for Paul Muni fans. Holds your interest to the fade-out. 'Hi, Nellie' is swell entertainment."

BLAND JOHANESON in DAILY MIRROR—

"Hilarious comedy. Splendidly acted. Fun and excitement aplenty. Will entertain anybody."

EILEEN CREELMAN in EVENING SUN—

"The Warners, those masters of melodrama, have turned out another of their rapid-fire, high pressure yarns and registered another sure hit. An hilarious galloping comedy."

WILLIAM BOEHNEL in WORLD-TELEGRAM—

"One of the best. A rollicking and exciting frolic. A lusty spoof as well as an exciting melodrama. Fast and diverting amusement. Muni turns in a grand performance."

MORDAUNT HALL in N. Y. TIMES—

"A series of melodramatic fireworks. Will undoubtedly prove entertaining."

ETAION SHRDLU in FILM DAILY—

"Swell performance by Paul Muni and ace direction by Mervyn LeRoy. Entertainment that should be box-office anywhere. Refreshingly different from most of his previous roles. He'll be liked in it."

AL SHERMAN in MORNING TELEGRAPH—

"'Hi, Nellie,' hurrah for Paul Muni! are Broadway's new catch phrases. To say more is merely to heap praise upon praise. 'Hi, Nellie' is as superior to its predecessor as an Al Jolson is to any of his many imitators."

"'Hi, Nellie' will certainly make its Mark on the Trade."
—(Signed) Trade and Mark

...AND FOR EXHIBITORS WHO HAVE BEEN SHOUTING THEMSELVES HOARSE FOR MORE WARNER BROS. SHOWS, WE RECOMMEND

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 114, No. 7 February 10, 1934

TELLING WILL

MR. WILL ROGERS has been paid a considerable sum of money by the motion picture business and the most recent exhibitor polls indicate that he has attained a considerable box-office draw.

Therefore it is reasonable to assume that when Mr. Rogers broadcasts at 9 o'clock on Sunday evenings over a nation-wide network, he diverts from the motion picture theatre a certain number of cash customers.

The other Sunday evening, ballyhooing the Rockefellers, oil and the radio, Mr. Rogers stated that he had just completed a motion picture, but that he was going to be an exception to the rule and not tell his radio audience the name of the picture because he had been "paid for the picture."

It would seem to be only a slight matter of reciprocity to the 7,000 odd exhibitors who play Mr. Rogers' pictures if he had not been so eccentric and had, at least partly, compensated for his diversion of their customers by helping the next Rogers picture in announcing its title.

Perhaps Mr. Rogers doesn't realize that the large sum he draws as salary in motion pictures is based upon the box-office draw of Mr. Rogers, and that regardless of the 7,000 exhibitors who help build Mr. Rogers into a box-office attraction, anything that Mr. Rogers himself can do to enhance his box-office value contributes toward the continuance of his handsome salary.

"EXIT DON JUAN"

WHEN Lord Ashley instituted divorce proceedings in London the other day and charged her Ladyship with undue friendship with Mr. Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., who was also served with papers, it appears that no demand was made for damages. That was, one would feel, ungallant of my Lord Ashley. Curiously enough, the press cables say that the service of the papers delayed Mr. Fairbanks sailing for Spain to look up locations for "Exit Don Juan"—a title, by the by, that Lord Byron never would have approved.

The blight that has fallen on the gardens of Pickfair, the new unhappiness that is the lot of Miss Mary Pickford and the endless flow of fanfare gossip would only a few years ago have been counted a disaster in the world of the screen, an impairment of the status of the industry. Today screen America has no sweetheart, only a bevy of "girl friends." Today no one is so beloved as "Our Mary" of yesteryear, and none is so magnificently charming as the brave Douglas, tender and true. And oh, the pity of it!

About a year ago Mr. Fairbanks, pensive and not too happy with his experimentations in expeditionary pictures, sat at a window high up in the Sherry Netherlands in New York and speculated about his screen days ahead. "I wish," he remarked in a fit of burning frankness, "that there was some far away happy island where movie stars could go when they are through here and before they die."

That "far away happy isle" is most evidently not Great Britain. And that's a pity, too.

WHOSE CAKE?

IT is not so long ago that the industry got over the acute headache generated by sundry experiments in advertising on the amusement screen, under the euphemistic label of "sponsored pictures." Currently there is no little annoyance of exhibitors who find starred players of the screen giving the box office competition on the free radio programs.

This makes the launching of a venture by which a newsreel of old good name lends, or rents, that name to the radio promotion of a patent medicine seem an amazingly obtuse proceeding.

Consciously or unconsciously this step is being taken in imitation of the pattern of radio exploitation of certain newspapers, being once more a reiteration of the basic error of concept which considers the newsreel a news medium instead of the vaudeville derivative of current events which it is. Practically nothing that is true of the newspaper is true of the newsreel.

Also it was long ago set down that "You can not eat your cake and have it." Of course Miss Nina Wilcox Putnam got a laugh by saying that it was never written by anyone who had tried eating cake in bed, but she was making capital out of a lot of crumbs. And so!

CURRENT advertisements of a new gadget for the aid of the deaf, headline: "Now the talkies talk to deafened through bones of head." That is all very well. What we object to is the persistent making of pictures aimed to communicate only with the boneheads that have working ears—and "hear not."

WITH Roxy and Harold having demonstrated, it is now fairly clear that one of the really decisive things to do around RKO is to resign to Mr. J. R. McDonough, now saranoffly occupying the seat of general management. He is in a fair way to become known as Joseph-the-Acceptor.

FLEXIBLES AGAIN

Again from Al Lichtman, United Artists distribution chief, last weekend came advocacy of the flexible admission idea which stirred the industry for a while months ago. Passing through Kansas City en route to the Coast, Mr. Lichtman expressed undiminished faith in the policy of raising prices where the merit of the film warrants. . . .

FRENCH INVASION

Inner New York circles are discussing the most completely organized drive yet developed for invasion of the American market by French producers. Reported: proposal of the important Chambre Syndicale for a two-year subsidized distribution outlet here. Further report links Robert Hurel, now here, with the proposal. . . .

ROWLAND ON HIS OWN

Following dissolution of production partnership with Monte Brice, William Rowland has incorporated Rowland Productions, Inc., at Dover, Del., and leaves for the Coast shortly to begin production on his own. . . .

FILM DATELINES

Last week, in annual convention at Santa Barbara, the California Newspaper Publishers' Association registered a protest, planned a plea that wire services reduce the percentage of Hollywood (film) datelines, in favor of other Coast cities, which go out from Southern California to the nation's press. . . .

CENTRAL AMERICA

The development of more stable political conditions, increase of wired houses, are two chief reasons for the belief expressed last week on a New York visit by John B. Nathan, Paramount Central American manager, that 1934 should be a good year in that territory for American motion pictures. Audiences there still prefer American films, he said. . . .

NUDES DISAPPROVED . .

The nude, masculine or feminine, in picture or in person, will grace no stage or screen in the theatres of Gadsden, Ala., decreed the city fathers via an ordinance passed last week. One p.m. is the opening moment for film programs on Sunday. No films may be shown between midnight and 10 a.m. any day, said they. . . .

SMPE SESSION

To Chalfonte Hall, Atlantic City, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will go this year for its annual spring meeting, April 23. . . .

SOCIAL FACTOR

The motion picture as an important social and educational factor in American life will occupy a course of study at New York University for the academic year 1934-35. Jointly sponsoring the course are the National Board of Review and the School of Education. Dr. Frederic M. Thrasher will conduct the course. . . .

A SERVICE RECORD

Last week Arthur Cole, office manager at the Paramount Kansas City branch, completed 20 years of service in one office. which should be some sort of record. Starting in 1914 with the Feature Film Service Company, the evolution of the business finds him a Paramount employee in the same office. . . .

ARKANSAS EXHIBITORS

Its first semi-annual meeting will be held by the newly organized Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas, at Little Rock, February 11-12. No national organization affiliation is planned for the immediate future. Officers: T. W. Sharp, president; Ray Morrow, vice president; J. F. Norman, secretary-treasurer. . . .

"AMERICA"

A Yarn from Here to Hollywood and Back

By TERRY RAMSAYE
Written on Broadway

BACK at the desk again in a great cliffside of a building looking down on Broadway, Columbus Circle and Central Park. This expedition has been through some nine thousand miles of these United States, from Pismo to Pima to Pecos, and from Accomac to Hackensack, from Hollywood to Hoboken, if you please. Two months of "the road" and another month of what I have sometimes called "the motion picture's creative community," brings me to the interesting conviction that the motion picture makers are strangers in and to this country of ours.

It is most unlikely that any major executive now charged with the principal burdens of the industry which has the presumptive responsibility for supplying the American masses with dramatic entertainment on the screen, has seen any more of the United States than the Hudson Palisades from the Century, the Chicago loop and LaSalle street between trains, the Union Station in Kansas City and the Indians in front of the Harvey hotel in Albuquerque.

Across the land is to be discovered a great wide motion picture market which is being served with dramatic merchandise ordained by impulses and hunches gleaned in New York hot spots, from the sophisticated dramas of the minority theatre, and from the high pressure agents of purveyors of story wares by-producted from the fields of the printed page addressed to the small public which reads.

In Hollywood for these pages I recorded the plaint and argument of important motion picture personages, the rulers of the kingdom of celluloid, for curtailment of product, a reduction of the camera output to a list of such pictures as they might conveniently make with an assured market. This argument for curtailment comes from a desire to take it easy in the process of milking the status quo. It does not reflect the spirit on which the industry was built, and it does not reckon with the creative force of the unserved market.

PUBLIC WILL BE SERVED

A first hand contact with a considerable part of this America brings with great force a conviction that the public, the motion picture public, will be served, that its buying power will not be denied, and that this same force of demand which created the motion picture will remake it—more to the shape of heart's desire.

The producers of the motion picture industry do not hear from this great American market. It is inarticulate in the extreme. All that movieland hears is what is being done with and about such wares as it delivers to this market in its present peculiarly constricted concept of what is merchandise. The box office receipts of today do not reflect what the public is willing to spend for motion pictures. They merely record what this public is willing to spend for the pictures that it is getting now.

The editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, after 9,000 miles of contact with the buyer and seller of the motion picture commodity in the field as well as the maker of that commodity at the studio, digs into the pockets of those first-hand and immediate experiences, and some of those observations are duly recorded on this and the following page.

Curiously enough this same Hollywood hears little from and asks nothing of the distribution forces which contact the exhibitor. The exhibitor often has no words to say it, but he does have a notion about what his people want and he can identify it when he sees it. He does tell his notions to the selling people he meets, but the word never gets back.

Hollywood researches to the depths of history and the museums for information and authenticity to distort on the screen. You can find out in Hollywood offices how many buttons Napoleon had on his coattails, what Cleopatra had for luncheon, why Christopher Columbus left home, and how Lee combed his hair at Appomattox—but Hometown, U. S. A., is terra incognita and the customers resident there are nobody's business. They can take what they get and like it.

The producer who will set about discovering America will find a land of opportunity.

MISBRANDING

MEANWHILE just for the record—there is a town called Pismo. It's in California and its fame rests mostly on a seafood soup, a rather excellent one, made of the Pismo clam, and locally called a chowder. If Pismo persists in that nomenclature Passamquody, Maine, ought to bring a suit for misbranding. Chowder can not be made of anything but the cold water Atlantic clam. And Pima is a desert town where there is so little to do about anything that they make candy out of cactus. Pecos as you all know is in the great empire of Texas, and "west of the Pecos" means something exciting in landscape and song and story of the riders of the purple sage. It looks like a grand country to write about.

NOW that it is all over, from Hollywood to Hoboken, let it be set down in print here and now that while there is no local boosters' club to shout about there's one very pleasant place on the map called New York, where they have everything and think nothing of it.

From West to East, here are some notes on the Elsewhere:

Just before you come to the hell-fevered town of Yuma on the Arizona-California border, eastbound, is a great reach of rolling desert dunes, some ten or more miles wide and stretching over the border from the Mohave south deep into Mexico.

Quite a few years ago this strange, eerie desert was the scene of spectacular motion picture activity, in the making of "Beau Geste," a masterpiece of the silent days, supervised for Famous Players-Lasky by Julian Johnson, who, while not precisely a native son, might be called for movie purposes the discoverer of this empire of sand. He was in California before the movies arrived.

EL PASO DEL NORTE

AT El Paso you look out the windows of the towering Hilton hotel into the Sierra Blanca on the north of the town and across the alleged silvery Rio Grande into Old Mexico on the south. And Old Mexico is right. It looks older, and dustier than Time.

William Paxton is the motion picture personage of the city, operating a whole array of Hoblitzelle houses and being quite a citizen about town the while. He shows the sights to the visiting picture personages and takes them for a ride over to Juarez, the city over the border, named for a Mexican hero of a long time ago. Mr. Paxton's car is as good as a customs pass, but the Juarez liquor is if anything a little inferior to the Tia Juana bottlings. A prescription is recommended in El Paso, since Texas is, after a manner of speaking, dry.

A profit sharing plan for the Hoblitzelle circuit employes had put a bright smile into most of El Paso's box offices.

THIRD OF PRODUCT IS DELIVERED AT HALF MARK AFTER LATE START

And All Large Companies Say They Will Have Available All Pictures They Promised at the Beginning of the Season

More than one-third of all feature pictures promised to exhibitors for 1933-34 by the nine largest producing and distributing companies were actually delivered by February 1 as the current season approached its half-way mark. Despite the fact that the selling season got under way almost two months later than previously, due to the economic situation and the resultant complications of theatre decentralization, these companies to date have delivered 156 out of a promised 423 features.

Current season distribution did not start until after September 1, allowing the distributors until the same date in this calendar year to complete and deliver the current schedules. Thus, from the first of February, they have approximately seven months leeway and, according to sales executives in New York, without question should deliver all remaining pictures within that time.

By the middle of October major companies had sold approximately 50 per cent of total product and although the selling year was one of the slowest to get under sail, it had increased its tempo until at that time practically all major companies reported sales substantially greater than they were for the corresponding period of 1932.

What They Have Done

Companies this year found themselves selling in a competitive field to theatres formerly affiliated with the parent company with which deals heretofore were closed automatically in New York. As a result, field sales forces were placed in a position of their greatest importance since 1925, and selling was slowed up materially. Actual distribution of new season product usually was well along by September 1 in earlier years; this season it was only just beginning at that time. The following figures give a comprehensive idea of just what has been accomplished since then:

	No. Announced	Delivered Feb. 1
*MGM	46	16
Monogram	28	14
Paramount	65	26
RKO Radio	51	16
Universal	36	16
Warners:
First National	30	8
Warners	30	9
†Columbia	49	14
United Artists	36	11
Totals	423	156

 In addition to two on 1932-33 schedule.*
† Including 12 westerns and six Class "A" pictures.

The listings show Fox and Monogram hold the record for current season distribution of total announced, each having delivered half of their schedules before the season is half finished.

Studios Slow Down

The consensus among sales executives in New York was that with seven more months in which to complete the current output all remaining features will be delivered, provided production schedules on the Coast are maintained. Reports from Hollywood this week indicated studio activity was considerably below normal, with only 28 features in work as against 22 features in preparation to start within two weeks. Already completed and in the cutting rooms were 47 features.

MGM had five features in work, leading the field among the larger companies. The company also had one feature in final preparation, while 12 features were reported in the cutting room.

Paramount followed as a close second with six features in work, two in preparation and four in the cutting room; Warner had four in work, three in preparation and nine in the cutting room; Fox, three in work, three in preparation and five in the cutting room; Columbia, three being made, one preparing and three cutting; RKO Radio, two in work, six preparing and five before the cutters, while 20th Century, releasing through United Artists, had one in preparation, another in the cutting room, but none in work.

Six productions were to go before the cameras at Fox Movietone City this week, bringing the current running schedule to a total of 16 features either completed, cutting or preparing.

Warners to Deliver 60

A. W. Smith, home office sales executive, said of Warner activities:

"We had 60 pictures set for 1933-34 and we will deliver every one of them. We can and will do it, although it may mean late selling again as it did last year."

If one company's schedule is not maintained, thereby necessitating another late selling season, all companies probably will be given a similar opportunity to "clean up" their remaining 1933-34 pictures. All companies belonging to the MPPDA this last year agreed not to start selling until "it appeared advisable."

MGM officials declared that while the company might not complete its distribution schedule by September 1, production executives are making every effort to maintain a program to allow for delivery of one feature a week until that date. This would place the entire 46 in the hands of exhibitors by that time, there being 30 weeks remaining with 16 pictures already delivered.

Eddie Golden, Monogram sales director, said Monday that the company would complete its schedule by the middle of the summer at the latest, while John D. Clark of Fox indicated that unless unforeseen circumstances arise that company would be in a position by summer time to lay its final plans for 1934-35 product.

Columbia is a little behind schedule, but expects several immediate releases, distribution executives said.

Discuss 1934-35 Plans

Several large companies have begun planning next season's product. United Artists contemplated 36 features for next season, including 12 from 20th Century, four from Samuel Goldwyn, four from Reliance, 14 from the company's British affiliates, London Films and British & Dominions, and two from an independent source not yet selected, according to Joseph M. Schenck, president.

Universal will produce a minimum of 14 features abroad next season, eight in London and six in Paris, with prospects that the total may be increased. Story conferences on Universal's 1934-35 program already were well underway in New York, between Carl Laemmle and his son and R. H. Cochrane and James R. Grainger.

MGM's 1934-35 program, scheduled for discussion following the arrival in Hollywood of Nicholas M. Schenck this week, was expected to include 52 features.

Fox also was contemplating at least 52 features for 1934-35.

FOX AND MONOGRAM HAVE DELIVERED HALF

Fox and Monogram are the only two large companies which have delivered half of their 1933-34 pictures. Universal has delivered 16 out of 36 up to the same date, February 1.

156 Pictures Delivered by February 1 Out of 423 Promised by Nine Companies; Fox and Monogram Lead with Half

German Industry Shows Marked Upward Trend

The low point in attendance and gross receipts in German motion picture houses was reached in July, but these are now showing a definite upward trend, according to Department of Commerce reports. In small cities and towns returns during the July-September quarter showed an improvement as compared with the corresponding period for 1932.

Not on Amsterdam Roof

National Broadcasting Company has not maintained any theatre studio since moving into Radio City, New York. In an article in the issue of February 3 it was stated that NBC continued to maintain a studio theatre on the roof of the New Amsterdam.

ON THEATRES, STEAKS AND ABALONE

colored tops and broad, costly Stetsons in tones of cream and tan.

There are fifteen kinds of steak on the menu of the Scharbauer dining room, and the top of the list is the "K. C. Sirloin," meaning of course Kansas City—which is way down east from Midland.

In this there is a subtle, perhaps not entirely conscious admission that it takes the good yellow dent of the Midwest's corn belt to make real meat. The cactus clad ranges of the big southwest produce only the chassis of a steer. The feed lots of Kansas, Iowa and Illinois put on the finish that makes him beef.

A favorite of the region appears to be what is designated as a "chicken fried steak." Careful knife-and-fork research seems to indicate that it is a bit of round that has been hammered to a pulp on the block, soused in flour and simmered done clear through. The result is good, but it is not steak, nor yet chicken.

DIVIDING SUNDAYS

WHEN you come to Sonora you are deep into south Texas and right smack in the middle of the big, big range country, where from here to yonder is always a day's ride.

Sonora is a proud little cow town of 1,900 population. It has an illumined arch to welcome you and to say that it is indeed the heart of the cattle region. It has its celluloid opera, too, the La Vista theatre, operated by Fred Lehn, with 350 seats and an untiring demand for action drama picturing the life of the great open spaces.

The Sunday show issue of Sonora has been neatly settled. The La Vista puts on a Sunday matinee and no show at night to interfere with the goings of the churchly.

With less than two thousand residents, Sonora boasts an all night restaurant, caring for the ever moving cowmen, riding over their great domains by motor. Coffee at dawn in Sonora is recommended. They put enough beans in the pot.

"MAKING" HISTORY

APPROACHING New Orleans down in the Teche in the Acadian French region of Louisiana a sign post in one village boasts that "Here Henry W. Longfellow wrote his immortal poem about Evangeline."

In the first place there was no Evangeline and in the second place Mr. Longfellow never saw Louisiana.

And all that serves to remind me that in a few hundred years Evangeline will have passed entirely out of myth into fact, and that the facts will be proven by the statue of Evangeline, erected near Grande Pre in Nova Scotia, by the initiative of Mr. John Murray Gibbon, publicity agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Canadian Pacific got quite weary of having the sight-hungry tourists demanding relics of Longfellow's heroine and went in a business-like way about supplying them. A lot of history and religion gets substantiation by force of the same tourist demand.

And yet critics carp about what the screen does to history.

". . . Some nine thousand miles of these United States . . . brings me to the interesting conviction that the motion picture makers are strangers in and to this country of ours. . . .

"This argument for curtailment . . . does not reflect the spirit on which the industry was built, and it does not reckon with the creative force of the unserved market. . . .

"The producers who will set about discovering America will find a land of opportunity. . . ."

IT BOILS DOWN TO "E. V."

NEW Orleans was not quite complete as I loitered through, because E. V. Richards was reported "out of town." In this case "out of town" meant Mr. Richards was somewhere west in Texas concerned with some outpost of his dominion. New Orleans and the Gulf Coast on the east as far as Sparks and on the West as far as Hoblitzelle is Richardsland on the motion picture map, you should know. What happens moviewise in that region he ordains, or knows or approves, largely.

In the words of one bright young man on New Orleans film row: "If you sift out anything in this business down here, when you get all through you'll have E. V. left."

Just now the Louisiana situation is getting a flow of new enthusiasm from Harry McLeod, a Chicago advertising man, who has appeared on the scene to operate the historic St. Charles theatre. Mr. McLeod makes no pretense to tradition of showmanship, but he is applying what he deems to be, and is proving, ideas of salesmanship to the public.

At the moment it appears that admission prices in New Orleans are going to be raised a trifle and that maybe some of the astonishingly destructive cutthroat lotteries of the neighborhood theatres will be eliminated. Some New Orleans theatres, generally speaking, have been busy through the depression giving away premium merchandise rather than selling pictures, if the testimony of local observers is to be taken at par.

ANTOINE'S OYSTERS

IN New Orleans there are groceries that warrant comment. The city is accustomed to good food on the average and when you get above the average there is eating fit to write about. There's Arnaud's for instance, where one can get an after dinner drink so spectacular that they turn out the lights to let it blaze.

If a choice has to be made, the premier dish of New Orleans is Oysters Rockefeller at Antoine's down in the heart of the old French quarter. Hardly second would be pompano bon femme, and there is grave question if the crayfish soup is not entitled to second place.

The general subject of seafood gumbos, as prepared in New Orleans, is also a suitable and proper subject for extended research. Something tells me that next winter the motion picture situation on the gulf coast is going to require my attention for quite a period.

It is pleasant to remark, also, that New Orleans does not seemingly suffer from the loud speaker local booster. New Orleans takes its likker, its climate and its food in its stride, and if you like it you are welcome. They do not inject it into the visitor.

ABALONE AND WAGON IRON

AT which juncture Harry E. Nichols, formerly of California, and now itinerantly adventuring through the South to let the exhibitors renew their subscriptions to this able journal, broke into my quarters at the Hotel Roosevelt, to defend the abalone.

It appears that somewhere a week or two back I made all too casual reference to the gustatory values of that univalve denizen of the Pacific reefs.

"You've got it all wrong," declaimed Mr. Nichols. "You have to prepare an abalone right. First you put it on a flat rock and beat it out flat and very tender with a wagon iron or a piece of motor spring. Then it gets relaxed and fit to cook."

Nevertheless, I am voting against the abalone. If one has to beat a taste into it with a wagon iron, I'll do the relaxing myself and open a can of beans. The Nichols system is so strenuous that it produces an appetite that leaves the consumer without judgment.

The abalone shell makes a fair ash tray.

ENTIRE TOWN WIRED

IF you should be rolling down the main street of De Funiak Springs in Florida and chance to be assaulted abruptly by the voice of, mayhap, Miss Mae West, inviting you to "come up some time," or to hear the cooing Miss Harlow, the strident Mr. Beery, the belligerent Mr. Cagney, be in no wise alarmed, it is just a movie promotion.

It seems that for some years DeFuniak has, after a manner of speaking, been entertained by the ingenuities of one young Mr. Lionel Vickery. He was a radio expert in his boyhood, and now he is a grown-up of twenty-one and married.

Mr. Vickery is now on the staff of J. E. Churchwell's DeFuniak theatre and in that connection he has achieved his greatest work to date. He has in fact wired practically the whole town for sound.

From the projection room of the theatre, sound wire leads run from the amplifiers to cone speakers located in no less than three open-front drug stores in the village. At the will of the operator the dialogue and music of any picture running can be thrown all over DeFuniak, and through a microphone in circuit it can be interlarded with announcements and comment from the booth.

In DeFuniak there is no peace and one might just as well go to the theatre, because there is no escaping the program anyway.

SAME BASIC IDEA

PASSING through Waycross in Georgia on a Saturday—the Lyric theatre is playing "Fighting Cowboy," starring Mr. Buffalo Bill, Jr., and, to our infinite delight, is following this bill with "Dinner at Eight."

You will understand that Saturday is farmer's day in all such towns in Georgia, and farmer's day calls for westerns.

But, by what fancy do Mondays call for "Dinner at Eight?" The Waycross promotional answer is embodied in the naive and locally added line on the billing announcing that "this picture presents more stars than any other movie ever made." So you see Waycross seems to have the same basic idea that young Mr. David Selznick seems to have had when he made it.

NEWS TO D. W. GRIFFITH

UP above Savannah just a few miles, on the coastal highway, is a tiny road sign pointing the way shorewards to "The Hermitage Plantation."

The Hermitage is in the ruined relic of what was indeed a great plantation in the days before the war—what the South prefers to call "The War Between the States." There are the crumbling walls of a great southern mansion, and some quarter of a mile of slave cabins, a slave yard with its old auction block, and all about giant vistas of hoary, moss bearded live oaks that can remember when.

The bent caretaker and collector of the tourists' fees has a charmingly inaccurate lecture on the establishment. Its real history is history enough, but he has embellished it with a curious account, entirely fictional, about how there D. W. Griffith got the inspiration for the making of "The Birth of a Nation" and returned in years after to photograph the picture on the spot. This will be a lot of news to Mr. Griffith.

Dick Sutherland Dead

Dick Sutherland, 55, for years a character actor on the screen and before that on the stage, died at his Hollywood hotel late last week of a heart attack.

Here Comes Carl

CARL LAEMMLE

50 Years Since Laemmle Arrived

It was a chill, wintry day, that January 28, 1884, when two young men left the little town of Laupheim, Germany, en route to the S.S. Neckar, sailing from Bremerhaven for New York. It was no more pleasant when the two, with another young pair, sailed on the Neckar January 31, with something less than $200 among them.

The boys took to their berths, and spent thirteen weary days prostrate. On February 13, the Neckar was outside New York harbor, winter fog-bound for 24 hours. On the 14th the fog cleared, and the boys staggered to the deck for their first glimpse of the Statue of Liberty, through a chill rain.

The four boys and their futures: Leo Hirshfield made a fortune in candy and gelatine. Julius Hilder took to "notions" and founded one of New York's largest importing houses. Julius Klugman found furs extremely lucrative. The fourth young man of 17 was one Carl Laemmle, who in the ensuing 50 years became somewhat conspicuously known in the motion picture industry, then not even a dream.

Next week the anniversary of that memorable voyage on the S.S. Neckar will be recalled by the president of Universal Pictures Corporation.

Form New Ohio Exhibitor Unit

A new exhibitor unit, to be known as the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, was the result of a two-day meeting of independent Ohio exhibitors at Columbus this week. The sponsors are Nat Charnas, Toledo; Henry Greenberger and M. B. Horwitz, Cleveland exhibitors' association; Elmer Shard, Charles Sine and Willis Vance, Delaware, O.; John Schwalm, Hamilton; Sam Lind, Zanesville; C. S. Pfister, Troy; L. F. Eick, Martin's Ferry; Max Stearn and J. Real Neth, Columbus.

It was announced that the following would resign as officers and directors of the MPTO of Ohio: Mr. Lind, Henry Biberson, Jr., Martin Smith, Mr. Schwalm, Mr. Pfister, Mr. Eick, Mr. Neth and Mr. Stearn.

P. J. Wood, business manager of the MPTO of Ohio, also let it be known that he would resign. Members of the association agreed that membership shall be restricted to independent theatre owners of Ohio. A statewide mass meeting of all Ohio independents was scheduled for February 15 at Columbus to elect officers and directors.

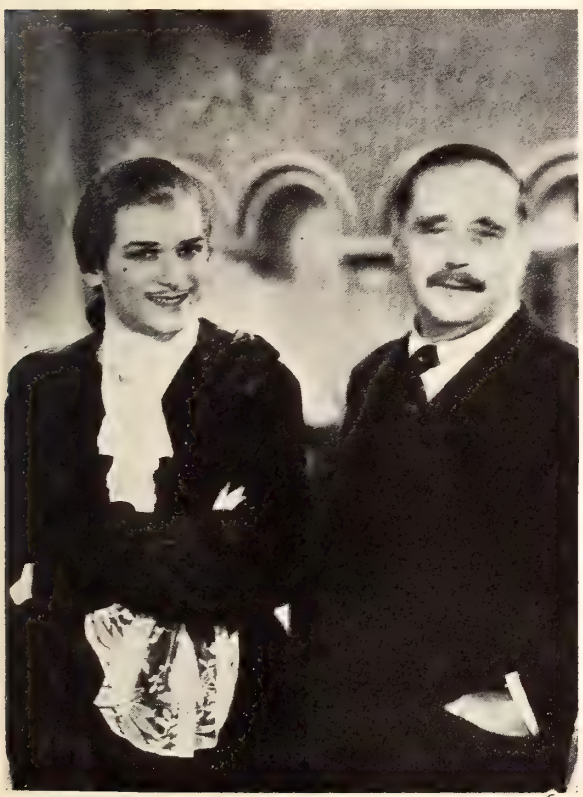
Trumbull Named To MPPDA Post

Walter Trumbull, veteran newspaperman and syndicate writer, last week took over his new duties as publicity director for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

Mr. Trumbull recently served as the introducer of radio talks by Louis McHenry Howe, one of President Roosevelt's secretaries. His publicity duties at the MPPDA office will be confined, it is understood, to national publicity.

New Orleans Better Films Council Formed

The New Orleans Council for Better Films has been formed to promote better motion pictures, and is a reorganization of the Better Films Committee of the Louisiana Cooperative Educational Association. The officers are: Mrs. A. S. Tucker, president; Mrs. Joseph E. Friend, Mrs. Henry Alcus and Miss Lottie Miller, vice presidents; Mrs. W. J. Cousins, secretary; Mrs. John E. Regan, treasurer; Mrs. Allen Johness, program chairman; Nicholas Bauer, educational chairman, and H. S. McLeod, motion picture industry chairman. Board members are: Mrs. Arthur Nolte, Mrs. Charles Behre, Mrs. Reuben Chauvin, Mrs. James W. Resily, Mrs. P. A. Blanchard, Mrs. F. Gordon Eberle and Mrs. Idabel Giefers.



To Continue Showmens Films

D. J. Mountan, president of Showmens Pictures, Inc., announces that he has reinstated the Showmens production contract with Screencraft Productions, Inc., and that the balance of Showmens program will be produced by Screencraft Productions, Inc. Production on "St. Louis Woman" will be started next week.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

COAST FAREWELL PARTY. Gathered to wish God-speed to Arch Reeve, head of the Fox studio publicity department, who switched places with Gabe Yorke, similarly placed at the home office. At the Beverly Hills hotel in Hollywood, colleagues and press honored Mr. Reeve. Among them, starting at the lower left may be identified: Bill Pine, Paramount; Don MacElwain, MGM; J. Leroy Johnson, Universal; Barrett Keisling, MGM; Joe Breen, MPPDA; Colonel James Wingate, MPPDA. At the head, center table, are Harry Brand, United Artists; Joe Cunningham and Mr. Reeve.

HISTORIAN. Herbert George (better known as H. G.) Wells, who, with Alexander Korda will make a picture for London Films, on that company's set with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., star of "Catherine the Great," which United Artists is releasing here.

BRITISH AGENT. In person, and in New York. R. H. Bruce Lockhart, English envoy to Russia during the World War, whose autobiographical account of his adventures, "British Agent," is to be adapted for the screen by Warner, with Leslie Howard as the star. Mr. Lockhart is in the United States on a lecture tour, during which he will recount his adventures in diplomacy.

IN ACTION. On the set at the Monogram studio, where, with everything set to shoot, Kitty Kelly, Marguerite de la Motte and John Halliday rehearse a scene for "Woman's Man," while Ben Verschleiser, supervisor, squats in the foreground, and director Edward Ludwig, seated, watch proceedings.

VETERAN. (Below) Of the newsreel. Leon Franconi, one of Pathe News' first editors, who is participating in the opening of the Embassy Pathe News theatre on Broadway this week.

YOUNG CHARM. (Left) As exemplified most attractively by a girl who made the steep grade to screen popularity and success, Miss Jean Parker, who was most recently seen in "You Can't Buy Everything," a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture.

VACATION. Clark Gable, star of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, arriving this week at the Grand Central Station, New York, with Mrs. Gable, for his first vacation in several years. He has come to rest—and sign autographs.

MODERN CARAVAN. The "Moulin Rouge" Caravan, starting a coast-to-coast exploitation tour in the interests of the United Artists-Twentieth Century film, receiving the good wishes of the government, so to speak, as Postmaster General Farley signs a menu card at Washington for Anna Q. Nilsson, as Roscoe Ates, Mary Carlisle, William McAdoo and Speaker Rainey look on.

CAMERAS MISS A GREAT CAT FIGHT

What would have been a thrilling film sequence was sadly missed by the cameras on Monday in the Public Auditorium at Cleveland, where Clyde Beatty, famous animal trainer, who made "The Big Cage" for Universal, was performing with his cats in the Al Sirat Grotto Circus. At a preliminary rehearsal, one Sammy, huge male lion, went berserk, fastened his teeth in the throat of a young female, and despite Beatty's courageous efforts, refused to let go until $400 worth of lioness rolled to the floor of the cage, dead. When the trouble started, Beatty, armed only with whip and blank cartridge revolver, herded the four other cats to one side, and waded into the thick of the fight. He prodded and pushed, attendants turned streams of water on the battle, but Sammy would not let go. When the battle was over, Beatty urged the others into their quarters, changed his clothes, and returned to put his cats through their paces at the regular performance.

Kastner Is United Artists Managing Head in Europe

Lacy W. Kastner has been appointed managing director for United Artists in Europe, with headquarters in Paris, succeeding J. A. Koerpel, resigned, according to an announcement from Arthur W. Kelly, vice president in charge of foreign distribution.

Mr. Kastner joined United Artists in Paris in 1928 and for the past few years has been sales manager of the French organization. Mr. Kelly also announced that Emanuel Silverstone, recently connected with the United Artists office in Panama, has been appointed special representative for London Films, the British producing affiliate of United Artists. He will make his headquarters at the United Artists home office.

Columbia, United Artists End Brazilian Arrangement

Columbia is terminating its agreement with United Artists whereby that company distributes Columbia product in Brazil. Columbia has named Emilio Alcoste manager of the exchange which is to be opened in Brazil shortly under the supervision of Clarence C. Margon, in charge of South American sales.

Columbia has closed a deal with Foy Productions, whereby it will distribute "Called on Account of Darkness," featuring Wallace Ford, Dickie Moore and Barbara Kent.

To Pick Baby Stars

The Wampas, Coast advertising organization, will select baby stars, an annual affair, on February 27. Nominations close February 13.

PATHE NEWS ENTERS RADIO ADVERTISING

Independent Production of Metrotone Newsreel Again Denied; Pathe News Operating Embassy; Movietone Staff Cut

Came a stirring this week, after a long somnolence, in the world of the newsreel.

Pathe News almost simultaneously erupts on Broadway and on the air, with a commercial radio tieup, in the first screen alliance with merchandising since the subsidence of the "sponsored" picture wave which rolled up and crashed against the wall of exhibitor opinion just before "decentralization" overtook the circuits.

At the same time there was the perennial winter flowering of the report that the Hearst Metrotone Newsreel would depart from its production alliance with Fox Movietone News and engage in the independent production of its news negative. As is annually customary, the report was dismissed and denied on all sides. Meanwhile within the Movietone organization there were some reductions and readjustments of personnel. Persons familiar with newsreel operation were inclined to doubt that either concern would be interested in a step calculated to markedly increase negative costs, especially in a period when newsreels are struggling to maintain grosses.

Pathe News on 13 Stations

Pathe News is scheduled to break forth on the air through the Yankee network in New England and some three additional stations, thirteen in all, on an arrangement for the use of the news sound track, especially edited, in behalf of Absorbine, Jr., a rubbing lotion, February 18, assuming the signing of contracts which have been in preparation some weeks.

The commercial aspects of the deal in behalf of Absorbine Jr., are confirmed at the office of Irwin Wasey & Company, advertising agents. The project is said to have been born in the mind of Nick Dawson of the firm of Dawson-Butcher-Nontague, radio producers, and according to "Radio Art" now acting as the agents of Pathe News.

Meanwhile Pathe News came to Broadway in its own, or approximately its own, theatre, by succession to the Embassy Theatre, abandoned as the Fox newsreel theatre a month ago. The Embassy opened as an all-newsreel theatre under the auspices of the Fox organization during the regime of Courtland Smith, promoter of Movietone, and now the president of Pathe News, Inc. It was in the nature of a national sensation for some weeks, doing a capacity business at 25 cents the seat. Across the land a score of kindred projects were born, but with no myriads of tried Broadway feet to support them, and mostly they died aborning. Meanwhile Mr. Smith moved on, in the earliest stages of the era of revolutions in the Fox corporation, and engaged in the promotion of the Trans-Lux turnstile newsreel theatre project which is now mostly history. Presently, before Trans-Lux had demonstrated itself as an idea so completely as now, Mr. Smith became president of Pathe News in the Hiram Brown era of administration of RKO picture interests, immediately after that concern acquired Pathe's topical pictures department along with assorted other production assets.

The Embassy reopened under the Pathe News banner Wednesday last with various ceremonial accompaniments, appropriate to the occasion despite the extra dry policy of the newsreel management. Leon Franconi, famous first film editor for the Pathe concern in America, and reputed first editor of Pathe News, was a figure on the occasion as the guest of honor.

Ten Dropped at Fox Movietone

The official announcements failed to make specific the relation between Pathe News, Inc., and the theatre, adding to the possible questioning by heading the publicity as jointly issued "from F. C. Wood, managing director" of the theatre "and Rutgers Neilson, Pathe News." In newsreel editorial rooms it was the current story that three employees of the Pathe reel, W. French Githens, assistant editor, Harold Wondsel, editor, and Tom Chalmers of opera and stage, also of the editorial staff, were participants in the project with some major backing coming from the fortune of Ogden Hammonds, real estate, and one time ambassador to Spain. Mr. Githens was an attache in the embassy, and there, incident to Fox Movietone's pursuit of King Alfonso, he met the movies.

At the Fox Movietone production plant staff readjustments brought the reassignment of some members and the dismissal of about ten others, including Kenneth Upton, Charles Peden, James McKee, sound men, Beverly Jones, film editor, James Lillis, camera and contract man, George Altman and Joseph Rinehart, cutters, Rody Green and John Tonda, cameramen, and Linn McManus, lecturer.

Five Leave Fox Staff

Thornton Sargent and Paul Snell have resigned from the Fox Coast publicity department, bringing the total of resignations to five since Gabe Yorke arrived to take charge. Harry Brundidge, Kay Mulvey and Bertha Jancke resigned early. Frances Deaner and Mel Riddle have joined the department.

Recommends Payment

Payment of claims totaling $41,000 against Rhode Island Theatres, Inc., operating houses in Providence, Pawtucket, Woonsocket and Newport, was recommended by Kirk Smith, receiver, in a report filed with Judge Churchill in superior court, Providence, last week.

Vitaphone To Build

Warner will close the Vitaphone studios in Brooklyn shortly while a new sound stage is being erected. Production will be stopped for five weeks.

McDONOUGH AT RADIO
ACADEMY'S NEW LIFE
ELISSA LANDI'S CLOCK
ALL HAIL TO CORNELL

THE current focus of interest, not to say excitement, this week is the Radio lot. Merian C. Cooper, high flying and far wandering chief of production, who has been back from the East, the South, and the Northwest and the Hawaiian Islands for just a fortnight or so, arriving—as we pause for breath—in the midst of the visitation of Joseph R. McDonough, Saranoff-crowned general manager from New York—has resigned. So far this makes three large resignations that the accommodating Mr. McDonough has accepted—Harold B. Franklin, Samuel Lionel Rothafel and now Mr. Cooper. At this rate, one might assume, the operating problems of the corporation are being rapidly eliminated by evaporation.

Of course, there is not, after all, anything necessarily unfriendly in the parting with Mr. Cooper. He is yet likely to be a contributor to the output of Radio under its now-to-be-adopted plan of unit production. His personal production successes, including notably "King Kong," have given indication of his value as a novelty and specialty producer, and that is likely to be the line of his continuing picture activity.

Hollywood does not know about this Mr. McDonough and—he is not telling them.

Aylesworth Goes to Coast

Meanwhile, further palpitations of interest are responding to the tidings that, as these lines are written, Mr. M. H. Aylesworth, head of National Broadcasting Corporation, and incidentally president of RKO, is now on his way out to Hollywood to take a hand in or a look at, or both, the new alignments on the Radio lot.

The impact of Mr. McDonough, who wears his hat with collegiate nonchalance, and talks, if any, as crisply as a credit manager on a hard Monday, appears calculated to bring to Hollywood a new message—that motion pictures are looked upon in some quarters as merchandise. It is also to be gathered that it is the McDonough view that sales organizations and the customers should have something to say about the goods. This naturally is a somewhat devastating invasion of the sanctity of the "creative community."

The McDonough thinks fast and talks tough.

The Aylesworth thinks fast and talks fast, but soothingly.

The Radio lot will get apparently quite a little of each, and some of it will spill over into general Hollywood.

And among those who are alert in this picture making land, all have their eyes and ears toward what anybody connected with "the electricals" is doing or saying. Some are aware there is to be a tomorrow, and the end is not yet.

B. B. Kahane, head of the picture producing corporation, presiding at the studio, says the lot will go entirely unit production. In statu quo ante remain Pandro Berman, Kenneth McGowan and Lou Brock. There will be some additions, presently to be selected and announced.

According to a report heard over a first-class transom, there have been moments when David O. Selznick, now flourishing on the MGM lot, would have been willing to consider a return to Radio. But the stethoscope discovers no murmurs that would tend to indicate such a happening.

However, most anything might happen on Gower street—has happened, in fact.

The future film activities of Mr. Cooper will be conditioned somewhat by the state of his health, which has been none too good for the last year. It is understood that he has a deal, somewhat tentative, for the making of "The Last Days of Pompeii." He is also much interested in the really alluring possibilities of a production based on the life and career of the incredible Cecil Rhodes, precisely the type to appear to the adventuresome Mr. Cooper. There remains in the background, too, Cooper's friendship with Jock Whitney and assorted associated millions, some part of which are available for sporting screen possibilities with the smack of thrill and adventure in them.

Somebody injected a few quarts of adrenalin or something during the week and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, supposed to be in the last stages of rigor mortis, suddenly began to leap around again. The recently resigned Technicians Branch, emulating the prodigal son, returned in toto. Don Gledhill, given a healthy salary boost, is thrilled to know that his job as executive secretary is an actuality rather than an illusion. And heartened by the Sol A. Rosenblatt fiat that the outfit is some pumpkins in the industry, after all, the whole personnel is full of vim and vinegar again. Enthusiasm is merely a bush league description of the meeting which appointed the Annual Awards Committee to prepare for the March 15th banquet when the picture that did amount to something during the period August 1, 1932 to December 31, 1933, will be announced.

Elissa Landi's Time Clock

Temperament, particularly when it's backed up by a legal document, can start the fireworks sputtering. The other day, while working at Columbia in "Sisters Under the Skin," icy Elissa Landi, who has done quite a bit of hopping and skipping around in recent pictures, heard the 6 o'clock whistle toot, and to the stamping accompaniment of a hot, energetic foot, announced it was a day as far as she was concerned. Protests and that good old "die for dear old Rutgers" appeal couldn't make a dent in the frigid Landi determination to hie herself homeward. To one and all who had anything to say, she issued a blanket invitation to meander up to Harry Cohn's office and take a peek at her contract, which emphatically stipulates her working hours. Conjecture is rife as to who carries Elissa's personal time clock. The consensus is that it's the invisible man.

Whenever Katherine Cornell hits town, rumors pop. Last season she was to sign with every major studio in the village, but didn't. It's no different this year. Irving Thalberg, it is said, wants her to star in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." Radio would like to co-star the lady with Francis Lederer. Columbia and Warner Brothers, it seems, have approached La Cornell with lucrative offers. Not to be outdone, Mr. Darryl Zanuck also is alleged to be desirous of luring the noted stage celeb to the 20th Century banner. Hail, all hail Cornell!

The brothers Warner and MGM seem to be handing out most of the screen breaks when it comes to the younger players. While most of the other lots in town are dropping their youthful prospects, Warner's has put five new ambitious youngsters on the dotted line in the past two weeks, and what's more, they are being used. Now MGM comes to bat with announcement that the cast for "Star Express" will include every starlet on the lot.

BEFORE A CRANK COULD BE TURNED

Two productions which have received extensive pre-exploitation campaigns before a camera crank was turned have been canceled indefinitely in the past week. First, Columbia's "Red Square," for which Lewis Milestone and Laurence Stallings spent considerable time in Russia gathering facts for story background, has been shelved for the time being because Jack Cohn, in charge of distribution, declared the present market could not show a profit for a three-quarter-million-dollar negative. The other picture is "Strictly Dynamite," which Radio has been ballyhooing for the last three months, capitalizing on the good fortune of being able to feature Jimmy Durante. Now that Schnozzle cannot find time to sandwich this production in between his Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer pictures, "Strictly Dynamite" is indefinitely shelved after considerable expenditure on story and preparation. (There is no significance in the juxtaposition of the two titles.)

CHILDREN'S FILM TASTES AGREE WITH ADULT IN COMMUNITY STUDY

Parents and Teachers of New York Suburb Find Pupils' Opinions on Pictures Tally Almost 100% With Own

By FRED AYER

That the motion picture industry thus far has cultivated only a very small portion of its potential field in entertainment suitable to the needs of children is the contention of the Parent-Teachers Association of Pelham, New York. Under the auspices of Joseph C. Brown, Pelham superintendent of schools, the Association two weeks ago completed a comprehensive survey of the trends of motion pictures, including short subjects, and the tastes of the community's children and youth in this direction.

Between 1,300 and 1,400 questionnaires were sent out to all Pelham school children above the fourth grade, specifically requesting such information as the types of pictures preferred, favorite actors and actresses, the number of times weekly each child attends a motion picture theatre and which pictures the child liked best of all ever seen.

Two Classes of Previews

In addition, the Association divided itself into previewing groups of five persons each and witnessed each picture shown in the territory during the month of December and registered opinions on their suitability. The judgment of the children on the same pictures was then taken and compared with the opinions of the adults.

The results of the adults' previewing were recorded as follows:

1. Out of 78 pictures shown during that time in the territory, including features and shorts, 17 portrayed scenes of horror and violence;

2. Fifteen dealt almost "exclusively" with sex;

3. Seven were objected to on the basis of vulgarity;

4. Six pictures dwelt upon unpunished crime;

5. Twenty-eight showed intoxication as a form of amusement;

6. Twenty-two had scenes of sexual misconduct.

Of the 78 pictures, 34 were features. No cartoon comedies were reviewed in this manner.

The records of expression of the children's opinions on the same pictures showed that their tastes follow more closely those of their adult advisors than similar surveys in other sections would have us believe.

The one variation from the voiced opinions of the adult previewing groups in Pelham was the selection by boys of both the grade schools and the high school of "The Invisible Man" as being among the "best pictures they had ever seen." The adults rated this picture objectionable for youths and children, as a "horror" picture.

Girls of both classifications rated "Little Women" first of those they liked best and the parents concurred 100 per cent in this choice.

"The survey really had its inception when various of our members read 'Our Movie Made Children,' published last summer under the auspices of the Motion Picture Research Council," Mr. Brown said. "We decided it would be as well to test our children on the strength of that book and find out whether or not everything in it could possibly be accurate. No two people among us could come to complete agreement on the contents of the book, so this survey is the result."

Among the many things that the controversial "Our Movie Made Children" stated was that "Love" occupied 29.6 per cent of all motion picture themes; "Crime," 27.4 per cent, and "Sex," 15 per cent. The findings of the Pelham group agreed with these figures.

"The question was whether or not we were getting pictures in our theatres which, as judged by the parents, were objectionable to our children," Mr. Brown said. "These figures certainly speak for themselves."

Asked whether he considered crime pictures tended to incite children to criminal conduct, Mr. Brown declared it was almost solely a matter of environment.

"If a child is brought up in a sordid atmosphere practically anything might sway him. I believe definitely that crime pictures, especially those which show the criminal in a favorable light, are certain to have an unfavorable affect upon those children who by nature are criminals. However, it seems to me that it is stretching quite a considerable point to say that crime pictures affect all children."

The survey showed that of boys in the grade schools the favorite actresses, in order of their approval, were Katharine Hepburn, Janet Gaynor and Ruby Keeler. The favorite actresses of grade school girls were Katharine Hepburn, Ruby Keeler and Marie Dressler. Favorite actors of both grade school boys and girls were Clark Gable, Richard Dix and Joe E. Brown.

Boys Like Westerns

The grade boys, in giving their preferences of types of pictures, rated westerns in first place and comedy second, while the girls gave first place to comedy and second place to stories with love interest. In neither grade nor high school voting among boys were "love" pictures considered of sufficient importance to be placed at all.

Favorite pictures of both boys and girls in the grades, also listed in the order of their rating, were: "Little Women," "The Invisible Man," "Son of Kong," "Duck Soup," "Flying Devils," "Bring 'Em Back Alive," "Wings," "Tarzan of the Apes," "The Prizefighter and the Lady," "Dancing Lady," "City Lights" and "Cavalcade."

In the high school classifications, the favorite actresses of the boys were Jean Harlow, Marie Dressler and Ruby Keeler. The boys' favorite actors were Lionel Barrymore, John Barrymore and James Cagney.

How High School Pupils Voted

The high school girls liked best Leslie Howard, Bing Crosby and Robert Montgomery, while their choice of favorite actresses showed preference for Katharine Hepburn, Joan Crawford and Norma Shearer. Out of 500 girls in the high school voting not one mentioned Mae West, nor was she mentioned by any of the grade school children.

"Best pictures ever seen" by the high school boys were, in the order of their approval, "Duck Soup," "Footlight Parade," "The Invisible Man," "Ace of Aces," "Cavalcade" and "Wings."

The girls chose "Little Women," "Smilin' Thru," "Footlight Parade," "Dancing Lady," "Cavalcade" and "42nd Street."

While the survey had its origin in the Pelham territory, other sections of New York's Westchester County are making plans to conduct similar experiments, Scarsdale and Bronxville being among these.

WHAT'S A PELHAM? HERE'S THE ANSWER

Just as many have inquired "What are Yonkers?" the exhibitor may ask what precisely a Pelham is.

Pelham is a suburb of New York, 45 minutes from Broadway. It is the home of such persons as William W. Hawkins, vice-president of the Scripps-Howard papers; Robert J. Bender, vice-president of the United Press; Orison McPherson, illustrator of the Saturday Evening Post and a hockey player of some note. William L. Chenery, editor of Collier's, lives in Pelham, as does John J. McGraw, former manager of the New York Giants.

Pelham, in Westchester County, has a population of 2,053. The population of the three Pelhams—Pelham proper, Pelham Manor and North Pelham—is 11,851.

In Pelham proper there are five churches of various denominations; seven schools, one newspaper and one bank (closed). Social, cultural and educational activities outside of church associations and school clubs are centered in the Manor Club.

Pelham is one of the wealthiest and most influential centers of cultural life in New York State.

HELL-RAISERS' ADVICE IS NOT WANTED BY CODE AUTHORITY, SAYS COCHRANE

When Mistakes Are Made, Say So, but Be Sure You're Right, Declares Member, Pointing Out Need of Going Slowly

Every Member of Local Boards Must Be Above Suspicion If Code 'Is To Be Worth a Rap,' Declares Universal Executive

At the invitation and instance of Motion Picture Herald, Mr. Robert H. Cochrane of Universal Pictures Corporation, a member of the Code Authority, has written a discussion of the status, attitudes and aims of that newly constituted organization. It is of interest to observe that Mr. Cochrane is especially qualified in various respects and that he is, it chances, in nowise concerned with circuit theatre operations or any relation to exhibition other than as a distributor of motion pictures. The article with which Mr. Cochrane has responded to the Herald's invitation is a document of typical Cochrane candour.

—TERRY RAMSAYE

By R. H. COCHRANE

Member of Code Authority and Vice-President of Universal Pictures Corp.

As a member of the Code Authority, I have received many suggestions to the effect that the Code Authority should "immediately" set up the local zoning and clearance boards and the local grievance boards. This is easy to say. Every member of the Code Authority has realized from the very start that the organization of these local boards was vitally important, and that no time should be lost in doing it.

So, no time has been unnecessarily lost. Hundreds of names were suggested for the boards. Many of these names have been challenged by someone or another. It took time to get the names in in the first place; it took more time to consider the objections to some of them and it took still more time to select the right members for the various local boards.

MUST BE ADMINISTERED BY HONEST LOCAL BOARDS

Everybody knows that if the Code is to be worth a rap, it must be administered by honest local boards. Every member, like Caesar's wife, must be above suspicion. Try to pick out members enough for 64 local boards who would live up to this qualification, and see whether you can do it hurriedly.

The Code Authority is pioneering. It does not want to make mistakes. It prefers to function too slowly rather than carelessly. It has already been served with papers in lawsuits which show on their face that the Code Authority is going to be criticized for its acts even before it commits any acts.

R. H. COCHRANE

There cannot be any man in the motion picture business so dumb as not to know that on the fringe of the business there are certain men who make their living out of fault-finding. Unless they stir up dissension and raise hell in general, they have little or no excuse for drawing their salaries.

The real trouble between distributors and exhibitors is not real at all, but synthetic. It is manufactured by men who cannot live on harmony but who make their living out of creating discord.

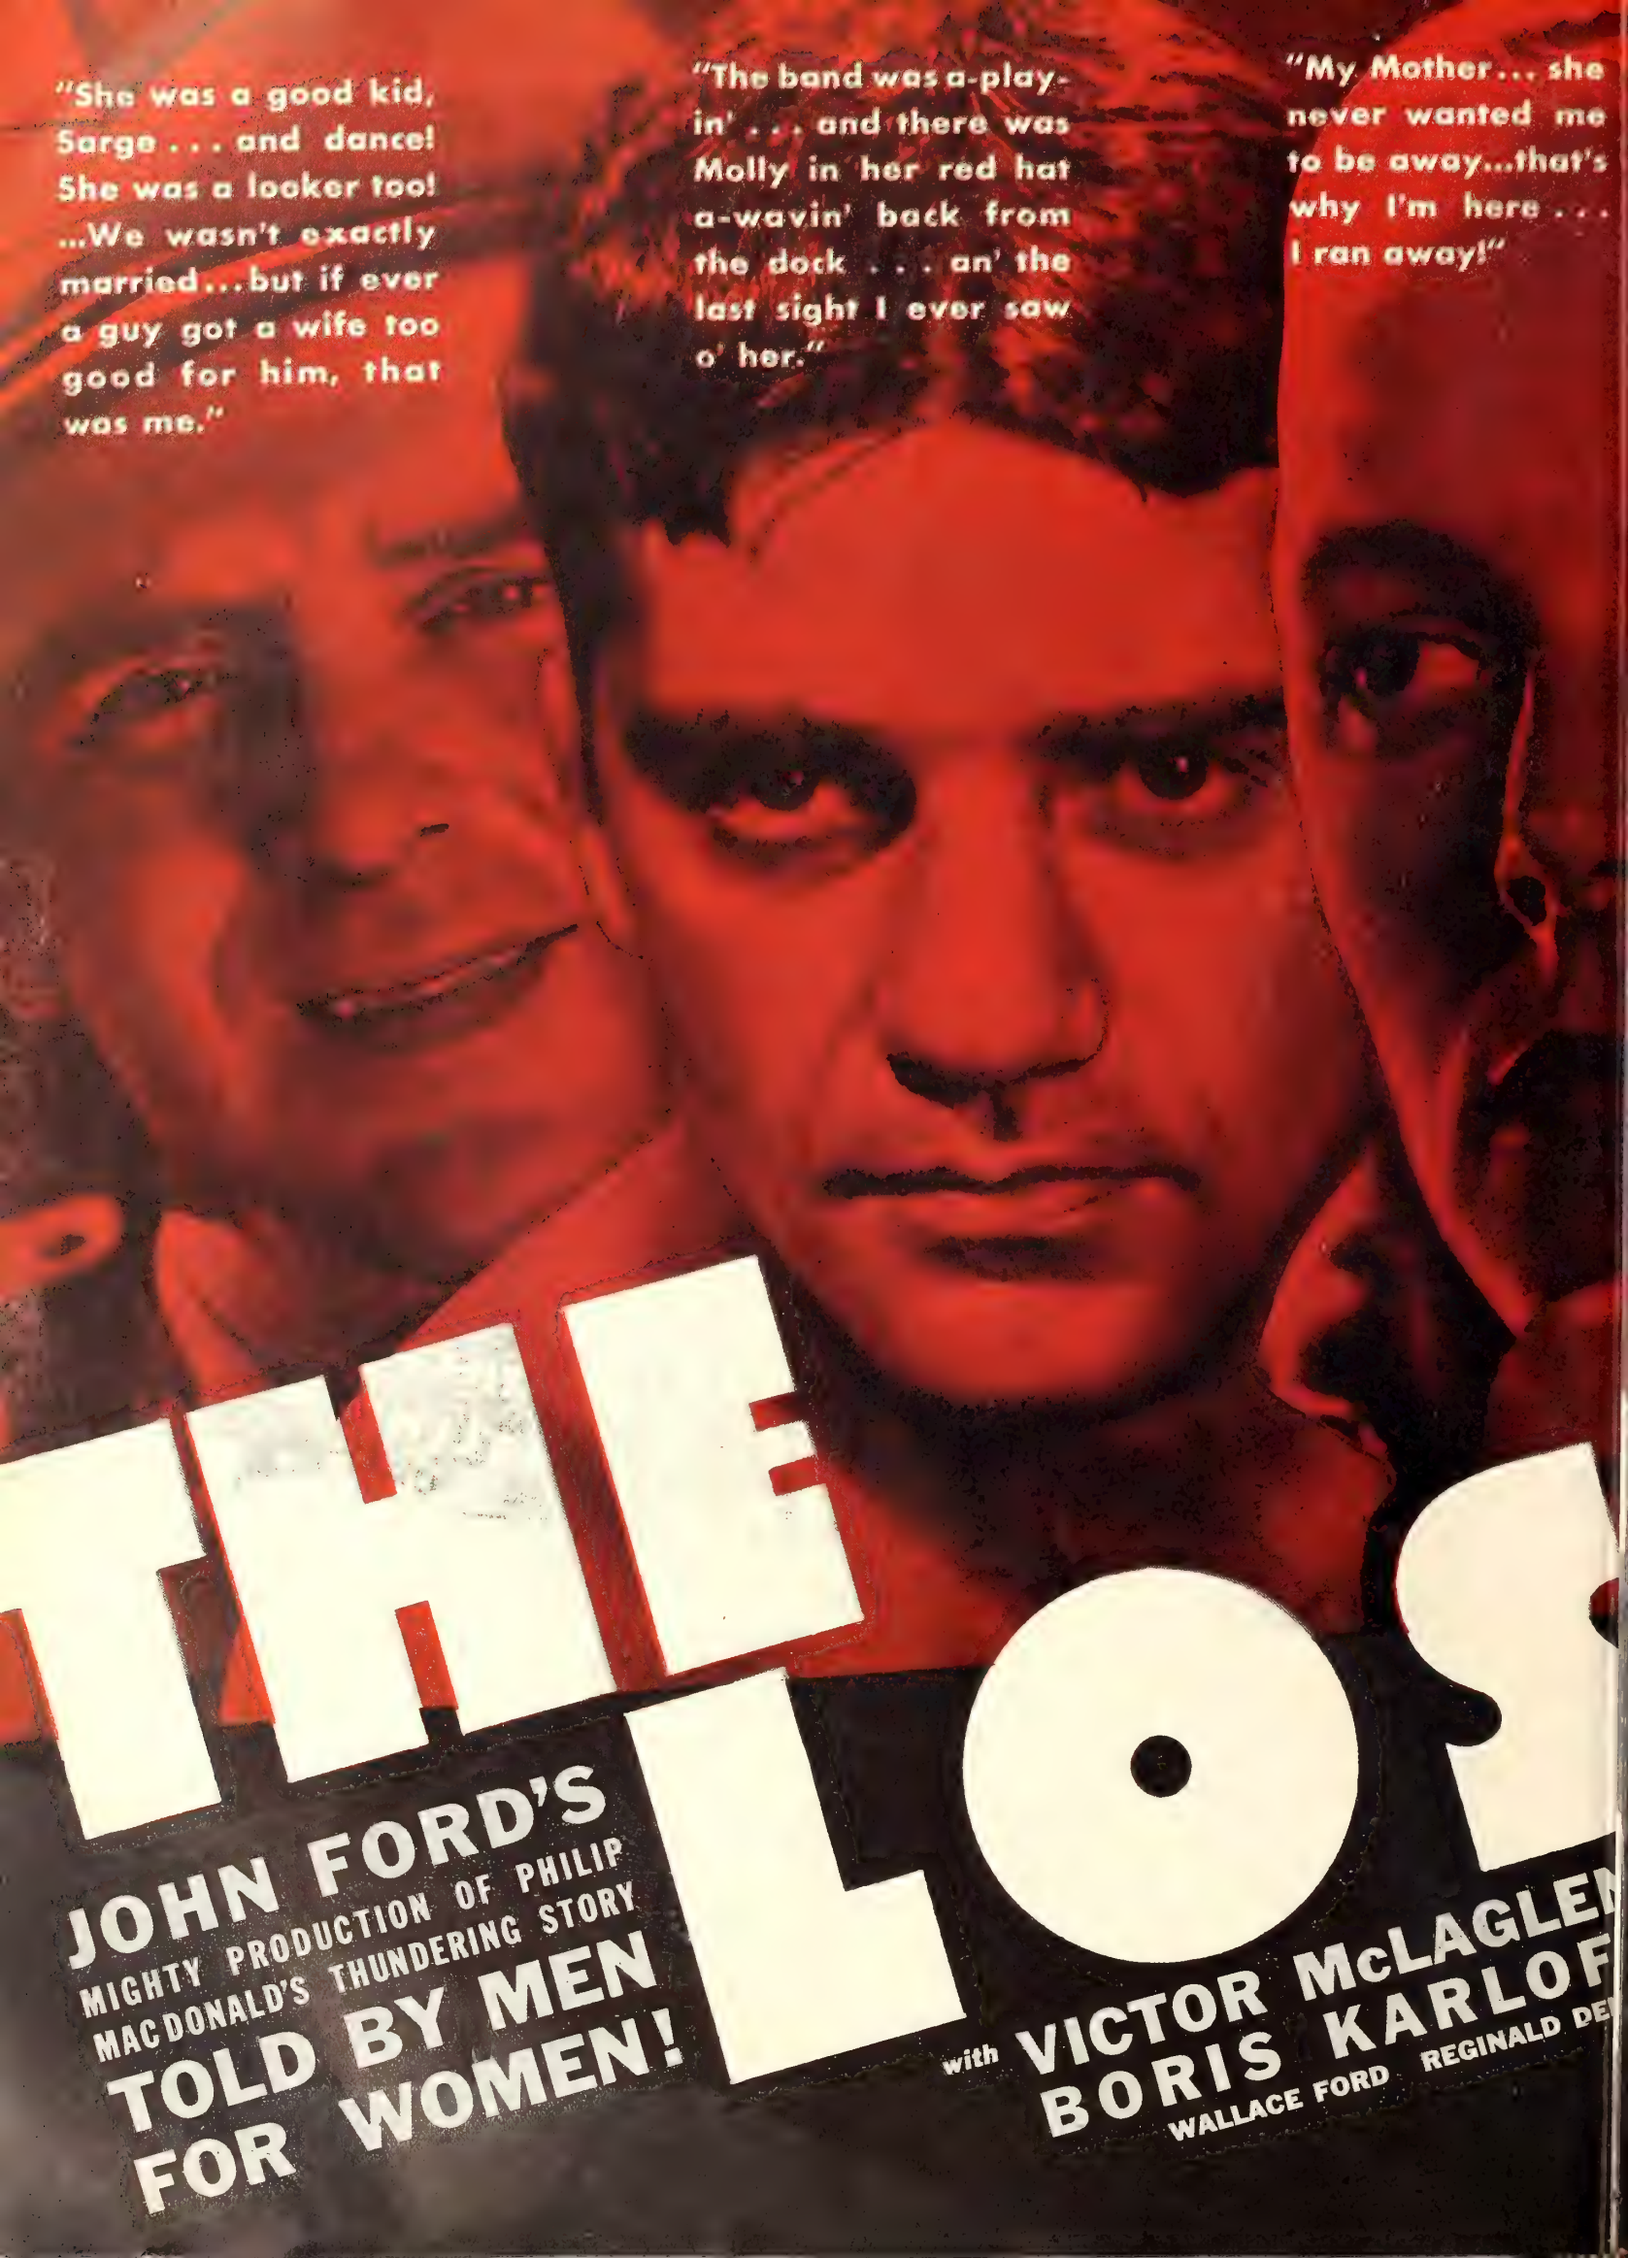
For example, in all the years I have been an executive of Universal, we have had no troubles with exhibitors which could not be cleared up by a full understanding of each other's motives and problems. A very few times in the past quarter of a century, I have received complaints from certain trade paper editors or heads of exhibitor organizations, claiming that one of Universal's branch offices had worked a hardship on some exhibitor. I have always investigated every complaint right down to the last analysis.

I have found in at least 99 per cent of such cases that the whole trouble arose from a misunderstanding, due largely to the fact that the exhibitor wanted to buy for as low a price as he could and the fact that the Universal salesman wanted to sell for as much as he could. In all of a quarter of a century I have found only a handful of cases where either the exhibitor or the Universal agent was completely wrong. Nearly every case was susceptible to decent adjustment, with nobody hurt very badly.

Yet in nearly every case, someone has tried to prove that one side or the other was dirty, low, villainous and unforgiveable.

JUDGING ON MERITS, NOT FALSE CHARGES

So, as a member of the Code Authority, I am going to judge the various problems of this business on their real merits, rather than on the manufactured charges of anyone who makes his living out of stirring up trouble. I believe that nearly every quarrel between exhibitor and distributor can be cleared up by a mutual understanding—an honest review of facts.



I believe that the Code can be administered fairly, honestly and decently. I think that is exactly what will happen when the Code is given a fair chance to operate. But I do not believe this highly desired end can be attained unless every member of the Code Authority shuts his ears to outsiders and decides every question on its absolute merits.

In conclusion, let me say this—and I speak only for myself and not for any other member of the Code Authority:—Don't rush the Code Authority. Don't judge it in advance. Don't impugn its motives. Don't give it any suggestions unless you are willing to assume as much responsibility for the results as you would if you were a member of it. Don't give it irresponsible advice.

We are living under a new deal. We don't know just what it means. We are trying to find out. We are trying to get rid of the evils which have vexed the industry. We are not being paid for this. We have a responsibility to the whole trade. If you haven't an equal responsibility, keep your criticisms to yourself. When we make mistakes, say so, but be sure you're right! That's what the Code Authority is trying to do.

TOLD BY MEN ... FOR WOMEN!

"She was a good kid, Sarge . . . and dance! She was a looker too! ...We wasn't exactly married...but if ever a guy got a wife too good for him, that was me."
"The band was a-playin' . . . and there was Molly in her red hat a-wavin' back from the dock . . . an' the last sight I ever saw o' her."

ROSENBLATT MOVE ON SALARIES AND STAR "RAIDING" IS AWAITED

Separate Local Boards Asked for Northern New Jersey and for Jacksonville Area; 870 Total Nominations Received

All was quiet during the week along the motion picture code front. It was principally a case of watchful waiting.

Exhibitors and exchangemen were cooling their heels in anticipation of the Code Authority's final selections for the local boards which will serve as the code machinery for distribution and exhibition in the field.

Hollywood was, privately, more than a little bit anxious to learn what recommendations Mr. Sol Rosenblatt would make to the NRA with regards to the suspended excessive salary control and talent "raiding" clauses.

The NRA at Washington and the Code Authority in New York were, respectively, hoping that the industry would speed along the salary questionnaire and code assent blanks.

Allied in some places was withholding code acceptance blanks pending disposition of its suit against the Code Authority, scheduled to be heard February 20.

The distributors' home offices in New York, too, were waiting for something: a final decision from the NRA regarding retroactivity of the 10 per cent elimination privilege to December 7 on contracts signed previous to that date, but carrying releases subsequent to December 7.

Rosenblatt Back from Coast

The fate of the temporarily suspended clauses pertaining to curtailment of excessive salary payments and prevention of "raiding" in Hollywood rested with Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, who returned to the Capital Monday.

Mr. Rosenblatt made one outstanding observation and that concerned the wide difference of opinions held between executives on the west and east coasts.

Morris Legendre, his assistant, intimated during their stopover at Kansas City last weekend, that the code provisions governing talent "raids," and control of excessive salaries, may "possibly" become effective as a result of Mr. Rosenblatt's first hand inquiries.

However, "it is not certain that these two suspended clauses will be retained in their present form," added Mr. Legendre.

It is expected, also, that Mr. Rosenblatt's final report will recommend changes in the working conditions of Hollywood talent and labor, and, possibly, changes in the clauses.

Royalty Basis Discussed

As to a royalty payment basis for talent, Mr. Rosenblatt restricted his comment. but his assistant said: "The question is difficult to decide because block booking enters into it."

First results of the salary questionnaire sent last month to all companies—producers, distributors, circuits—will be available early in March, it was predicted this week by Mr. Rosenblatt.

Addition of two new local boards for Clearance and Zoning and two Grievance boards bringing the total to 34 each, loomed when it was announced by the Code Authority that requests had been received from exhibitors in the northern New Jersey and Jacksonville, Fla., territories that problems be handled in their respective areas.

The committee on appointments to boards, consisting of John D. Clark, Charles L. O'Reilly, George J. Schaefer, W. Ray Johnston, Nathan Yamins and Ed Kuykendall, were to meet Thursday to decide on this question and to prepare its final report on nominations to all local boards for presentation to the Code Authority session in New York Friday. Nominations totaled 870, with 370 posts to be filled. The committee has set up tentatively 28 of the 34 zones for approval. Names still were coming in despite the January 20 deadline. New York led with 54 nominations. Following is a city-by-city recapitulation of nominations:

One hundred nominations had been received for the 68 impartial outside representatives, one for each of the 68 boards. Included are bankers, lawyers, heads of mercantile companies, heads of utility corporations and others.

Efforts will be made to start some of the boards functioning around March 1. A number are expected to be approved by both the Code Authority and Mr. Rosenblatt on Friday.

In at least one large city, it was understood that exchange managers had forwarded requests to the Code Authority asking their names be eliminated from boards.

Nathan Yamins, Allied's representative on the Authority, is understood to have opposed membership recommendations from Boston.

U. S. Aid in Suit Doubted

Members of the Code Authority named in the pending Allied-Congress Theatres suit in New York were expecting governmental aid in the matter of legal representation.

On Wednesday, however, it was indicated at Washington that Code Authority members, other than Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, who will receive government legal counsel, will be expected to retain their own private counsel. A decision on making an appropriation to cover the cost of defending individual members will be made at Friday's meeting of the Authority.

Morris Legendre said Tuesday in Washington that he believed Allied has a definite basis for its suit against the Code Authority and Mr. Rosenblatt.

NRA officials in the Capital declined to make any final decision on the Rosenblatt ruling on the 10 per cent cancellation clause which would make it retroactive to December 7 on all pictures released after that date, although they might have been contracted for prior to that time.

Seven Thousand Code Assents Filed

At press time on Wednesday, the Code Authority in New York had received about 7,100 code assents. There were still about 13,000 to be filed before the deadline, February 28.

It appeared that hundreds of Allied members were withholding their signed blanks until the Allied-Congress Theatre suit against the Code Authority is disposed of. It comes up in New York district court February 20.

Taking time out for a meeting on the trucking code, Mr. Rosenblatt said on Monday that the film Code Authority in New York probably will retain its own counsel to defend the Allied-Congress Theatre suit, but that a special assistant to the U. S. Attorney General, aided by a member of the NRA's legal staff, would defend him and the code.

Resignation of Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth as a member of the legitimate theatre Code Authority, effective February 6, was taken to be the first step toward making effective the recently enunciated determination of Administrator Johnson to end Code Authority service by deputy or division administrators of his NRA staff. Mr. Farnsworth will be succeeded by Robert K. Straus, son of the present American Ambassador at Paris.

In view of that action, it was believed that Mr. Rosenblatt will resign from the film Code

LOST: ONE CODE VIOLATION PENALTY

William Cutts, pioneer Portland (Ore.) exhibitor, made haste to call at the NRA offices in answer to their letter advising him that he had been found guilty of violating a provision of the code pertaining to operating a lottery in his house.

"Well, gentlemen, here I am," said Mr. Cutts. There was a hurried search among the files to find the penalty for violation but none could be found, nor any NRA official with authority to enforce it. The case rests, temporarily.

Code Authority Members, Except Rosenblatt, Expected to Retain Own Counsel in Allied Suit; 7,000 Code Assents Filed

UNSKILLED LABOR PAY SCALE IN NEGOTIATION

Secretary - Treasurer of Building Service Union Calls New York First - Runs' Attitude "More Than Favorable"

Wage scales for unskilled motion picture theatre employees are now being negotiated between the Building Service Employees Union and several of New York's first-run theatres, including the Paramount, Roxy and Rialto. In addition, the new proposed contracts were submitted to Skouras, Randforce, Loew's, RKO, Manhattan, Springer & Cocalis, Consolidated, Century and Lee Ochs circuits.

According to Charles C. Levey, secretary and treasurer of Local 118, BSEU, no strike of ushers, doormen, ticket sellers and janitors, all of whom comprise the membership of the union, is believed necessary in order to obtain satisfactory wage and hour schedules for these classifications. Such a strike, however, was called at the Paramount, Stapleton, S. I., Wednesday, when 17 employes walked out. The house was immediately picketed by the local.

Musicians Seek Autonomy

Another important development in the union situation this week, while not specifically directed at motion picture theatres, was the beginning of a fight to dethrone Joseph N. Weber as "czar" of the American Federation of Musicians. A turbulent meeting was held by more than 3,000 members of the Associated Musicians of Greater New York.

The musicians voted unanimously to conduct a referendum on March 12 at which the more than 15,000 members of its local 802 will be asked whether they favor local autonomy.

The local has organized an emergency council which charges that members have been misrepresented by union officials in negotiations with government agencies to relieve unemployment. The council also says the union has been exploited for the benefit of a few musicians favored by the officials.

The meeting Monday was private, but report had it that the delegates first voted to demand repeal of a 1 per cent tax recently imposed upon gross earnings for support of the organization. A. H. Nussbaum, who heads the executive committee of the emergency council, declared the union in the past has attempted in vain to force officials to take action to open legitimate theatres on Sundays, abolish a "kickback" racket to return part of the musicians' salaries to theatre managers or contractors for theatre orchestras, and also to cease cooperation with motion picture theatres and broadcasting studios which used "canned" music to the disadvantage of professional musicians.

A United States Senate special sub-committee on crime is investigating the union's charges.

The conviction of Sam Kaplan, former head of Local 306 of the IATSE and MPO, and his ouster from the IATSE were affirmed this week by the appellate division of the New York state supreme court. A lower court several months ago gave Kaplan a prison sentence of six months on charges of coercion of members.

An order making the order of the court of appeals the order of the supreme court in a dismissal of an appeal by three receivers was written last week by Justice Lydon, thereby bringing to a close the receivership action involving Local 306. The receivers were denied commissions of $7,500 and counsel fees of $3,000, and were further made to bear the burden of $900 in disbursements.

Prospects of opposition to any possible changes in the stage talent code provisions appeared Tuesday night when a special subcommittee appointed by the motion picture Code Authority convened at the New York Athletic Club.

Eddie Cantor, Administration representative on the Code Authority, and Mrs. Dorothy Bryant, secretary of Chorus Equity, gave notice Tuesday that they would oppose any move by the subcommittee to decrease minimum wages or increase maximum hours of stage talent from the code provisions. Mr. Cantor was quoted as saying he would resign from his Code Authority post if adverse changes resulted.

After a four-hour session at the Hotel Astor in New York late last week, at which were discussed probable changes in the vaudeville code as a section of the motion picture code, bookers, producers, agents and actors were agreed on one point only: that vaudeville had seen better days. The meeting was called by the motion picture Code Authority.

The center of a controversy which has been raging for several weeks between vaudeville personnel and motion picture theatre circuits and houses having stage shows and acts, is the $7.50 a day and $40 a week minimum wage section of the code. Several theatre men have declared they cannot pay this wage as well as traveling expenses.

Executive Order Explained

Several committees were appointed by the meeting to investigate the matter and report to the Code Authority on February 9.

National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson and Donald R. Richberg, NRA general counsel, this week issued a statement declaring that because of the erroneous interpretation by the press of the Executive Order of the President, which empowered the National Labor Board to supervise the conduct of elections to determine employee representative in certain cases, explanations as to what is and what is not covered by the order would be forthcoming, as follows:

1. The Executive Order provides a method whereby any group of employees may select by majority vote representatives to act for them in relations with employers.

2. Such selection does not restrict or qualify in any way the rights of minority groups of employees or of individuals in dealings with employers.

3. Affirms right of employees to organize and bargain collectively.

4. Employees' representatives in company unions are to be chosen by the employees and not by employers.

Authority, although probably not until its activities are well underway. Mr. Farnsworth is expected to remain on the radio Code Authority for a time.

However, the resignation of a deputy or division NRA administrator from any Code Authority will in no way lessen their supervisory powers over the code applicable to that industry.

Seeks NRA Officials' Records

Deputy and division administrators and others of the NRA were involved in another Washington situation during the week when a resolution under which would be made known the business history of all officials of the NRA was introduced in the Senate, on Tuesday, by Senator Nye, of North Dakota. The information sought would develop any cases where negotiations on codes have been in charge of officials who formerly had interests in the industries under discussion which might influence their decisions. Information also would be asked regarding the members of all Code Authorities and their business connections.

A new NRA Blue Eagle insignia has been developed for the codified industries, and will be distributed in the film industry soon by the Code Authority.

The Code Blue Eagle will differ from the present recovery bird by having the letters "N.R.A." between its wings in blue instead of red, and by the words under its talons "Code (trade or industry registration number) 1934."

Each poster, in addition to identifying the code under which it is issued, will bear the registration number of the firm, corporation or individual entitled to display it. Until the new insignia is received, the old Blue Eagle will continue to be shown.

"This eagle will be the consumers' assurance that the employer, manufacturer or merchant who displays it is operating under a code which not only guarantees his workers decent working hours and decent living wages, but also binds the employer to the maintenance of a rigid standard of fair practices in competition," General Johnson explained.

Creditors Get Two Per Cent

Creditors of the Skinner Brothers Manufacturing Company, Inc., St. Louis, will receive a dividend of two per cent under a circuit court order. Total claims against the company total $407,245. The company manufactured heating and ventilating systems for theatres.

ITOA Continues Radio Ban

The Independent Theatre Owners Association, in New York, voted last week to continue its ban on Radio, following a meeting with Jules Levy, general sales manager, and Robert Wolff, New York exchange head. Mr. Levy said he would cooperate with owners individually. Harry Brandt was reelected ITOA president this week.

Would Regulate Billboards

Two bills introduced into the New York legislature at Albany last week would create a state billboard bureau for taxation and regulation.

COURT RETURNS VITAPHONE-ERPI FIGHT TO N. Y. ARBITRATION BOARD

Delaware Supreme Court Reverses Chancery Ruling; Vitaphone Not Justified in Repudiating Arbitration Obligation

The legal battle between Warners' Vitaphone Corporation and Electrical Research Products, Inc., involving some $50,000,000 damages, claimed by Warners for certain royalties allegedly due Vitaphone from sound, and which started before an arbitration board in New York State a few years ago, and then suddenly shifted to Delaware courts, was returned to the New York arbitration board Tuesday by a ruling of the Delaware state supreme court at Dover which reversed the ruling of the court of chancery of Wilmington.

With Judges Richard S. Rodney, Charles S. Richards, W. Watson Harrington, Daniel M. Layton and David J. Reinhardt sitting, the Delaware high court handed down an opinion holding that the lower chancery court in Wilmington should have refused to assume jurisdiction in the accounting suit filed by Vitaphone against Erpi and held that the lower court erred when it overruled Erpi's plea that all matters involved in the litigation should be submitted to arbitration in New York and also that the lower court erred in ordering the defendant, Erpi, to file an answer to the bill of complaint. It was a reversal of the ruling handed down by Chief Justice James Pennewill, who also sits with the supreme court but had ruled in chancery.

Holds Arbitration Had Not Failed

The opinion of the supreme court adds that the arbitration proceedings which had been in progress for four years until Warners brought the case to court, have not wholly broken down and failed in their purpose and that Vitaphone was not justified in repudiating the obligation to arbitrate entered into by it, and having done so, is entitled to no relief from the courts in Delaware. Vitaphone alleged breach of three royalty contracts by Erpi.

The court revealed in the opinion that the arbitration as far as it had gone in New York prior to Vitaphone's withdrawal had cost Erpi $450,740 and Vitaphone about $300,000, which they had admitted. Arbitrators were being paid at a rate of one thousand dollars a day during the proceedings, plus expenses.

In the 35-page typewritten opinion, handed down this week, in which English law and cases of many kinds are cited, the court goes into extensive quotation of cases in which parties to contracts come into court with "unclean hands." The opinion reads in part:

"This rule and the doctrine of "unclean hands" upon which it is based, would not apply, however, if a contract to arbitrate was not repudiated arbitrarily and unreasonably, and, therefore, without good and sufficient cause.

"By reason of that fact the complainant (Warners) attempts to justify its failure to abide by its contract to arbitrate its pending disputes in this case, and its appeal to the court below for relief, by the contention that the arbitration proceedings have broken down and have absolutely failed to accomplish their purpose.

"This contention is based on two grounds:

"1. Because of the great expense and delay in disposing of disputes in proceedings that were started in 1928 and which involved claims amounting to several million dollars.

"2. Because Mr. Frank J. Hogan, like Mr. Samuel Untermyer, has resigned as an arbitrator, and if those proceedings are to continue the great mass of testimony already taken before him would, therefore, have to be reheard by a new arbitrator, appointed to succeed him."

Court Cites Resignations

The court said that Samuel Untermyer, the first arbitrator, resigned April 11, 1930, after 32 sessions of the Arbitration Board as then constituted. The court cited that the inference from these allegations was that a large part of the controversy had been settled before his resignation. The court pointed out that Frank J. Hogan, Washington attorney, who was engaged in the trial of cases involved in complicated issues, was named as arbitrator to succeed Mr. Untermyer.

The court continued to relate how because of Mr. Hogan's extensive legal practice some difficulties in continuing the arbitration proceedings ensued. It was cited, however, that on June 9, 1932, complainant's counsel stated that they were then unable to agree definitely on a date on which the hearings might be resumed, but would communicate with respondent's counsel next day.

"On June 10th, 1932," the court's opinion reads, "the complainants wrote each of the arbitrators requesting them to resign and indicating their willingness to proceed with the submission."

At this point the court recited that there not only had been 32 hearings before the original arbitrators, but also 30 hearings before the last board of which Mr. Hogan was a member and that 4,079 pages of typewritten testimony had been taken before the last board of arbitration in New York.

The court then said that the arbitration proceedings already had cost Erpi $450,740 and that it is "expressly alleged" that if the Delaware court should retain jurisdiction this would be a total loss to the respondent.

The court went on to say:

"There were delays in concluding the arbitration proceedings, but they are always inevitable in proceedings of that nature where lawyers in active practice are selected arbitrators and the volume of testimony to be taken, as in this case, is great. As a matter of fact, so far as the records show, it seems the delays were almost entirely caused by the arbitrators selected by the complainant.

"It is clear that under the original contracts of May, 1927, the complainants had agreed to arbitrate the matter in dispute covered by the allegations of its bill.

"The resignation of Mr. Untermyer after the mass of testimony had been taken before him, and the great expense incurred, is to be regretted; but even after that the original arbitration contracts were, in effect, confirmed by subsequent agreements and Mr. Hogan was appointed to take his place. There was a time limit for making the award in the original contracts, but there was no such clause in any of the subsequent agreements."

At this point it was brought out that according to the complainant's letter of June 10, 1932, to the arbitrators, requesting their resignation, the amount paid them including expenses amounted to $105,159.

In conclusion the court said:

"In view of our conclusion that the arbitration proceedings, in question, have not wholly broken down and failed in their purpose, so far as a Court of Equity is concerned, the complainant was not justified in repudiating the obligations entered into by it; and having done so is entitled to no relief from this court.

"The facts supporting this conclusion appear in the respondent's plea, but regardless of the merits of the defense therein relied on, it does not make that plea subject to the criticism that it raises more than a single issue.

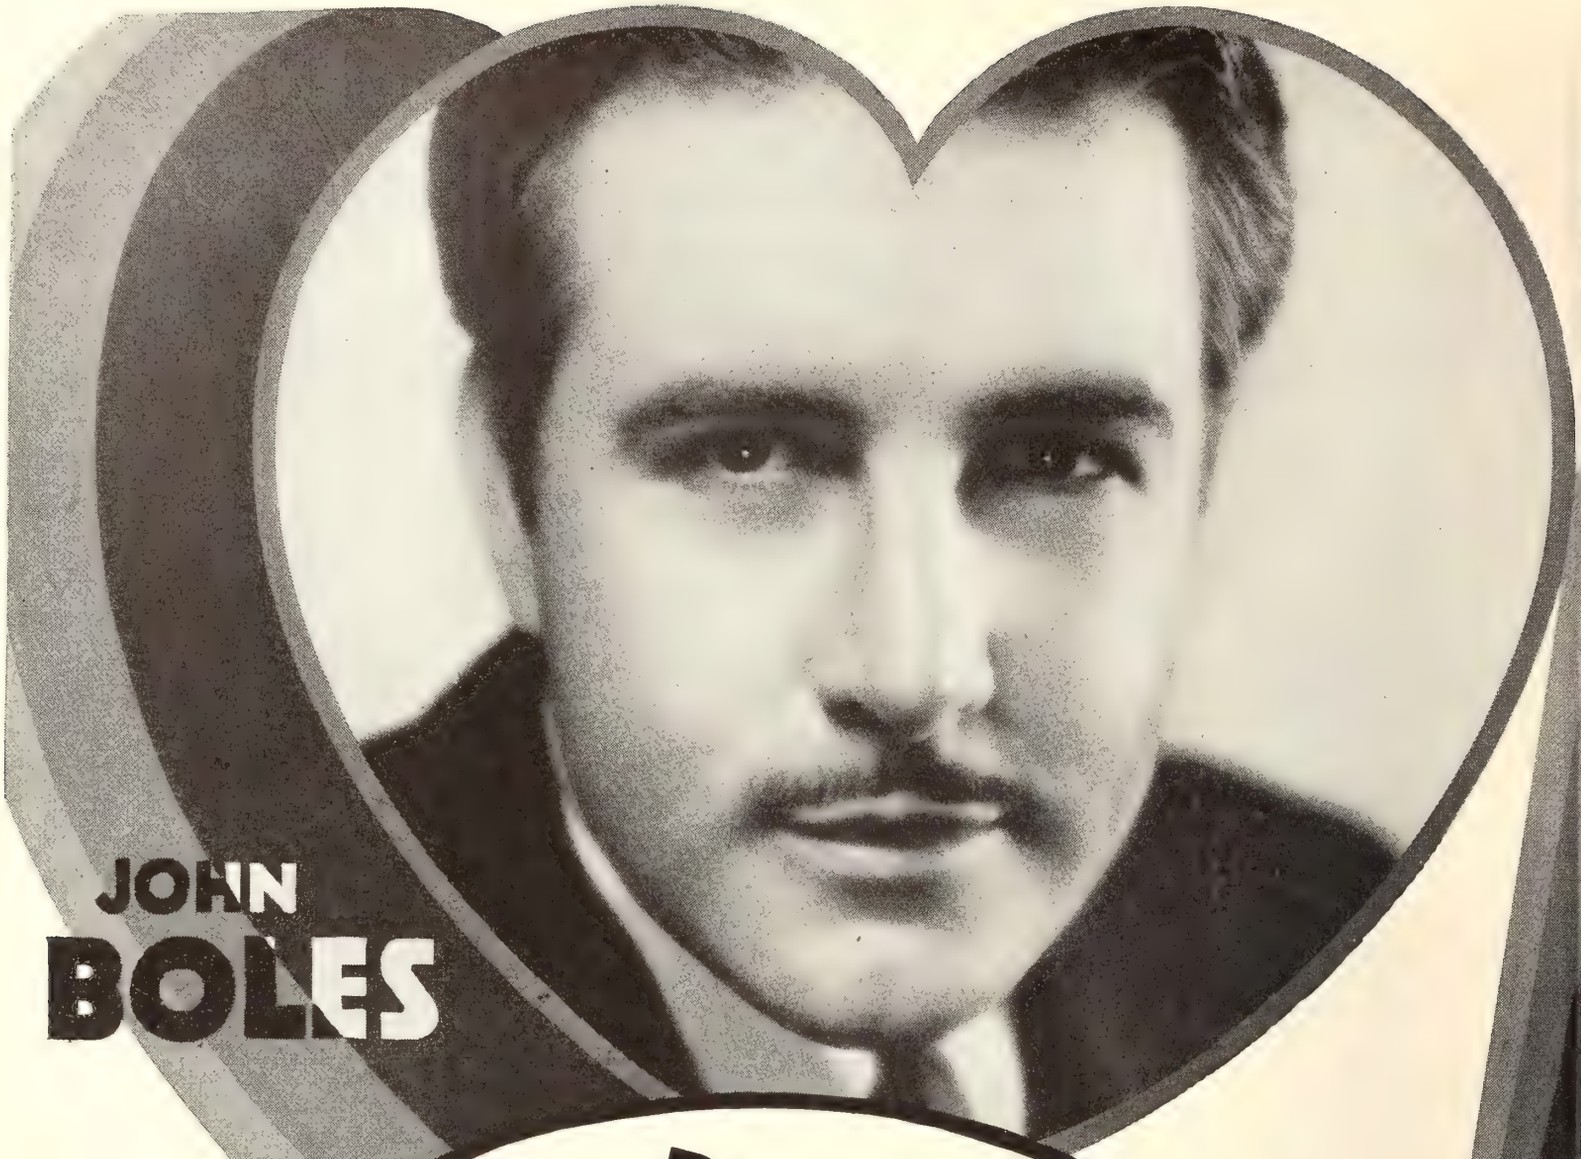
"Our conclusion therefore is that the court below should have refused to assume jurisdiction of this case and committed an error when it overruled the respondent's plea and directed it to answer the complainant's bill."

Sought to Upset Decree

Counsel for Erpi had sent the case to the supreme court at Dover in an effort to upset a decree handed down by chancery court at Wilmington last August. The decree would have required Erpi to file answer to the suit filed against it by Vitaphone.

The supreme court heard argument at Dover October 25.

Erpi argued that chancery had erred in not holding that Vitaphone is barred from prosecuting the action under three agreements entered into between the two and that Vitaphone is compelled to submit all disputes to arbitration in New York under the state arbitration law.



Vitaphone charged Erpi violated their agreements by charging producers licensed by Erpi to use talking motion picture apparatus at $500 a reel royalty instead of eight per cent of their gross profits derived from the use of licenses.

RULING "GRATIFYING," DECLARES ERPI

Electrical Research Products, Inc., in commenting on the Delaware supreme court decision in the Vitaphone case, had the following to say:

"The decision entered by the Delaware supreme court is very gratifying. About a year and a half ago the Vitaphone Corporation tried to abandon the arbitration proceedings it had started against Electrical Research Products, Inc., in New York and to try in the Delaware courts the matters which had gone to arbitration and on which a large part of the evidence had been taken. The decision seems to clear the way for the resumption of the hearings before the arbitrators. We are ready to go forward and hope the evidence remaining to be presented to the arbtirators can be completed and issues decided promptly."

REVIEW BOARD TRACES 25 YEARS OF GROWTH

Tenth Annual Meeting Marks 25th Anniversary of Board; Administrator Rosenblatt Invited to Speak at Luncheon

A review of 25 years of public interest in motion pictures will feature the annual conference and luncheon of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures which was to open a three-day session at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York on Thursday.

The conference, attended by motion picture study groups and Better Films workers from all parts of the country, marks the 25th anniversary of the founding of the National Board and the 10th annual conference.

Under the general topic, "The Films, the Times and the Public," the work of the conference will be divided into two sections, "A Quarter of a Century of Organized Motion Picture Interest," and "Motion Picture Research and Appreciation."

Previews Selectively

The National Board of Review is the organization which, through several hundred trained, volunteer citizen reviewers, previews on a selective basis all entertainment films to be shown to the public. The label, "Passed by the National Board of Review," is familiar to all motion picture patrons. Apart from its reviews of films, the National Board is concerned with the development of the motion picture along educational and social lines of usefulness. The board, more than 20 years ago, inaugurated a Better Films movement and has steadfastly opposed legal censorship of the screen, holding that the solution of the film problem—if it be a problem—lies in selection, not censorship.

In reviewing "A Quarter Century of Organized Motion Picture Interest," the delegates to the 1934 conference will consider "The National Board of Review: Its Functions, Yesterday and Today," "The Problems of Motion Picture Review: How It Should Focus in Order to Reflect Public Opinion and Perform the Necessary Critical Function," "The Films and the Community: What Has Been, and Can Be Accomplished, and How to Organize a Community for a Specific Purpose," "The Supporting Church Interest in Community Motion Picture Organization" and "The Response of the Producer to the Cooperative Public Effort."

To Attend Special Showings

Under the second topic, "Motion Picture Research and Appreciation," addresses will be heard on "What Can Research Prove?", "How Research Can Be Related to the Community Effort Pertaining to Motion Pictures," "Motion Picture Appreciation in the High Schools," "A Writer's Viewpoint on Films in Relation to Children" and "The Place of Research in Visual Instruction."

Two special showings of films will be given under the auspices of the National Board's Committee on Exceptional Photoplays. On one evening the delegates will view a program of experimental films, and on the other evening they will preview a new, unreleased film of artistic importance.

Speakers on the Conference program include Professor LeRoy E. Bowman, of the Child Study Association of America; Dr. A. A. Brill, famous psychiatrist; Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson, Columbia University, instructor in photoplay composition; Dr. Worth M. Tippy, executive secretary, department of the church and social service, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; William Lewin, chairman of the committee on photoplay appreciation, National Council of Teachers of English; Gretta Palmer, Women's Page editor of the New York World-Telegram; Dr. F. Dean McClusky, of the National Education Associations Department of Visual Instruction; and Isabel Kennedy, Secretary, Federation of Social Agencies, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Celebrities at Luncheon

Celebrities of stage and screen will be presented to the conference at the National Board's 19th annual luncheon on Friday, at which Dr. George W. Kirchwey, former Dean of Columbia University Law School and Chairman of the National Board of Review, will preside. Among the special speakers at the luncheon are Bishop Francis J. McConnell of New York; Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA Administrator of the motion picture code; John Collier, commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs; Elmer Rice, noted playwright, and Terry Ramsaye, film historian and editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. A summary and round table discussion will bring the conference to a close on Saturday.

Roxy Denies Theatre Personal Appearance

S. L. Roxy Rothafel denied this week that he had signed a contract to appear on the stage of the Paramount theatre in New York with his "Gang." Mr. Rothafel, still resting in Miami, issued his denial by telephone despite the fact that Boris Morros, managing director of the Paramount, previously had confirmed the contract.

Mr. Morros' office on Wednesday declared that "no negotiations will be settled until Mr. Rothafel is back in New York."

MPTOA Picks Los Angeles

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will hold its annual convention, probably in the middle of April, in Los Angeles, Ed Kuykendall, president, announced Wednesday. The exact date will be decided by the executive committee within the next few days.

Moss Joins Paramount

Alec Moss has joined the New York exploitation department of Paramount. He will assist Robert M. Gillham, director of advertising and publicity, and Bill Pine, exploitation head.

Veteran Exhibitor Dead

Julius Greenstone, 72, one of the organizers and a past president of the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, died in that city recently.

Giannini Lauds Film Investment

Dr. A. H. Giannini, chairman of the executive committee of Bank of American National Association, and long interested in the motion picture, sees the film business as the "best in the world" and it "will always be a good business for legitimate capital investment." The banker expressed that belief on his return to Hollywood late last week from New York.

"The best and most recent indication of the industry's stability," he said, "is that every studio carried on uninterruptedly during the depression, while plants in other industries were being dismantled and abandoned. This industry's rewards from enterprise and intelligence are great." He pointed out that in few industries is it possible for such success in a comparatively short time as that achieved by Twentieth Century Pictures.

"Years ago," he continued, "when the industry was growing, I preached against its going into the stock jobbing business and branching out into alien fields. The crash came and my warnings were justified. If the film industry stays in its own field and cultivates its own vineyards, it will reap success because it is sound, stable and legitimate. I have full faith in the industry, and I have confidence in its future," he declared. "When the industry emerges from its receiverships and bankruptcies it will rest on a foundation of unparalleled solidity."

Loew's 12-Weeks Net Doubles 1932 Period

Loew's Inc., in a consolidated earning statement for the 12 weeks ended November 23, 1933, just issued, reports net profit, after subsidiaries' preferred dividends, depreciation and taxes, of $1,594,608, which compares with a net for the corresponding 12 weeks of 1932, of $741,910.

Operating profit for the 1933 period equalled $2,732,607, while for the 12 weeks of 1932 the operating profit was $1,756,815. Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, subsidiary, has declared a quarterly preferred dividend of 1¾ per cent payable March 15, to stockholders of record February 23.

Sussman Heads Paramount Central American Sales

Jerome P. Sussman has been named Paramount general manager in Central America and the northern republics of South America, succeeding John B. Nathan, who is in New York.

T. X. Jones, for several years a member of the home office accounting staff, has been placed in charge of Paramount's auditing forces in Paris. He left with Mr. Hicks late last week.

Cold Detains Hays

Will Hays was forced this week to postpone his return to New York from Hollywood on account of a severe cold. Mr. Hays was in the Queen of Angels Hospital, where his condition was described Tuesday as not serious.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

MR. ARTHUR COLE, office manager for the Paramount exchange in Kansas City, having on February 1 completed 20 years of uninterrupted service with the same company in the same office—thereby establishing somewhat of a record—the other day recalled some incidents that made the business appear to be at least a little bit more enjoyable in the days of its pioneers.

One happening recalled by Mr. Cole had to do with first Famous Players' district manager, one A. D. Flintom, who was possessed of a terrific temper. One morning the vibration of a machine at which Cole was working jarred loose some plaster from the office ceiling below. The debris found a resting place on Mr. Flintom's bald head. Flying into a rage, the district manager pushed all the buttons on his desk and the entire staff rushed in.

Mr. Flintom ended up a vociferous lecture on the total lack of intelligence of his staff by ordering Mr. Cole to get a new crew from the "booby hatch" at nearby Hutchinson. Taking his boss at his word, Cole wrote the superintendent of the state insane asylum as follows:

"If you have any especially dumb people or half-wits in your institution, send them in to us. Our district manager wants a new crew. And if you have one that is particularly not bright, send him along. We want a new district manager, too."

Mary Pickford tells how she was once "handsomely insulted" by an offer to appear opposite Charlie Chaplin, back in the old days when Charlie was just coming along in two-reelers.

"What!—play opposite that mustached little pie thrower? Mary Pickford in a pie picture? Sir, never," was her outraged reply.

"I shouldn't at all mind working in a picture with him now," she added, "except that before Charlie got around to finishing it they'd probably be wheeling me on the set in an old lady invalid's chair."

What Rumania needs is a good loud broadcast of Walt Disney, with the basses and baritones bearing down hard on the chorus of "Who's Afraid of the Big, Bad Wolf?"

The case has just been reported from Chisneff in Rumania that a peasant woman named Chicbanu had been treed by wolves as she was coming home across the snow-covered fields.

She is said to have been rescued from the tree in a state of collapse, having shivered there all night, listening to the wolfpack serenade on the ground below.

The "Moulin Rouge" publicity caravan of United Artists arrived in New York Tuesday afternoon. The roster of players aboard—including, among others: Antonio Moreno, Anna Q. Arriving in Hollywood from an extended European jaunt, Al Rosen, independent producer, said he is going ahead with plans to produce "The Mad Dog of Europe," about Hitler. He told about the decree passed by the Nazis, while he was abroad, purporting to prohibit Jews from swimming in the same pools with Nazis, because the Nazi high command contends that mixed swimming might contaminate the Nazis. Rosen differs; he said mixed swimming might contaminate the Jews.

HOLLYWOOD'S "PURPLE CIRCLE"

Since there has been so much comment on the mean annual temperature of the pictorial art emanating from Hollywood in the promotion of the motion picture, all stills are now submitted to a bespectacled examining committee at the Hollywood branch of the Hays office. Those that are passed and permitted in circulation for the edification of the masses and the decoration of advertising receive an official imprint from the stamp reproduced here. It is the motion picture industry's equivalent of the purple circle on the packing house ham, reading: "U. S. Inspected."

"Not Hot"

While a group of fans, reporters and news photographers thronged around Clark Gable at the Kansas City station, last Saturday night, someone informed the reporters that the gentleman nearby arrayed in black and white checked coat, brown checked trousers and two-tone grey shoes was Sol A. Rosenblatt, returning from a scouting expedition to Hollywood.

"Who's that guy?" they inquired, as Gable smiled and the flashlights boomed and the autographs were autographed.

Such is fame!

As Sol A. Rosenblatt, en route to the West Coast, got off the Santa Fe Chief during a short stop at Kansas City about two weeks ago, a redcap, message in hand, was paging "Mr. Rosenthal."

The Code Administrator stopped in his tracks.

"Rosenblatt?" he inquired.

"Are you with the Hoover people?" the porter asked.

Rosenblatt laughed as he turned away.

"No, I'm a Roosevelt man."

Someone on Broadway dug up the yarn the other day about the noted lawyer, Max Steuer, and a certain Hollywood film mogul, whom Mr. Steuer defended in a famous plagiarism case. The decision was finally handed down in their favor, and immediately Lawyer Steuer wired the Hollywood executive: "Justice Has Triumphed."

Back wired the film mogul: "Appeal the Case."

The discovery in Hollywood of a new "star" named June East proves that it's a small country after all. But Mae West got there first.

COOLIES in Kaifeng, China, cannot go to the movies for a while. The only picture house in town was closed the other day when its manager and the entire staff of sixteen tea-boys (ushers) were lodged in jail en masse, on serious charges.

It seems that a visiting Chinese General mislaid his hat in the theatre, and when the house staff failed to find it, the Governor of Honan Province decided to put them all behind the bars. The reason given was that the Governor felt he had lost "face." The next time it happens the theatre employes probably will lose their heads.

Over here, theatre ushers are protected by Mr. Rosenblatt and the film code.

Motion picture companies which run up and down the scale of adjectives in describing crooners appearing in their musical productions, would rather skip the remarks made the other day by Walter Johannes Damrosch about the crooner-type of songster, who, in the opinion of Mr. Damrosch, is a man who thinks he sings but who "sounds more like a love-sick cat on a back fence."

Mr. Damrosch, conductor of the New York Symphony, has been wielding a baton almost since the day he was born, some 72 years ago, at Breslau, Prussia. Whenever he hears "Hi Ho, Everybody" crooned on the radio, he thinks of his Electra by Sophocles and gets sick.

One of O. O. Swaggering down Hollywood boulevard one day, a gentleman rushed up and pumped his hand. The actor's recognition was vague. He parried when the stranger recalled their many happy hours in the old days and finally high-tonsilled: "I seem to remem-bah you, but, tell me, just who are you?"

Harris New President Of Variety Club Group

John H. Harris was elected president of the new national organization of Variety Clubs at a convention in Pittsburgh last week. It was voted to hold a similar meeting in the fall. Cleveland, Buffalo and Albany were accorded permission to form clubs.

Other officers elected were: first vice-president, M. R. Clark, Columbus; second vice-president, John J. Maloney, Pittsburgh; secretary, William Gehring, Cincinnati; treasurer, James G. Balmer, Pittsburgh; directors; J. E. Fontaine, Cleveland; J. E. Flynn, Detroit; Alvin Wolff, St. Louis; George Tyson, St. Louis; and Harry Goldstein, Pittsburgh.

"New York" Street Set Demolished After Decade

Demolition of the old "New York" street at the Metropolitan studios in Hollywood, which got under way last week to make way for the new Electrical Research Products' $500,000 construction program, awoke many memories of the earlier days of the motion picture.

Built in the early twenties, the street first was used by Harold Lloyd as the principal set of several of his comedy-thrillers. The last company to use the set was Monogram's "Beggars in Ermine."

Monogram will move its administration headquarters from its present one-story structure to the two-story building originally occupied by Howard Hughes.

Paramount Promotes Six Of Sales Organization

Paramount has promoted six men on the sales staff. James J. Donahue has moved from the managership at Salt Lake City to Minneapolis, succeeding Chester A. Roeder, who has been transferred to San Francisco. Harold E. Pickett, Oklahoma City manager, has gone to Dallas. Charles G. Epperson, Salt Lake City salesman, has been named manager there, and Sidney R. Sampson, Dallas salesman, is heading the Oklahoma City office. Gerard Westergren, advertising sales manager at Washington, has gone to the home office, and Stanley R. Chase, ad sales clerk in Washington, has been raised to ad sales manager there.

Roxy Receivership Almost at an End

The receivership status of the original Roxy theatre in New York probably will be lifted within the next 10 days or two weeks, according to a statement issued last week by Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver. Under the Cullman direction the house has found such prosperity that this action is considered justified, the announcement said.

At the present time four reorganization plans are under consideration, with N. L. Nathanson, A. C. Blumenthal, S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel and Herbert Lubin currently reported as instigators of the separate refinancing plans. It is believed the first bondholders' committee has not yet come to any decision as to which plan is most acceptable.

"Any authoritative statement as to a reorganization of the Roxy Theatres Corporation will be issued by the Roxy Theatres Corporation's first bondholders committee, Louis H. Pounds, chairman, or by that committee's attorneys, White & Case, when, as and if any plan meets with their approval. The committee has no statement to make with respect thereto on any plan of reorganization at this time," the statement issued by Mr. Cullman last week stated.

At the offices of White & Case, Carlos Israels said last week: "No reorganization plan has been closed as yet, but it is likely one will be approved within a week or ten days."

Child Sues Paramount On "One Sunday Afternoon"

Richard Washburn Child, author, has filed suit in New York federal court against Paramount, alleging the film "One Sunday Afternoon," adapted from the stage play of the same title, was "stolen" from a short story of his called "The Avenger," first published in the Saturday Evening Post in 1919 and later included in a book of short stories, titled "The Velvet Black."

Mr. Child seeks an injunction and accounting to the amount of $1,000,000. Louis Phillips of the Paramount legal department last week denied the charges, declaring one story does not infringe on the other.

Vete Stewart Film Board Head

Vete Stewart, manager of the Portland, Ore., Warner office, was elected to the presidency of the Portland Film Board of Trade at the annual election last week. 'SUREST-FIRE STUFF OF THE SEASON'

That's the Verdict of Benjamin DeCasseres, Critic and Essayist, on "False Dreams, Farewell"; Other Plays Current Are Discussed from the Hollywood Angle

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

FALSE DREAMS, FAREWELL

This play by Hugh Stange is a kind of "Grand Hotel" of the sea. It is the surest-fire picture stuff of the present season. With an all-star cast and a competent scenarist and director, it will be a picture on which exploitation will be, practically, unnecessary. It will sell on sight.

"False Dreams, Farewell," is in thirty-four scenes. Although the stories do not tie up as in the case of "Grand Hotel," there are enough drama, humor and sex-antics out of which to make several pictures.

The SS Atlantia, New York to Southampton. Maiden voyage. She is not sound. Her owner is forcing the captain to make Europe in three days and a half to save the company financially. The captain is financially hamstrung with a sick wife.

On board there are a celebrated picture actress; an American writer going to Sweden for the Nobel prize (a humorous drunk in the hands of Millard Mitchell); a doctor who has a "sure" cancer serum (Glenn Anders) and his wife, whose face is disfigured because she saved his life in a lab. experiment (Lora Baxter); a priest on his way to Rome to receive the Red Hat—he is accompanied by an old atheist millionaire friend, dying of cancer; a famous Broadway columnist and his wife (who are radioed from America that their daughter has been killed in an automobile accident). And others, others, others.

The high spot in this furious medley of persons and ambitions is the love-making between the picture star and the cancer medico and the murder of the wife by the doctor after she tells him she has tracked him for months and then breaks the precious bottle of serum.

Another high spot is the radio room and the battle between the owner and the captain as the boat sinks.

For sink it does—with the atheist praying to God, the priest granting absolution to him and to all who were filled with contrition, and the band playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." (Memories of the Titanic!).

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD

Potter & Haight, a new producing firm, pulled a big one in "The Double Door." In "Wednesday's Child," by Leopold Atlas, they put on the most original play of the season, a play of parents versus a child that is human, thought-provoking, delicately toned, and one that I'll wager made many a person in the audience wince.

It, moreover, brought us as a star the best boy actor I have ever seen, Frank M. Thomas, Jr. He is also the handsomest, the most manly-boyish (about 11) and the most intelligent. If he isn't Hollywoodbound as this appears, then I'll eat my bronze Buddha.

The Phillips family—mamma, papa and Bobby. Now, Mamma Phillips plays around with another fellow while Papa Phillips is on the road. Bobby, too thoughtful for his years, knows what's going on. The boys do not know which man is his father; their remarks lead to a fight and then poignant tears on Bobby's part.

And then comes the dénouement late one night. Bobby is soundly sleeping and is awakened by a terrible fight—physical as well as verbal—between papa and mamma. Papa has found out.

Divorce proceedings. Novel court scene. Bobby on the stand. Judge awards Bobby six months of the year to the mother and six to the father. They both love him, but he is in the way. They both marry and Bobby is packed off to military school, where he will learn to grow up as the not-wanted child. At 12 he already has had a mouthful of humanity.

There are no "villains" in this play. It is just Life. It brings home one of the most terrible of problems: What does a sensitive child really think of its adulterous and re-marrying parents?

I may be mistaken, but to me it would make a fascinating picture, a worth-while picture; but, knowing the public pretty well, I can only say

Picture value, about 40 per cent.

RATINGS OF PLAYS AS FILM MATERIAL

Broadway plays analyzed for potential screen contents in this issue by Mr. DeCasseres are given the following percentages by him:

"False Dreams, Farewell" — 100 per cent.

"Wednesday's Child" — 40 per cent.

"Come of Age" — 40 per cent.

"Re-echo" — 50 per cent.

COME OF AGE

"Berkeley Square," both as a play and as a picture, was an instance of the most expert welding of the past and the present into a piece of fascinating super-hokum. It is a far better job technically than Mark Twain did in a "Connecticut Yankee."

But Clemence Dane's play, with rhyme and music, "Come of Age," presented by Delos Chappell, starring Judith Anderson, is about the clumsiest attempt I know of along the same lines. It has, of course, picture potentialities, but with the immense success of "Berkeley Square" in the picture consciousness it will hardly, I think, be even a good second.

In the first scene we are present at the death of Thomas Chatterton (1770), the English poet who committed suicide at 18 after being three days without food.

Death and he are in a confab. But while they rhyme, time flows into 1933, and we bob up in Mayfair. Chatterton has made a pact with Death to get himself back in the flesh.

London. Cocktails flow. Chatterton is the lover of The Woman (Judith Anderson). There are intrigues, rivalries and much that is commonplace in pictures today—sex, drink and jealousy.

In the end Death calls for Chatterton again because he told his secret to a woman—a violation of the pact.

There is some terrible "music" now and then, and it is all ineffective and meaningless so far as dramatic possibilities go, whereas "Berkeley Square" is fantistically probable and spotted with humor.

A new English actor, Stephen Haggard, who plays Chatterton, will undoubtedly go Hollywood. He has the "gift."

Picture value, 40 per cent.

RE-ECHO

"Precedent" was a powerful satire on the Mooney case. Its author, I. J. Golden, hit the floor when he tried to show what a Big Bad Wolf the banker is in "Re-Echo," produced by Carol Sax.

The picture possibilities, however, in this play are far more apparent to me than in the first and better play, "Precedent."

Thurston Hall's Richard Lord is a ruthless superman of mazuma. It seems in his youth he wanted to be a poet or something terrible, and his parents squashed that. So he becomes an incarnation of the Forty Thieves, one who would even make Signor Pecora falter in his righteous tracks.

Now, Lord has a son who is going to pull the same trick on his father that his father pulled on his. He's "re-echo," you see.

So while the old man juggles Presidential Cabinets, smashes rare ornaments like old Edwin Forrest and squeezes all his rivals to skinned rabbits, the son is not only going strong for Swinburne but almost actually falls in love with his father's wife number 2—desire under the skyscrapers.

Well, mates, nothing happens. The old man is broken and the boy sticks to sonnets.

Angles here for some heavy picture work for the old Wolf of Wall Street of the Hollywood studios—what's his name? Montagu Love?

RENTAL RULING SEEN AS BIG AID TO PARAMOUNT

Saving of 14 Millions to Paramount Publix and Theatre Subsidiaries in Future Rent Claims Is Now Forecast

Property owners whose tenants go into bankruptcy do not have a provable claim as creditors for the difference between the sum due under a lease and the amount likely to be realized from re-renting the property when the trustees have disaffirmed the lease. the United States supreme court ruled on Monday, thereby saving Paramount Publix and its theatre subsidiaries more than $14,000,000 in future rent claims.

The supreme court's ruling removed one of the chief obstacles to Paramount's reorganization plans and brought the company considerably closer to a discharge from its bankruptcy status. Approximately $11,000,000 in future rent claims are said to be on file against Paramount, with additional claims in the same category totaling $3,500,000 against the bankrupt Publix Enterprises.

Fox Theatres May Benefit

Fox Theatres subsidiaries now in bankruptcy also are expected to benefit from the ruling. Data on rental claims against Fox were not available. RKO has approximately $20,000,000 in rental claims against it but inasmuch as the company is in equity receivership the court's ruling does not apply.

Subsequent dismissal of all future rent claims against Paramount Publix is believed assured by this week's decision, which was handed down in connection with an action brought against United Cigar Stores, a bankrupt, by New York and Omaha landlords who leased properties to the chain store company. Certain leases involved were repudiated when the company went into bankruptcy and the landlords filed claims against Irving Trust, United Cigar Stores' trustees in bankruptcy, for rent on the unfulfilled portions of the leases.

The supreme court's ruling upheld decisions of the lower federal courts in New York, which had held that the bankruptcy relieved lessors of liability under broken leases and that trustees in bankruptcy could not be held responsible for losses of rent caused by repudiation of such leases.

Richards Acts in Peninsula Case

The landlords contended that many concerns went into bankruptcy merely to break leases, and charged that this was particularly true of chain organizations. The tenants countered with the assertion that landlords could not prove specific damages from leases broken in bankruptcy because the properties vacated easily could be rented.

Meanwhile, in New Orleans, E. V. Richards, receiver for Saenger Realty Company, last week applied to Federal Judge Wayne G. Borah for relief from its contract to guarantee $492,000 in notes for Peninsula Theatres, Inc., which was formed several years ago as a Saenger subsidiary to take over the Florida theatres of Universal Chain Theatrical Enterprises, Inc.

In a supplementary petition, Mr. Richards asked for permission to reorganize Peninsula, and to take 500 $100 par value preferred shares of a new company and all the Class A common in return for an advance of $10,000.

Saenger Realty showed a net loss of $18,350 from March 2, 1933 to September 30, during Mr. Richards' receivership. The operating loss for the period was $13,485, and to this was added $4,865 for receivership expenses.

Total income was $233,696 and total expenditures were $247,180, including $49,630 set aside as a reserve for loss on bad debts. This left the cash balance on hand at $51,335 September 30.

Samuel Zirn, attorney for Paramount-Publix bondholders, moved in New York to carry actions involving the bankruptcy to the supreme court. One is on his attempt to force removal of the trustees and the other his effort to have the company declared an involuntary bankrupt, when it consented to friendly receivership.

Walter Cokell on Tuesday told Referee Henry K. Davis he recalled no discharges of relatives of Paramount executives after preparation of such a list for John Hertz, then finance committee chairman.

Beecroft Reorganizes St. Petersburg Studios

Reorganization of the Sun Haven studios at St. Petersburg, Fla., has been completed, with Chester Beecroft named as chief executive. Mr. Beecroft was formerly production manager for Cosmopolitan Studio, and has held similar positions with Charlie Chaplin, Marion Davies, Douglas Fairbanks and others.

It is planned to start production January 22. Mr. Beecroft has already named as studio personnel: Frank Gatteri, assistant to Mr. Beecroft; Fred V. Blair, general manager; Harry G. Smith, scenario editor; William A. Dawson, Richard Harrity, assistant scenario editors; Rondo Hatton, publicity director.

PLAN FILM SERIES ON GOVERNMENT BUREAUS

Senator Copeland Understood To Have Fathered Idea of 52 One-Reel Pictures for Civic and Theatre Use

The screen may be used to show the 120,000,000 people of the country how their financial contributions toward government are used in its administration. President Roosevelt is understood to have approved the idea.

Senatorial interests in Washington, headed by Senator Royal S. Copeland (N. Y.), who is understood to have fathered the plan, are convinced that a series of one-reel films, produced with an entertainment appeal under government supervision and portraying the activities of the government bureaus, would give to America's millions a better understanding of how the government functions.

Film Company Would Make Them

These pictures would be produced by some one of the motion picture companies. At least one of the large corporations already has been approached.

Basically, the idea is to show how the functioning of government bureaus affects the people. Of importance, too, is the Washington opinion that such a series of subjects would tend to allay criticism of the enormous current government expenditures and aid the administration program for rehabilitation. In addition, the films would be used in the educational program to be carried on at the Civilian Conservation Corps camps.

The producing company would be asked to do the whole job without any expense to the government. It would be given assurance of full government cooperation.

$100,000 Estimated Cost

It has been estimated that $100,000 would do the job, making available about $1,900 for each of 52 one-reelers planned. Available to the producer would be the facilities of the government bureaus and agencies.

The company would make available silent prints for the estimated 30,000 non-theatrical and educational and civic institutions and organizations equipped with silent projectors, and these would each pay a proposed rental of fifty cents a release, or $26 for the entire 52 films, to be released one each week. Sound prints also would be made available for the 14,000 regular theatrical accounts, and these would each pay a proposed rental of one dollar a release, or $52 for the group. If only half of both groups screened the subjects, there would be a gross of $754,000 on this basis.

The films would be treated in a regular story narrative style, with entertainment appeal.

Interested with Senator Copeland in the movement is M. F. Leopold, supervising engineer of the motion picture section of the United States Bureau of Mines of the Department of Commerce. The Bureau claims to have one of the largest and most authentic libraries of educational films on American industry in existence, with extensive demand from educational, civic, religious and business institutions and organizations for the Bureau's 3,000 one and two reel subjects.

In 1933, the Bureau of Mines motion picture bureau provided its films free, except for transportation charges both ways, for 53,865 showings attended by 5,000,000 persons.

During the 15 years in which the Bureau has carried on this work, American industries are said to have appropriated more than $1,000,000 to make available, through government channels, this large film library. Use of 16 mm. subjects is double that of the 35 mm. films. Although the entire expense of producing these films and of providing prints is paid for entirely by the cooperating agency or industry, the agreement is that there shall appear in the picture no trade name, trade mark, or other material that may be construed as advertising.

Broadway Subsequents In Dual, Price Battle

The spread of the double feature policy at 15 cents admission at Broadway subsequent run houses in New York, has resulted in what is virtually a price war, further aggravated by the current shortage of product.

Loew's New York, once exercising a practical monopoly in Broadway subsequent trade, has switched this week from a daily change to three each week, with an admission drop from 25 cents to 15 cents. The Cohan and Globe are double featuring revivals at 10 and 15 cents. Numerous others on the street are following a more or less catch-as-catch-can policy, none of them reported doing consistently good business.

Bell Telephone's 1933 Earnings Are $42,000,000

Earnings of the Bell Telephone System for 1933, including the Western Electric Company, were at the rate of approximately $5.30 a share on American Telephone and Telegraph Company stock, compared with $5.90 a share in 1932, according to an announcement made by the company this week. Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Bell Laboratories also are subsidiary companies.

Cash distribution was again approximately $42,000,000, less the 5 per cent federal tax on dividends to all stockholders except domestic corporations.

U. S. Sues Fairbanks

The United States attorney's office has begun suit in New York against Douglas Fairbanks, for $72,186.94, plus interest from January 27, 1932, based on an alleged erroneous refund made to the actor on his income taxes for 1927, 1928 and 1929.

MOULIN ROUGE GROUP STARTS NATIONAL TOUR

Party of Players Exploiting United Artists—20th Century Film Is Dined in Washington Prior to Motor Calvacade

The "Moulin Rouge Caravan" tour of exploitation for 20th Century Pictures and United Artists, to herald the presentation in key cities of the film, "Moulin Rouge," starring Constance Bennett and Franchot Tone, got away to a flying start last Wednesday in Washington, D. C., where the caravan was officially launched on a nationwide tour that will carry it through the principal cities of the nation and back to California.

Included among the members of the caravan, in addition to eight chorus girls, are such stars as Anna Q. Nilsson, Antonio Moreno, Roscoe Ates, Creighton Hale, Dorothy Dunbar, Mary Carlisle, Jack Mulhall, Nancy Welford, Ben Turpin and John Hundley. The group is traveling in a fleet of specially decorated motor cars.

Feted in Washington

The "Moulin Rouge Caravan" actually got under way from Washington on Friday, but on Wednesday, the stars reached the capital by train from California and paraded from the Union Station to the Shoreham Hotel. Following their arrival, the stars appeared in the grand ballroom of the hotel for a dinner dance and at midnight attended a premiere of the picture. A big sendoff was given the Caravan on Friday noon at a luncheon in a private dining room of the capitol attended by California Congressional representatives.

On Saturday the group arrived in Baltimore and was officially greeted by Mayor Howard Jackson and other city executives. A luncheon at the Lord Baltimore Hotel followed, with a broadcast of the proceedings over radio station WBAL. Afterward the Caravan paraded through the streets of the city, and, despite the exceptionally cold weather, thousands of people turned out. In the evening a large dinner for the stars was attended by the mayor.

Crowd Defies Snowstorm

On Sunday the Caravan reached Wilmington three and one-half hours behind schedule due to a severe snowstorm, but a crowd of over 40,000 waited to see the parade of stars. They were greeted in the Delaware metropolis by Mayor William C. Speer.

Monday saw the "Moulin Rouge" troupe in Chester, Pa., stopping for only a short time and then proceeding to Philadelphia, where they were greeted by the mayor. After the reception the Caravan paraded down Chestnut Street to Gimbel Brothers department store where they attended a private luncheon of store officials, after which they inaugurated a fashion show and the opening of a newly built cinema shop. During the afternoon a full-fledged parade was staged through the principal streets of the city and in the evening a special dinner in honor of the stars was held at the Cafe Marguery.

On Tuesday the Caravan arrived in New York to be greeted by the president of the board of aldermen, Bernard S. Deutsch. In the evening a supper dance was held at the Hotel New Yorker for the stars and trade and fan magazine press.

After resting in New York for three days the Caravan will proceed to New Haven, Hartford, Providence, Boston and Albany, after which the troupe is expected to start its trek through upper New York state, continuing from there to the west coast.

Bill Would Help Film Unemployed

Unemployed in the motion picture industry, like the jobless in all other lines of business, would receive unemployment insurance in the future, if a Congressional measure, introduced this week, is passed.

The unemployment insurance, to be financed by a tax of 5 per cent of the employers' payrolls, is provided for in a bill introduced by Senator Wagner of New York. The measure was prepared following conferences with Secretary of Labor Perkins.

Every person or organization employing 10 or more persons would be subject to the tax. Provision is made for credit of contributions to employment insurance funds which may be required by the laws of any state.

SCARLET EMPRESS

Paramount

For Marlene Dietrich's first appearance since "Song of Songs," Paramount has selected a story based on the personal diary of the Russian Empress, Catherine the Great. The screen play is by Manuel Komroff and Miss Dietrich again will be directed by Josef von Sternberg. Elaborately produced, massive sets contrasting with gorgeous costumes reflecting the semi-Oriental court splendor, the substantiating story merges historical fact with romance and drama.

Forerunner of several pictures of this type, the idea, departing radically from any tinge of modernism other than effectiveness of presentation, restores a glamor to the talking screen missing since the introducion of sound. Created in the atmosphere of bigness, neither time nor expense has been spared to assure that objective. The cast supporting Miss Dietrich is extensive, with John Lodge, Sam Jaffee, Louise Dresser, C. Aubrey Smith, Ruthelma Stevens, Olive Tell and Gavin Gordon in the principal roles.

The story, one of intrigue, jealousy, desire for power and rank, features mighty conflict between two ambitious women. As Princess Sophia of Germany, a court marriage is arranged between Miss Dietrich and Grand Duke Peter (Sam Jaffee) of Russia, and she is pompously escorted to the land of the Czars by John Lodge and presented to dissolute Jaffee, who has eyes only for his mistress, Ruthelma Stevens. Married in great state, she repulses her husband, carries on her liaison with Lodge, and becomes the object of the jealous enmity of Empress Elizabeth (Louise Dresser). Surviving the Empress' humiliation, which brings upon Dresser's death, a son is born, but Jaffee scorns to recognize him as his child. As Jaffee seeks to murder Miss Dietrich and place Ruthelma Stevens on the throne, the troops and populace revolt. Jaffee is strangled by Gavin Gordon, another officer with whom Miss Dietrich has carried on an illicit romance, but her seizure of the throne is the occasion of much rejoicing.

The story, cast and production values are backed up by the novelty that is the picture's keynote. Even the costume bugaboo should be an asset here. Though splendid spectacles are common—witness the recent musicals—the difference here is so great that fanning up unusual pre-showing interest should be easy.

I BELIEVED IN YOU

Fox

A new personality, Rosemary Ames, who seems to have the looks, ability and personal magnetism for potential stardom, makes her screen debut in this modern social romance. In the story, written by William Anthony McGuire, screen play by William Conselman, Miss Ames is directed by Irving Cummings, who first directed Janet Gaynor, and is supported by John Boles and Victor Jory.

Novel color characterizes the basic romantic plot and its accompanying dialogue, action and locales. Modern in idea and treatment, the story centers in Greenwich Village and deals dramatically with its odd-minded habitues. Miss Ames, sympathetically attracted to the crusading workingman's friend Jory, accompanies him to the Village. At a sidewalk rent party, wealthy and philanthropic Boles sees the girl. Amused by her theme that "these folks never had a chance," he agrees to finance them for six months. Despite her hopes, the various artists, painters, writers, etc., prove washouts, and even Jory, her ace in the hole, goes haywire with another girl. Her illusions shattered, she is ready to give herself to Boles, who will accept only her thanks. But during the experiment, Miss Ames has been writing a social study book, which when it is accepted for publication proves she is the only worthwhile member of the funny lot. Tending the royalty check to Boles as repayment of his investment, he pleads love, but she insists on going on alone, holding out the hope that sometime in the future they may meet again.

Story value is unusual. McGuire and Conselman have demonstrated their ability to do the different and so has Cummings.

SCANDALS

Fox

As an elaborate girl musical extravaganza, the attendant story being given a romantic and light dramatic twist, this picture endeavors to incorporate all the glamour, music, settings and related productive values that have made the annual "Scandal" presentations such popular metropolitan successes. Produced under the supervision of George White, creator of the idea, the story is written by Thornton Freeland and directed by Harry Lachman. Music numbers, of which ten are featured, are by Irving Caesar, Jack Yellen and Ray Henderson.

For the cast, Rudy Vallee and Alice Faye, both of whom headlined the New York shows, are in the leads. Straight picture personalities in support are Jimmy Durante, Adrienne Ames, Cliff Edwards, Gregory Ratoff Gertrude Michel and Warren Hymer with White also figuring prominently. Scores of original "Scandals" beauties constitute the chorus for song and dance numbers.

Supplementing the motivating story is a series of eight lavish and colorful spectacles, presented in the super-elaborate style that made their stage appearances the talk of Broadway. These dance-group numbers are directed by George Hale. For picture purposes the Vallee, Alice Faye, Adrienne Ames romance is secondary to the picturization of the color of the "Scandal" stage presentations. Established as an institution, rivaling the "Follies," they are familiar to millions, a value to which must be added the radio popularity of Vallee as well as the pull of the picture personalities. The showmanship possibilities are readily evident. All kinds of exploitation ideas from radio contacts to teasers are in line.

WONDER BAR

Warner-First National

This looks like something exciting, for as a girl-musical spectacle feature it begins several jumps ahead of where "Gold Diggers" and "Footlight Parade" left off. Here are the primary considerations. The cast is outstanding, with Al Jolson, Kay Francis, Dolores del Rio, Ricardo Cortez, Dick Powell, Ruth Donnelly, Guy Kibbee, Hugh Herbert, Robert Barratt, Henry O'Neil, Hal LeRoy, Fifi D'Orsay and Merna Kennedy, and others. The show "Wonder Bar" was an international success; with Jolson in the lead it played big American cities from coast to coast. Screen play for the Frakas-Herczeg opus was prepared by Earl Baldwin, remembered for "Life Begins," "Doctor X" and "Wild Boys of the Road." Lloyd Bacon, who made "Footlight Parade," directed. Music and lyrics are by Warren and Dubin, who did those of "Footlight Parade." Dance arrangements are by Busby Berkeley and what was seen in "Footlight Parade" and "Roman Scandals" is just a sample of what to expect.

The story, a continental romance drama, tinged with mystery, is located in Paris in Wonder Bar night club, but is secondary to the accompanying spectacle. So secretive have the producers been regarding plans that only the most meager details have leaked out. Two big ones are featured—"Don't Say Good Night" and a sensational Milky Way sequence, in which the principals and hundreds of chorus girls and boys are presented on a revolving turn-table, with gigantic mirrors creating the illusion that thousands appear. Backgrounding this trip through the stars, Jolson sings "Going to Heaven on a Mule," supported by a choir of 200 voices. With Jolson, always the entertainer, and Powell singing, Dolores del Rio and Cortez dancing, Kay Francis and Henry Kolker for dramatic and romantic lure, Ruth Donnelly, Kibbee, and Hugh Herbert for comedy, Barrett for menace, all this and feminine beauty, songs and dancing built for sensations, the picture looks like a showman's idea of paradise.

VIVA VILLA

MGM

Here's the material from which showmanship naturals are made. Pancho Villa, 20th Century Mexican Robin Hood, glamorous, glorious, terrifying. Boy and man; peon, avenger, bandit, soldier, general, president; the worshipped idol of his followers—hated scourge of his enemies. The picture is produced on epic scope, crammed with the color, punch and thrill of the man and his career; a subject as fresh and exciting as it was in the days when Villa rode.

It is based on a novel by Edgcomb Pinchon and O. B. Stade, the screen play written by Ben Hecht, noted for his vigorous realism as in "Front Page" and "Scarface," Hecht has embellished historical fact with the appealing sweep of legend. For the screen has been evolved a romance of adventure, a saga of fervid patriotism, heartless cruelty, tender chivalry. The story of a man and his amazing raids, of a man who knew and married many women, but loved only one, of a man whose flaming spirit re-created a nation.

Wallace Beery is Villa; the role should fit him just as did that of Butch in "The Big House" and "The Champ." The cast is composed entirely of familiar screen names, listing Leo Carrillo, Fay Wray, Stuart Irwin, Donald Cook, George Stone, Joseph Schildkraut, Katherine DeMille (C. B.'s daughter, making her screen debut), Henry B. Walthall, Francis Bushman, Jr., and Henry Armetta in support. The picture was made almost in its entirety in the locales that Villa rode to fame. Its bigness is demonstrated by the marching thousands, barefoot, ragtail revolutionists, men and women who followed their idol. There's a mighty thrill in every line of "Viva Villa."

"WHY NOT MAKE ENTERTAINMENT?"

J. W. GUNTER, ROYAL THEATRE, BLACKSHEAR, GA.

HOPING THERE WILL BE NO MORE!

To the Editor of the Herald:

The enclosed article is an editorial in this week's issue of the Blackshear Times, and although such articles are damaging to my box office, this editor expresses the sentiment of 80 per cent of the show-going people in this section.

The editorial article, captioned "And Baby Makes Three," was as follows:

["The stupidity of moving picture producers is often beyond human conception. They get on one subject and keep on it until people get so fed up they quit going to the movies. At present the directors are specializing in pictures in which the stork plays a leading part. The hero doesn't do right by Little Nell, and she whispers in his ear, and he says, 'You don't shay sho!' And she replies, 'It's true.' And a few hundred feet of film roll by and the stork has come and gone and Little Nell is shown fondling her precious bundle of pink or blue . . . and the gawk who plays the hero role stands by and says: 'Ah! Whoozis, now I will take the straight and narrow path. I will give up robbing banks and start stealing milk.' And the pathetic part of this type of picture is that the stork invariably arrives in advance of the minister. We hope there will be no more."—Ed.]

With so many ways of entertaining the public without offense, it is pure suicide to the business for the producers to keep cramming these "Baby Situations" down our throats, and I'm no moralist, either, but I have three children, and aside from being bad for them, we get too much of a good thing sometimes. We have suffering with us always; why not let us get entertainment at a picture show.

If this is just a little toward helping rid our pictures of a serious menace to the business, then I'll feel glad to have been a wee contributor.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga.

COMMENDS WORK OF ADVERTISING COUNCIL

To the Editor of the Herald:

As a newspaper publisher for 30 years, as an exhibitor for 12 years and as a lawmaker for several years, I write you endorsing the statements and sentiment of J. J. McCarthy and others, contained in the enclosed pamphlet which I have marked. (The pamphlet was a reprint of an article which appeared in Motion Picture Herald issue of December 16, and concerned the Advertising Advisory Council, which is headed by Mr. McCarthy.—Ed.)

A year or more ago a document was circulated called the Will Hays' New Commandments on reforms in motion picture creations (code of Advertising Ethics). However, the reforms on eliminating sex and indecent exposures of nude women, bedroom scenes, bath scenes, etc., have never materialized and the indecent advertising of some real good pictures has done a lot of damage to small town exhibitors.

I will cite just one example which injured my business this month and I wrote the exchange of my injury. (The actual functioning of the Council began following the experience of which Mr. Byars writes.—Ed.)

The picture was really good, I consider, and was sold as a special. But the advertising was rotten. A cutout of a nude woman was shown on their window card and nude women were the background of all their press sheets. I refused to put out some of the advertising after I had purchased it. When a small town exhibitor does his utmost to keep his show clean and convince the critical public that he has regard for moral integrity, it is humiliating to be compelled to put up lewd advertising or none at all, when perhaps the show itself is OK. The divorce courts and double marriages around Hollywood, emblazoned on the front pages of every newspaper and magazine in the land, create enough prejudice against the picture world, without misleading advertising from the printers and engravers.

If the sentiment of Mr. McCarthy is really carried out, the entire industry will be greatly benefited.—G. E. Byars, state congressman and operator of the Valley Theatre, Valley, Neb.

MONEY MAKERS OF THE EAST SIDE

To the Editor of the Herald:

I'm sending you a list of "the 10 biggest money-making players" on the East Side of New York, as follows:

1. Eddie Cantor. 2. Mae West. 3. Marie Dressler. 4. Edward G. Robinson. 5. James Cagney. 6. Wallace Beery. 7. Janet Gaynor. 8. Paul Muni. 9. Marx Bros. 10. Joe E. Brown.

It doesn't seem possible that such brilliant actors as Barrymore and Arliss should not draw. Also Rogers (second best on your list) when played in "Dr. Bull" on the East Side was not even mentioned on any marquee. We preferred Marian Nixon. I've been managing East Side theatres now for five years and I know the public's taste mighty well.—Robert Soffer, New Delancey Theatre, New York City.

JENKINS DID!

To the Editor of the Herald:

Since poor old Jaysee is sick, I lay awake all night trying to think up some foolishness. When I finally dropped off to sleep, my mind was in a turmoil and I dreamed of my old and new datebook (red figures and all). The next morning my nightmare continued long enough for me to wallop the accompany nonsense out of my typewriter. If I had owned a two-color ribbon I would have indicated the "klucks" in red.—M. L. Hart, Iris Theatre, Edgemont, S. D.

The "accompanying nonsense":

The "Air Mail" pilot flew "Over the Hill" into the "Golden West." He had lost his way in the "Rain" and had been "Out All Night." Looking down on "Wild Horse Mesa" a few hours before, we had seen some animals in a "Big Cage" and remarked to "Private Jones," the "State Trooper" who flew with him, 'Well, "So This Is Africa." But now the weather had cleared, and "Palmy Days" were again in order by the time he swooped "Down to Earth." "Hello, Everybody," he called as he climbed out of his plane. After reporting to the office, he jumped into his car and headed for "Forty Second Street." There he met "Cynara," an "Adorable" "Kid from Spain." "Well, Mr. Robinson Crusoe," she asked, 'Where have you been: working?' 'No,' he answered "I've been "Too Busy to Work." I stopped off at the "State Fair" for a few hours, combining "Business and Pleasure."

She convinced him that she was not just a little "Gold Digger of 1933" so he took her for a walk. A few bottles of beer in the "Moonlight and Pretzels," and he said tenderly, "Be Mine Tonight." She answered, 'Don't be feeding me that "Bedtime Story," you don't want any "Second Hand Wife." He begged her not to break his heart. "Handle With Care," sweetheart, you are the real thing, not just my "Lady for a Day." In other words, you are my "All American" girl. What do I care if you are widow, "What Price Innocence?" I'm just a "King of Jazz" myself, "I'm No Angel." And so "They Just Had to Get Married."

Meeting a friend on the street one day, he asked, 'Where are you staying?' 'I'm at the "Ambassador, Bill," answered the friend. But when he went to his own apartment to greet his little bride, he found her in the arms of his friend enjoying a "Kiss Before the Mirror." He hated to believe that "She Done Him Wrong," but he decide that if she broke the "Seventh Commandment," he would just step out with some of the "Wild Boys of the Road." Down on the dock he met "Tugboat Annie" and he asked her what she was doing there. "Oh, didn't you know, "I Cover the Waterfront," she answered. She politely asked him what he was doing now, and he answered sadly, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum." Yesterday I felt as though I was "Above the Clouds," but today I am "Below the Sea." His home no longer needed him, and he couldn't think of it any more as "A Man's Castle," so he took a "Night Flight" all the way from "Broadway to Hollywood." Realizing that there would be a "Day of Reckoning," he visited a friend's "Penthouse," picked up a "Beauty for Sale" and was "King for a Night."

The next morning, he happened to "Meet the Baron," and the baron asked when he had arrived in town. "Only Yesterday," he answered. I have been on a "Cross Country Cruise," on my "Strawberry Roan," and my wife forgot to "Love, Honor and Oh Baby." But "Ladies Must Love," I guess, because I arrived at "Midnight" "By Candlelight." There was my "Beloved" with an "Invisible Man." I almost lost my head and blew up like a "Bombshell," but decided to forget "Gun Justice," since she was "Ever in My Heart."

Maryland MPTO Election March 15

The annual election of the MPTO of Maryland will take place at Baltimore March 15, according to Herman Blum, president. Nominations for new officers have already been filed, the present group having been renominated.

As the Earth Turns

(Warner Bros.)

Romance, Drama, Comedy

The real story of the lives of those who wrest a frugal living from rugged Maine soil is the actuating motif of this picture. Told in simple, sincere manner, the dramatic and romantic values are enhanced by comedy that serves to maintain and recreate interest when the heavier fundamentals threaten to become oppressive. Dealing with real persons and actual conditions and telling its story in a manner that reflects careful preparation and definite authenticity in characterization, the show is full of heart appeal. While solemnity marks the telling, understandable, non-theatric realism endows it with a color that should be appealing to metropolitan audiences, and because it so truthfully mirrors every day farm life, with all its hopes and ambitions, desires, disappointments and tragedies, it should prove unusually attractive in the smaller communities.

Its time covers the turning of the four seasons. City bred Stan Janowski brings his father and little brothers and sister into rural Main at the height of a blizzard. The homelife of the Mark Muir family is that of a hardworking fairly prosperous farmer. Presided over by Jen, who manages diplomatically to keep peace between Mark's second wife, Cora, and her daughter, Doris, and Mark's own children, their contented existence is tragically contrasted with the home life of brother George Muir's brood. Lazy, perpetually a victim of the misfortunes that befall the careless, this group is always next door to starvation, a condition which convinces Mil that her only hope for happiness is to desert her husband. Spring and the marriage of Ed and Emily sees romance flowering for Jen and Stan. Summer, hot and dry, sees Stan's crops fail, a discouraging blow to his father and mother. As an interlude, effective in the story's delineation, sequences picture the unsuccessful efforts of love-starved Doris to find happiness with young Ollie. Real romance strengthening between Jen and Stan, the harvest season rolls on; full barns for Mark, empty ones for the Janowskys and George. The hardships of winter force Stan to take his elderly father and mother back to Boston. There as a jazz band violinist he obtains funds with which he can re-embark on his agricultural ambitions. Spring again, and as he returns to Maine, his love path with Jen is severed as Doris lures him into taking her to a country dance. His barns destroyed by fire during his absence at the party, his romance with Jen shattered, Stan is about to take Doris to Boston, the goal of her dreams, when his eyes are opened to a greater love which impels him with the help of Jen to start from scratch, rehabilitate his properties and plant anew the seeds of happiness.

An atmosphere of humanness permeates all the entertainment elements of "As the Earth Turns." Essentially it is family type, but there is plenty of contrast to arouse interest of all classes. The book upon which it is based enjoyed a remarkable sale in large cities, and as the picture authentically preserves the punch and emotional color, the readers should help with word of mouth advertising.

Whether farm stories have been successful or not in your theatre, proper handling of the assets contained in this picture should insure its making the grade. While the cast lacks any outstanding names, the fact of the featuring of several new personalities, particularly Jean Muir and Donald Woods who are fine in their parts as Dorothy Appleby is outstanding in hers, makes it possible to talk about different new players. The advance campaign should ring with homespun sincerity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. From the book by Gladys Hasty Carroll. Screen play by Ernest Pascal. Director, Alfred E. Green. Art director, Robert Haas. Gowns by Orry Kelly. Photoplay by Byron Haskins. Film editor, Herbert Levy. Music by Leo Forbstein. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, April 14, 1934.

Keep 'Em Rolling

(Radio)

Drama

Here's an action drama built around the affection a tough, hardboiled, but very sentimental artillery man has for his horse. With its army background and atmosphere (the entire locale being Fort Myer, Virginia) the entire production is full of a combined martial humanness that made the story on which it is based, "Rodney," by Leonard Nason, so popular in the Saturday Evening Post. The kids probably will appreciate it most, yet adults of both sexes, particularly horse-lovers, should find much to satisfy them.

Covering a period of years from the time Rodney comes to the post as an untamed steed to his old age when he's just a workhorse nag, Huston is attached to him. Thinking more of the horse than he does of Army regulations, his own love life or anything else, Huston is promoted and busted with equal regularity. During the War, a short shot, Rodney saves a gun that saves a brigade of doughboys and Huston is decorated. After the war, both oldtimers are living in another age and Rodney is reduced to a labor job under Huston's charge. With the horse about to be condemned, Huston going A.W.O.L., steals him as Frances Dee sarcastically berates her sweetheart. Shayne, the inspector, would consign the veteran hero charger to the glue-factory. Huston, caught by the M. P., is returned, and upon orders of the Secretary of War, Rodney is honorably retired in charge of Huston as the entire personnel of Fort Myer passes in review.

The picture is a natural for contact propaganda tieups with Army posts, recruiting offices and National Guard outfits.

The campaign should bid strongly for juvenile patronage and seek to arouse the interest of ex-service men. Likewise, reference should be made to the Nason story.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Radio. Directed by George Archainbaud. From the story "Rodney" by Leonard Nason. Screen play by Albert Shelvy Levino and F. McGrew Willis. Photographed by Harold Weinstrom. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, March 2, 1934.

Western

A film of the western variety, this very definitely is an outstanding example of that school of the motion picture. Fox obviously has expended extra effort in its production, in bringing this well above the average of the hardy perrennial. It is strong in story value, of its kind, is extremely well staged, and above all, is expertly cast.

It is a crackerjack for those exhibitors, and there are many, who have western audiences. They may well promise something unusually good among westerns. The children should go for it in their usual style, which brings up another point. The feminine saloon owner is of the Mae Westian type, very definitely, which may not be too pleasing to the parents of the youngster patronage, but at the same time she has audience sympathy all the way, and turns out to be the real heroine of the story.

Audiences other than western followers should also find real enjoyment, real entertainment in the film, and they should be objectives of the campaign.

As the unexpected marshal of the outlaw infested town of Tombstone, Ariz., in the "good old days," George O'Brien handles his melodramatic role in his expected fine style. With such supporting names as George E. Stone, who supplies excellent comedy; Irene Bentley, an attractive half of the romantic interest; Berton Churchill, as undercover bandit chief, and mayor of the town; and Ruth Gillette, who, though unknown, shows decided cleverness as the saloon proprietor, much may be done.

Since the film is adapted from incidents in the novel by Stuart N. Lake, mention of the origin might well be of selling value, with an effort made toward book store tieups.

O'Brien, riding into Tombstone in the dude dress of the day, in accidental company with Miss Bentley, daughter of the local banker, and Stone, store owner, encounters a situation, is deputized by the mayor on the spot, and brings a drunken, shooting "bad man" from the saloon. Chiefly to be near Miss Bentley, he accepts permanent appointment as marshal, and begins to learn things about the town and its mayor. Miss Bentley's father had been murdered by Churchill, and O'Brien has his own ideas as to what to do about it. Miss Gillette make a play for him, but he is all gone in the direction of Miss Bentley.

O'Brien makes a friend of Alan Edwards, notorious bandit, who also contrives to be a secondary hero of the yarn. Eventually, after complications packed with action and plenty of excitement, O'Brien is framed by Churchill, but escapes. He kidnaps Miss Bentley from danger, with the aid of Miss Gillette, Edwards and Stone, and returns to prove his innocence and trap Churchill. The mayor, cornered, gets the drop on the group. Miss Gillette steps in front of O'Brien, getting the bullet meant for him, and dying, as Churchill is killed by Edwards. Miss Bentley and O'Brien conclude the film as expected.

It is action-filled, western material, above the usual quality for the type. It is salable to western fans certainly, and likely to others.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Lew Seiler. Adapted from incidents in the novel by Stuart N. Lake. Screen play by William Conselman and Stuart Anthony. Photographed by Robert Planck. Sound engineer, Bernard Fredericks. Settings, Duncan Cramer. Musical director, Arthur Lange. Release date, January 19, 1934. Running time, 66 minutes.

I've Got Your Number

(Warner)

Comedy Drama

There is a full measure of highly salable entertainment in this action-filled comedy drama, with the comedy predominating. Chuckles alternate with laughs all the way, while the central action, concerning the capture of a gang of fast moving crooks, has punch. It is a yarn of the adventures, romantic and otherwise, of a couple of telephone trouble hunters, and the pace never flags.

The obvious, and probably excellent, tieup is open with the telephone company of the community. If the point be raised that the two troublemen do a bit of wire tapping on the side, which is supposed to be contrary to the best telephone practice, it may be indicated that the wire tapping was done in the interests of justice and was definitely an emergency action. There is also a lively opportunity for tieup by personal invitations to patrons via the telephone.

The names are of excellent marquee quality, with Joan Blondell and the always likable, wisecracking Pat O'Brien sharing the leads, the increasingly popular Allen Jenkins proving an entertaining foil for O'Brien, and Glenda Farrell and Eugene Pallette doing their fair share to liven the proceedings generally.

O'Brien and Jenkins go their blithe way, hunting trouble, O'Brien not neglecting the feminine element, Jenkins, the fearful satellite, and Pallette, their boss, tearing his hair at their escapades. Amusingly they break up a seance, illegally ultizing telephone wires, and Miss Farrell, mystic, does her best with O'Brien. He saves Henry O'Neill, wealthy broker, who offers his services if and when needed. O'Brien meets Miss Blondell, hotel telephone operator, and pursues her until he gets a date, which he means to make permanent.

She falls for the rapid tongue of Gordon Westcott, and is the unwitting assistant in crooked work, which causes her to lose her job. O'Brien lands her another with O'Neill, and again Westcott and his gang get to work, with the result that $90,000 in negotiable securities is slickly lifted, and Miss Blondell, forced to hide out, is implicated, finally arrested. O'Brien, with Jenkins' assistance, does some undercover detecting, via his test set and the central office switchboard, and locates the gang. He is caught by them but his tester gives the alarm to Jenkins, with the whole repair gang responding with flying fists to capture the gang. The laugh finish finds O'Brien and Miss Blondell preparing to retire after their marriage, when his pals break in and make his life miserable.

The production, besides its other inherent entertainment qualities, has something of a novelty in subject matter.—AARONSON, New York.

The Lady is Willing

(Columbia)

Near-Farce

Here is a British picture with a star whom American audiences already know very well. But the Leslie Howard of this film is a very different personality from the one who played in "Secrets," "Berkeley Square" and "The Animal Kingdom." Here he becomes virtually a farceur, and makes a darn good job of it to boot. Because he obviously reveled in a part giving him unlimited scope for tomfoolery, there is a refreshing note to the film, and it develops a strong comedy character which should insure laughs in districts where the dialogue will not be found too heavily English.

Howard appears as a crazy detective, urged on by three victims of a crooked Continental financier to get back for them the money they have lost in worthless stock. To do this he masquerades as a country doctor, complete with bushy beard, but in the process of weaving his spells falls in love with the financier's wife.

Howard does a neat and amusing piece of work, and is supported by a team of players who enter heartily into the fun of the show. Binnie Barnes (one of the successes of "Henry VIII," incidentally) shows up delightfully in the woman role, and, as it is a certainty Hollywood will get her eventually, it is possible she may have marquee value. The financier is played by Cedric Hardwicke—Sir Cedric to you!—and this again is a rich piece of characterization.

Howard's name and the comedy nature of the story seem to be the tags for exploitation purposes, while the title again might put ideas in some folk's heads.—CHARMAN, London.

Produced by Columbia in London, Eng. Directed by Gilbert Miller. Screen play by Guy Bolton. Photographed by Joseph Walker. A. S. C. Recorded by Edward Bernds. Edited by Otto Ludwig. Art direction by Oscar Werndorff. Running time, 76 minutes.

You Can't Buy Everything

(MGM)

Drama

Miss May Robson, "old trouper" who recently has achieved a richly deserved popularity and here has her second starring role, offers a splendid performance in something of a reincarnation of the more notorious than famous Hetty Green of financial memory. In a living illustration of the evils that grasping wealth may bring, and an interpretation of the picture's title, the star again demonstrates her ability to hold audience attention.

With good support, chiefly in the person of Lewis Stone, it is still Miss Robson's picture, and the exhibitor may well make mention of her past performances, with an indication that she will not fail to win a whole-hearted approval in this instance. Mary Forbes, William Bakewell and the attractive young Jean Parker also offer familiar cast names for a strong marquee setup.

The title is somewhat unwieldy, but offers an opportunity for effective selling lines, with most to be made of the motivating theme, that wealth is no substitute for love, and that forgiveness and understanding may bring more happiness to friends and family than all the accumulated contents of vaults.

Miss Robson, dressed as though practically destitute, leaves her son at the hospital after an accident, as a free clinic patient, then makes her way to the bank, storms at Gillingwater, its president, and withdraws all her money because Stone has become associated with the institution. Stone, it is understood, earned her undying hatred years before when he jilted her at the altar.

Her son is graduated from college, and she thrusts him into the bank which she dominates, virtually the wealthiest person in the country. The boy, Bakewell, has ambitions in the direction of authorship, but they are scotched. At a house party, Bakewell meets Miss Parker, Stone's daughter, and the two fall in love. Though the mother fights and storms, vilifies Stone and wails at her son, the two are married. In the panic of 1907, she contrives to ruin Stone, and Bakewell, returning, brands her for what she is and leaves. The shock of his revelation dazes her and she wanders from the bank vault into the street, contracts pneumonia and is nursed by Miss Forbes. A general reconciliation takes place, even Stone is begged for forgiveness.

Located in the New York of the early years of the century, there is an exhibitor opportunity for appropriate exploitation, which should be particularly effective with the older generation, who readily will recognize the day and age. Technically executed excellently, the film's atmosphere has the undeniable stamp of authenticity. It is a picture the entire family may be invited to see.—AARONSON, New York.

Catherine the Great

(United Artists)

Historical Drama

The obvious manner in which to sell "Catherine the Great" is as the successor to "Henry VIII." So far as criticism is concerned, however, that is no fair standard by which to judge it, for while in certain respects this latest London Films production is easily superior to its predecessor, in others the first-made picture wins the contest. In production values generally, in its gorgeous mountings, superb photography and brilliant acting, "Catherine," may, indeed, be considered as the finest picture that has yet come out of a British studio. But as regards dramatic content and appeal to the imagination, it is not so certain that the claim would be justified.

Nevertheless, it is true to say that the film gives an even clearer indication than any that have preceded it of the potentialities of British production. Once the London Films unit can lay their hands on a foolproof story (maybe the forthcoming "Zorro" film will provide that), they are going to produce a picture that will be a world-beater. In all other respects they can justly claim to have equaled Hollywood at its best.

The exhibitor who plays this subject, therefore, need not hesitate to make a song about it and promise his customers powerful entertainment, with young Douglas Fairbanks turning in just about the best performance of his life. As the film also introduces, in Elizabeth Bergner, a young actress who will undoubtedly take her place with the great ones of the screen, it does not lack for points to enhance its appeal. There are, in addition, the settings representing all the glamor of the dissolute Russian Imperial Court, which combine with the intriguing nature of a story centered on the ambitious wife of a lunatic Czar to provide ample material for seductive copywriting. It is a subject that deservedly can be played up big. For the cities the picture has all the makings of a b. o. clean-up.

The plot shows the development of Catherine from the shy German princess who becomes the bride of the Russian heir, to the masterful ruler of the Empire, her great love for her mad husband subordinated to her will to do her country service. In this way it presents a remarkable canvas for Miss Bergner, whose sensitive and delicately conceived portrayal makes a vivid and living thing of something that otherwise lacks basic dramatic vitality. Doug Junior for his part gives a robust performance that assists the illusion, and there is a third member of the cast, Flora Robson, whose acting is no less of the classic order.

Dr. Paul Czinner, the director, has infused a smart pace into the story, bringing out the best in each sequence by means of his skilled handling of his characters and crowds. The photography, too, emphasizes the picture's many beautiful sets, with effective shots from surprise angles.—CHARMAN, London.

Good Dame

(Paramount-Schulberg)

Dramatic Romance

Loaded with the atmosphere of carnival grifters, gambling card-sharps, purse snatchers, cooch dancers, hard guys, small town cops and courts, all presented with flamboyant realism, this dramatic romance with Sylvia Sidney and Fredric March in the leads, has plenty of action, but the character of the show necessitates slow tempo, permitting audiences to anticipate thrill sequences before they reach the screen. Outstanding patron appeal feature lies in the human interest and sympathy accruing to the girl, innocently a part of the hectic goings on.

While watching card-sharp Mace, Lillie, fired chorus girl, loses her bag to Mace's purse-snatching confederate, Spats. The swag is split, Mace stumbles upon Lillie, listens to her tale of woe, chop-sueys her with her own dough and fixes a job for her with Bluch's girl show. The good dame has no ear for Bluch's propositions and is forced into the "blow-off" part of the show. There is a raid. Lillie is pinched, but Mace pays her fine with Bluch's dough that Spats swiped. Bounced, Lillie is followed by Mace when Bluch gets wise that he used his money to clear Lillie. Stuck in the small town, Lillie, sensing the manliness beneath Mace's tough exterior, gets him to turn his house-to-house peddling racket into a half-way legitimate enterprise and as Mr. Cupid gets in his sly work, real love begins to blossom, not without complications, however. In the arms of the law for socking an apartment house manager, it looks like an iron cell for Mace until Lillie jumps in with a dramatic love plea which softens the judge's heart and a marriage is the sentence.

The title and name values look to be the outstanding showmanship asset, supplementing rapidfire information of the picture theme. The natural draw of March and Sylvia Sidney should be capitalized upon to the utmost, while those of Jack LaRue, Russell Hopton and Kathleen Burke should not be overlooked. The show's value as a juvenile attraction is hampered by the sexy flair given the premise.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

VALUABLE DEPARTMENT, SAYS STANLEY CHAMBERS

Valuable to the exhibitor, well written and with intelligent information, is the way Stanley Chambers, noted showman, now of the Fox Grand theatre at Topeka, Kan., sums up his high estimation of this department, "Showmen's Reviews." Mr. Chambers, who rose to distinction in the world of the theatre while at Wichita, Kan., is an experienced showman whose many successful campaigns have served as models for theatremen not only in the Middle West but throughout the field of exhibition. As a city manager, too, his executive ability has been well known.

Mr. Chambers writes to the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD as follows:

"Want to take this opportunity to tell you how I enjoy reading your 'Showmen's Reviews' column. It gives a lot of interesting information on the new product, also ideas relative to the box office possibilities. It is a valuable department for the exhibitor and an asset to the publication, well written with intelligent information.

"Thought you might enjoy hearing from someone once in a while who appreciates your efforts in putting out a real publication for the showman of today. Newsy and meaty. Thanks."

Public Stenographer

(Showmen's Pictures)

Drama

As straight dramatic material, "Public Stenographer" has its moments, but they are rather far between. The title idea might present to the exhibitor a possibility of a contest of some nature built around stenographers or their work. Otherwise, it is largely conventional material.

The best name for marquee flash is that of William Collier, Jr., and the support includes such familiars as Lola Lane, Richard Tucker, Bryant Washburn and Al St. John, for one sequence of comedy. The roles of Tucker and Washburn are both minor, and will not warrant too emphatic billing.

A speeding automobile, with a motorcycle policeman in hot pursuit, is the only sequence having a resemblance to punch action.

Miss Lane is the public stenographer in a hotel, living with Esther Muir, the telephone operator. Miss Lane accidentally meets Collier, son of an engineering contractor, who is in difficulty because he will not entertain the not too ethical proposition of his competitors, Washburn and Jason Robards, on government contracts. Miss Lane is pursued by Robards, but falls in love with Collier, a feeling which is reciprocated. The Collier firm is underbid on a contract, and a leak in the direction of the White company is suspected. When Collier suddenly leaves town without notifying Miss Lane after she assumes they are engaged, Miss Muir takes Miss Lane's notebook, filled with company statistics which Collier had dictated from time to time, and sells it to Robards.

Collier returns, and the two girls make a frantic and finally successful effort to destroy the transcript of the notes, and recover the notebook, without Collier being any the wiser. The two are reconciled, and the film concludes in the expected fashion. A dialogue reference to the unaccountable collapse of a bridge constructed by the Collier company represented an opportunity for real action punch in the picture.

The film may be found reasonably satisfying in a midweek position. There is nothing in it for the youngsters.—AARONSON, New York.

Sixteen Fathoms Deep

(Monogram)

Drama

Drama which is chiefly melodrama of the program action school, this offers undersea material of interest, the anticipated romantic complications and something of the processes involved in the gathering of the sponge from the floor of the sea.

Selling will have to be along more or less conventional lines with regard to the story itself, but the concern of the story with the sponge divers offers an opportunity for lobby display of the appropriate paraphernalia. Exhibition of diving suits and other apparatus, if available, with sponge formations and the like, should be instrumental in attracting a measure of pedestrian attention. The title has a ring of action which should not be neglected. The fact that the film was adapted from an American Magazine story may be of selling value.

Sally O'Neill heads the cast, while opposite is the son of the late Lon Chaney, Creighton Chaney, performing acceptably as the young lover of Miss O'Neill, overcoming obstacles to defeat the plans of the sponge trade "boss" and save his boat and his girl. The rest of the names in the cast are probably quite unknown.

Chaney seeks to purchase a sponge boat, planning on the annual auction to bring him enough money to enable him to marry Miss O'Neil, daughter of the perpetually inebriated saloonkeeper. George Regas, who virtually runs the town, arranges that Chaney get the only available boat, lending him the money, but planning that he shall be highly unsuccessful in his expedition with the fleet to the sponge beds. He sends Maurice Black, one of his henchmen, as a member of the crew to see that Chaney does not have too much good fortune. The obstacles begin to appear with surprising regularity, and the crew becomes unruly.

The girl, ashore, learns that Regas is behind the reported bad luck of Chaney's boat and uses a speedboat to warn him. After a fight Chaney forces Black to take his turn on the bottom, but Black's air line becomes fouled. Chaney, despite his knowledge of Black's crookedness, goes down to save him, and Black confesses. Regas' men are beaten in another encounter when they start for home, and Chaney arrives barely in time for the auction, coming out on top, while Regas passes out of the picture.

"Sixteen Fathoms Deep" should be sold as straight action melodrama, played perhaps to best advantage in a midweek position. The youngsters, boys especially, should find a thrill in the undersea action sequences.—AARONSON, New York.

Hell on Earth

(Aeolian Pictures)

Drama

Frankly and avowedly a cinematic plea for peace, "Hell on Earth" nevertheless has considerable in production values of the highest order. Whether the mass audience is apt to appreciate the work is problematical, but those large city theatres which devote their screens to a large extent to showing "class" foreign pictures have here something to sell.

Adapted from Leonhard Frank's book and produced and directed by Victor Trivas, the film utilizes but little dialogue, and that in four languages. English, French, German, and a bit of Jewish are heard, while the opening sequences contain flash scenes in England, France, Germany and Russia.

Symbolizing the utter futility of war, the complete distortion of human values and common sense which war brings, reduced to the individual components of war, five men, the German, the Frenchman, the Englishman, the Negro vaudeville star, and the Jew, uniform gone, stricken deaf and dumb by shell-fire, are cast by the fortunes of battle into the same deserted dugout between the enemy trenches. There, actually under the guidance of the Negro, who speaks three languages, they come slowly to the realization that they have no personal grievances, that they have absolutely no reason for destroying each other.

Opening sequences picture the flirtatious young Frenchman and his sweetheart, the German carpenter and his family, the quiet Englishman, just become a father; the Negro, doing his turn in Paris; the Jewish tailor being married. Each is seen again in the leave-taking, then the martial music of mobilization fading into the din of warfare and the attack—then the five in the dugout.

As they assist one another, and are entertained by the Negro, they unconsciously arrive at an understanding, an understanding of their own brotherhood, a glimpse through the uniform. Interspersed are impressionistic flashes of the war going on outside, all about them. Finally, when the smoke from their cook stove has drawn fire from both lines, and their position is in danger of devastation, they climb from their dugout, set their faces toward the trenches, and march side by side. Toward which trenches, toward what fate, is left entirely to the imagination of the audience.

It is strong, significant drama, ably produced from the technical standpoint, excellently portrayed by its cast. Peace organizations have indorsed it, community groups might be induced to come to its support.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and directed by Victor Trivas. Distributed by Aeolian Pictures. From the original story by Leonhard Frank. Music by Hans Eisler. Adaptation by Victor Trivas and Leonhard Frank. Release date, January 27, 1934. Running time, 70 minutes.

Fun, but Too Long

There are moments of hilarity in this Henry Armetta comedy but if they had come closer together some weak spots might have been subtracted. Mickey Daniels is the son and Sally Star the girl. Armetta's wife, Lillian Elliott, convinces him that he should inform his son of the ways of life, all of which the boy knows better than papa. Armetta, Mickey and Sally wind up in a night club, and when Armetta's wife finds them there she winds them all up around the chandeliers, fistically speaking. Scarcely a novel development.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Hizzoner

(RKO Radio)

Good Comedy

There are more than a few laughs, and an amusing situation, in this, featuring the well known radio and stage personality, Bert Lahr, comedian. Nominated for mayor because his sponsor had declared he would run any man he found dumber than the rival candidate, Lahr makes a radio appearance, and becomes tangled with his wife and a girl put in his hotel room to frame him. The Lahr mannerisms are amusing, and his radio name should make the subject worth exhibitor attention.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Red Hot Mamma

(Paramount)

Amusing

An entertaining little filler, of the Betty Boop cartoon variety, is this subject, in which Betty, chilled by the wintry blasts, sleeps on the rug before the fire. She dreams of descending to the abode of the devil, for an entertaining few minutes.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Poppin' the Cork

Good

With Milton Berle, stage comedian, running the comedy end of the subject, this number, of the musical variety, hits a timely note with its repeal reference. One of the Jack White productions, it has the yarn of the clowning college boy, Berle, who plays his tricks to win the favor of his sweetheart. Most of the tricks are at the expense of the mother-in-law-to-be, ending with her, a prohibitionist, becoming slightly inebriated at a restaurant, thanks to Berle. The chorus work is entertaining and two song numbers, "Poppin' the Cork" and "Here's Looking at You," are tuneful.—Running time, 24 minutes.

Honeymoon Hotel

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

One of the new Merry Melodies series, this is done in Cinecolor, which serves to enhance the effectiveness of the cartoon work. Against a background of the particular theme song, "Honeymoon Hotel," the animated boy and girl are married and reach the hotel room on their honeymoon. With amusing cartoon antics, the subject is highly entertaining of its type.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Mountain Music

(Universal)

Action Comedy

Louise Fazenda is willed a country store up in the moonshine hills and the only customers are two families at feud-heat. The new owner shushes them all out of the place when the first new outbreak flares up, and then summons them all to a barn-dance peace party. But both families send suitors, in plots to get the store, and then there is a fight, the owner getting away just in time in her flivver. The maximum comedy possibilities were somewhat impaired by the over-burlesquing of the hillbilly characters, but there's an abundance of action.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Jumping Giants

(Paramount)

Excellent

As Grantland Rice spins the yarn in this number of the Sportlight series, the camera is trained on a small yacht, off the coast, first in the east, then in the west, as the big-fishermen ply rod and reel. It is almost guaranteed to bring gasps from the audience, as the huge fighters struggle with frantic strength in a desperate effort to free themselves. The audience will be amazed and thrilled as the fish makes great leaps high out of the water, and one, free, rushes out to sea, making gigantic leaps in his headlong flight. A good subject. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Inventors

Lively Comedy

Stoopnagle and Budd, comics of unquestioned radio popularity, appear in this comedy subject as the inventors, along the lines of the Rube Goldberg machinations. They demonstrate their inventions to three scientists, including the upside-down dresser for the prevention of collar button rolling, the hat-racks which leave the brims fastened securely to the wall, and the like. They lecture at a girls' school, and build a mechanical man which raises havoc among the visiting school board and the attractive students. The names of the pair should make special billing worth while on the subject.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Buddy's Show Boat

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

An amusing animated cartoon, in which Buddy docks his showboat at a Mississippi town. He and Cookie entertain the natives, until the tough deckhand captures the girl. Buddy goes into animated action, and hangs the villain over the paddle wheel, with disastrous results. Will fill a spot on any bill.—Running time, 7 minutes.

WATCH!

THE STORY IS THE THING

Before leaving New York for Hollywood the director told the story to a group of prominent men who are to assist in the exploitation of the picture.

A LAWYER, whose name and doings are national front page news, said, "I'll boost that picture to every lawyer in America."

That means Power!

A famous U. S. SENATOR said, "That is as great a story today as 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' was in its time."

That means Emotional Appeal!

A nationally PROMINENT CHURCHMAN assured the picture the support of the entire church world.

That means Public Good-will!

A high official of a group of NATIONAL PATRIOTIC and welfare organizations pledged their support.

That means National Appeal!

But best of all THE GIRL who first typed the story worked two hours after business hours to see how the love story came out.

That means Entertainment!

"CAROLINA" IS HOLD-OVER HIT! BEATS "PADDY" IN KEY CITIES!

● Again FOX does it . . . as freezing weather and terrific blizzards fail to slow up "Carolina" after spectacular openings everywhere! Extended playing time necessary. House records topple. Watch for more great news as "Carolina" continues its great box-office march.

More hot news: After sensational openings held for SECOND WEEK at the FOX, Philadelphia . . . HIPPODROME, Cleveland . . . NEW, Baltimore • Beat everything in past two years at the SAENGER, New Orleans . . . which shows all companies' finest product • At the ECKEL, Syracuse, beat "Paddy" and "State Fair" . . . held for SECOND WEEK • 100 per cent bigger than "Paddy" at the ORPHEUM, Denver • Topped every FOX hit . . . including "State Fair", "Paddy" at the CENTURY, Rochester • At Shea's BUFFALO, greater than any FOX picture . . . 50 per cent bigger than "PADDY" • It's the biggest hit in years!

THE WEEK ON WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Film Row is on its toes awaiting announcement of the personnel of the local grievance and zoning boards. Local exchange managers are keeping their fingers crossed, hoping they will not be chosen. Some have even gone so far as to request they be excused since their names have been sent in. Generally, they view it as an ungrateful task and are well satisfied to let someone else take both the honor and the work.

C. C. Pettijohn of the MPPDA made a hurried trip to town last Saturday for a meeting with members of the Film Board of Trade at the Congress hotel. A general discussion and exchange of ideas was had on code ramifications.

Van Nomikus is putting plenty of sugar into the remodeling of the Parkway theatre, which he will open in several weeks.

Cress Smith and Walter Branson are making a swing around the RKO mid-western offices.

George Taif has joined Henri Ellman's Capitol Film Corporation as salesman in Indiana and Illinois.

Mike Kahn is the new branch manager here for Majestic Pictures, succeeding Percy Barr. Kahn has been on the Fox sales staff.

Jack Miller is vacationing at Miami.

One of the few—if not the only theatre in these parts to operate 24 hours a day is the Indiana, at 43rd and Indiana, managed by Harold Jacobs. The doors never close.

Jack Cohn flew here from the West Coast and is becoming such a consistent flier he is thinking of acquiring his own plane.

George Madison is remodeling the Logan Square theatre while Henry Bambaro is making preparations to open the Windsor theatre, Laramie and Lake, within the next two weeks.

J. J. McFarland opened the Showbox, 47th and Halsted street, last Saturday. It formerly was called the Lyric.

With butchers, bakers and candlestick makers altogether too numerical at various trade shows, United Artists' current invitation to the "Palooka" preview reads that admittance will be refused to any holder of the invitation except the one whose name is designated.

Manny Levine has been added to the Fox country sales staff following the resignation of Mike Kahn.

Tom Gilliam of Warners reports that the CWA program is proving a real help to exhibitors in smaller communities where plenty of folk are employed on government work.

Henri Ellman of Capitol has acquired "Guilty Parents," a sex drama, for Illinois and Indiana.

Various units of the local industry are giving their support to a "Days of '49" dance to be held at the Aragon ballroom, Wednesday, February 14, for the benefit of Chicago patients at the Los Angeles free tuberculosis sanitarium. James Coston is chairman. Groups active in the affair are MPTO of Illinois, Allied, Moving Picture Operators union, Chicago Theaarical Protective, Film Board and Chicago Federation of Musicians. Wayne King will provide the music and an important floor show is scheduled. Tickets are $1 each with theatres using a special trailer inviting the public.

Harry Goldberg, formerly with Warner and Educational, has joined the sales staff of B. N. Judell, Inc.

Del Goodman, in charge of Fox foreign branches, who has a wealth of friends in the industry here, is stopping off for a visit on his way to the West Coast. Goodman has been in foreign parts for the last three years. He is accompanied by Mrs. Goodman and their two-year-old baby.

Guercio & Barthel report installation of complete projection equipment at the Lyric, Winchester, Ind., and the Crescent, Louisville, Ky., through their recently opened Indianapolis branch.

HOLQUIST

Theo. Hays Heads Committee

Theo. L. Hays of Minnesota Amusement Company was chairman of the Ball and Entertainment Committee for the Franklin D. Roosevelt Ball for the benefit of the Warm Springs Foundation for Crippled Children, given at the Minneapolis Auditorium on Tuesday, January 30. W. A. Steffes and Edmund R. Ruben were among the vice-chairmen. John Branton presented a collection of excerpts from newsreels with the title "Our President Speaks." Members of the Minneapolis Stage Hands Union donated their services.

Plan Shorts Series

Jefferson Machamer, cartoonist, will produce a series of six one-reel comedies based on his "Gags and Gals" section in the New York Sunday Mirror. D. L. Carter, formerly with Paramount and Universal, will be associated in the venture. Production will be at the Photocolor Studios, Irvington-on-Hudson.

To Film Wild Birds

F. R. Dickinson, vice president, and Alfred M. Bailey, director of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, will leave shortly on a photographic expedition to the Vermilion Parish, Louisiana, to film ducks and geese for the Academy film library. Bell & Howell camera equipment will be employed.

Mirror Starts Shorts Series

Mirror Productions, subsidiary of Shamrock Pictures Corporation, Detroit, has started production on a series of 13 one-reelers, titled "Ye Old Time Illustrated Songs," each reel including three songs. Subsequent subjects will be in color.

Fairhaven Company Formed

Fairhaven Productions, Ltd., has been formed in New York for eastern production. H. H. Rogers, Jr., is president and William Alexander vice president.

Takes Jewel Product

C. Gonzalez of Reliable Film Export Company has arranged to handle all foreign distribution of Jewel Productions output. The first are "Forgotten Men" and "The Jungle Killer."

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 210.—(A) What is the total approximate loss in light passing through cemented surfaces of flint and crown glass? (B) What may we safely assume to be the loss per single lens, or per two cemented lenses? (C) Is the amount of light passed by all similar lenses the same? (D) Describe the process of image forming by lenses. Bluebook owners may find assistance in figure 30, page 132, Volume I, but try to set the matter forth as fully as you can. There is considerable to it, you know.

Answer to Question No. 204

Bluebook School Question No. 204 was: (A) Just what is meant by focal length, as applies to a simple lens? (B) You are handling a complicated optical system. Just what is a 6.25" diameter, 6.50" focal length plano convex lens and why is it 6.50" focal length. (C) Tell us why a condenser lens such as is used in ordinary projection work cannot be made to focus its light beam to a point. (D) Could the lens focus the beam to a point were it properly corrected?

The following made good: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; T. VanVaulkenburg; D. Danielson; H. H. Menefee; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; H. Lemke; P. Gaeth, Jr.; B. E. Englander; R. DeToto; D. Calladine; G. Tinlin; R. Suler and R. Wheeler; P. Jackson and B. Diglah; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; T. H. and J. N. Williams; L. F. Evans; S. L. Holmes; W. and S. F. Love; D. L. Sinklow; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; O. L. Dairs and M. Simms; B. Doe; O. L. Evans; N. Williams and R. S. Allen; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; D. L. Mason and J. T. Ballinger; R. S. Conrad; H. E. Daniels, R. K. Hart and L. Biello; P. Conforti and C. F. Davis; P. L. Sanborn and S. L. Jones; S. Carberry; D. C. Coates; T. L. Albert and L. Leroy; H. C. Lake; C. D. Carmody; G. S. Bowers; F. T. Thompson and F. Daris; J. E. Smith and R. Dorfel; T. L. Edwards; E. F. Griffin and C. Abrams; P. L. Lathrop; P. R. Dual; G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; R. O. Davis and T. L. Turk; H. May and D. N. Anderson; H. Pitchkey and M. C. Mellinger; D. R. Peters and D. Holler; H. D. Schofield; D. Forman; D. L. Howard; R. Byrker and D. H. Samuels; M. Scully and P. M. Wheeler; H. Schontz and T. R. Richards; B. L. Stephens; T. M. Orichson and Son; R. McDonald; H. C. Lake.

Again I would suggest that some I have included in the list will do well to examine these answers carefully. (A) P. Gaeth, Jr., answers this one as follows:

"Focal length as applies to a simple lens is the distance in inches from the optical center of the lens to the image it 'forms,' when the image is in sharp focus and the light rays which the lens refracts to form the image are received as parallel lines."

Gaeth has erred in one particular. Many made the same error. What is it?

D. Danielson answers as follows. The answer lacks one word of being correct. What is it? "The focal length, as applied to a simple lens, is the distance from the center of the lens to the point at which parallel rays are brought to the sharpest focus. It is dependent upon the refractive index of the lens which in turn hinges upon the optical density and the angle of incidence so that with parallel rays it is dependent upon the curvature of the lens surface."

J. Wentworth answers correctly. He says: "The focal length of a simple lens is the distance from its optic center at which it will focus parallel rays of light to the sharpest possible focus, sharp focus being impossible by reason of spherical aberration."

I have printed the three answers to show what great care is necessary in the wording of answers. Undoubtedly both Gaeth and Danielson know the correct answer, but were not sufficiently careful in covering all angles of the matter.

(B) G. Tinlin says: "A 6.26" diameter, 6.50" focal length plano convex lens is a lens that is (1) six and one half inches in diameter. (2) Plano (flat) on one side and convex on the other. (3) Will focus a distant object as sharply as its faults, the chief one of which is spherical aberration, will permit, 6.50 inches from its optical center. That latter is what makes it a 6.50" focal length lens."

(C) H. Edwards says: "An ordinary condenser lens cannot focus an object such as, for example, an arc light crater, to a point, for the reason that the object itself has area; also since such a lens has the fault of spherical aberration it could not do so even were the object itself a point."

(D) H. Lemke says: "No. Unless the light source itself be a pin point, a lens will not focus the light beam to a pin point. A crater always has area, therefore a properly corrected lens could not focus it to a pin point."

Messrs. P. Jackson and B. Diglah answer thus: "That would depend. If it be parallel rays that were being focused, they would, we believe, have their point of origin in some object, and since every object must have area, no lens, corrected or otherwise, could focus its image to a point, though it might, were the object small enough, be approximately a point. On the other hand, were such a lens completely corrected—an impossible thing we believe—it could focus a point 'object' to a point"

Now, gentlemen, that answer shows real understanding of the whole matter. It is what I would call 100 per cent perfect. They are correct in saying such a lens could not be completely corrected, for the reason that when so corrected it would no longer be a plano-convex lens.

Klangfilm's New Equipment Seen Patent Protection Aid

In the course of pending negotiations between the German Cinema Owners Association and the Klangfilm G.m.b.H. to clear existing patent difficulties and to stop the further use of sound reproduction apparatus not entirely protected by patents, Klangfilm has agreed to the suggestion of the exhibitors to market a special sound film reproduction apparatus for theatres up to 400 seats, purchase of which may free theatres now using unpatented equipment without arrangement with Klangfilm, according to reports from a German trade publication.

Further, theatre owners who already have made arrangements for a settlement with Klangfilm on account of patent difficulties, may free themselves from the payment of future fees through purchase of the new installation, which consists of a soundhead attachment, amplifier and loud speaker at a cost of approximately $477.

Museum Sends 27,160 Films

The Visual Education Service of the American Museum of Natural History, New York, sent out 27,160 films last year, which were seen by more than 9,000,000 persons, F. Trubee Davison, president, announced last week. The films went to 37 states.

DEAR HERALD:

We have heard considerable about "Dinner at Eight," and when it was showing at the Moon Theatre the other night we got a car to take us down town and bring us back.

This picture has a wonderful cast—Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Alice Brady, Lionel and John Barrymore, Mae Robson, Jean Harlow and a number of others. We understand that a lot of folks enjoyed the picture. Personally, we prefer our dinner at 6. Dinner at 8 is too late for us common folks. We generally go to bed at 8 and we can't sleep on a full stomach.

It has been our observation in our 20 years' experience in the business that quite frequently when they put an exceptional big cast in a picture it is done to bolster up a weak story. Some of 'em do that. There should be a big sign in every studio in Hollywood reading. "It's the Story That Counts."

This is a wonderful country for opportunity. Merit will count. We knew a fellow who worked in a blacksmith shop for 15 years, and he got to be a pretty good blacksmith, too, but he gave up his job and got a position crooning love songs on the radio. As Opie Ried's John McAmlie said, "They can't keep a good man down."

We heard a pretty good story the other day. A portly lady went into a crowded street-car and crowded herself down between some of the passengers and fussed around for quite a while trying to find her pocketbook to pay her fare. Finally a gentleman sitting next to her said, "Excuse me, lady, but I will pay your fare." To which she became very indignant and said, "Well, I guess not. You mind your own business."

And the man said, "I beg your pardon, but you misunderstand me. The reason I offered to pay your fare was because you have unbuttoned my suspenders three times."

Business out here in the short grass country has shown a decided improvement in the last six months. This is due perhaps to two things: the rise in the price of corn from 10 cents to 32 cents, and partially perhaps to the various activities of the Government in putting men to work. Several hundred idle men have been put to work on various projects, some of which are constructive, and at Government expense. We don't know just when the payday will be to refund this money, but when it comes we hope we will be fishing.

Those parties they held the other night to celebrate the anniversary of our President's birthday and to raise money for the Warm Springs, Ga., hospital for infantile paralysis were certainly for a worthy cause, and our regret is that we weren't able to have a part in it.

Why is it necessary to go to the expense of a long trial when the criminal admits himself that he is guilty? Over in England the accused is presumed to be guilty until he proves himself innocent. Here our laws presume a man to be innocent until the state or Government proves him guilty, notwithstanding he already has signed a sworn statement admitting his guilt. What better evidence could be asked than a sworn statement by the guilty one himself?

Our boneheaded legislators and petticoat congressmen have passed some laws that would not be a credit to a pupil in the kindergarten department. And still they pass them.

We are told that a fellow townsman took a 10-dollar gold note to the bank recently to have it changed and the bank would only give him six dollars in change for it. We don't know whether this was under instructions from the Government or not. If it was, it makes us wonder who is paying the advanced price in gold that the Government has established. This is the first instance we have ever heard of where a 10-dollar bill wasn't worth 10 dollars. Maybe the dollar has been depreciated.

We kick because the foreign countries do not pay us what they owe us. If a man's "promise to pay" is good on a note, why shouldn't the Government's "promise to redeem" on a bill be good? Which makes us wonder some more.

If it wasn't for listening to President Roosevelt, Boak Carter, Edwin C. Hill, Lowell Thomas, Floyd Gibbons and Amos 'n' Andy they could take the radio and throw it into the creek as far as we are concerned.

This is the season of the year when basket ball, bridge parties, high school entertainments, whist clubs, birthday parties and other festivities combine to make it tough on the theatres, but in spite of that they seem to be holding their own and doing better than for some time. But speaking of birthdays, ours comes on February 28. That's the day by which you reckon all things.

Excepting a few days when the mercury took a nosedive down around zero, the boys have been playing golf about all winter. And when they go and play golf and we have to stay in the house you may be assured that we are sick. Our being sick makes it a whole lot easier on the boys. Why go to Florida or California?

It will soon be time now to let people know that you are operating a theatre. Get some paint and doll up the front; get some three-sheet boards and set them around town; a well posted 24-sheet not only draws the public's attention to your show, but lends dignity to your theatre. Let people know you are in the business. Merely opening the house at show time does not constitute theatre business. If you don't advertise your show you might as well lock up and go fishing. A lot of 'em have.

An exhibitor asked us once why we thought it was necessary for him to have the HERALD. We asked him if he took a daily newspaper and he said he did, and we asked him what for. He said he didn't know, as he never read it. We got in our car and drove away. That was the day of the big snow. Trying to operate a theatre without the HERALD is like trying to understand a woman singing on the radio. Nobody has yet.

Doc changed our medicine, and now our wife has to strap us in a chair, put a clothespin on our nose and threaten to hit us on the hand with a hammer to get us to take it. We are going to recommend this remedy to some crooners. We've got to get even somehow.

If after reading this you feel as tough as we do, we both ought to be arrested.

'THE CAT AND THE FIDDLE'

The PREVIEW . . . was a WOW!"

They positively cheered! Never such a Preview in Hollywood history. Because "Cat and the Fiddle" is all Youth, Gayety, Romance, Melody . . . a super-musical with a glorious love story. When Ramon Novarro sings those Jerome Kern heart-songs to Jeanette MacDonald your pulse quickens! In the cast, Frank Morgan, Charles Butterworth, Jean Hersholt, Vivienne Segal. Great directorial job by W. K. Howard. The play ran 2 years on Broadway!

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Richard Cromwell—This is quite a thrilling picture. Will go very good on a mid-week spot. Pleased my people. Running time, 67 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DANGEROUS CROSSROADS: Chic Sale, Diane Sinclair—This is one of the best little pictures we have played from any company this season. A good story with plenty of action and thrills. There is nothing big about this, but it is a good program picture and should please any audience. Just the type of entertainment that should appeal to all classes of people and should do a big business. Played one day to good business. Played Jan. 12. Running time, 62 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FOG: Donald Cook, Mary Brian—Pretty good mystery drama. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FOG: Donald Cook, Mary Brian—Good mystery drama. Pleased all who saw it. Running time, seven reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

FURY OF THE JUNGLE: Donald Cook, Peggy Shannon—Too slow for week-end business, and in some parts it was very gruesome. All right for midweek bargain night. Business fair. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 11.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—This is an unusual picture depicting the life of a wild stallion, his capture by an Indian boy and his loyalty to this boy. A very good picture that should go over in the small towns in fine shape. Drew me some extra money and pleased. Running time, 66 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: Rex—What a surprise this was! Very well received and good outdoor picture. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney—A wonderful horse western. Our patrons went wild over this one. Patrons asked me why they carted away the horse in high powered trucks when the government buyers were buying horses, for, "apparently," the Civil War. But, get this one anyway you can from Columbia if your people like westerns.—Tony Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y.

MY WOMAN: Helen Twelvetrees, Wallace Ford—A very good program picture that pleased.—C. M. Hartmen, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF TERROR: Bela Lugosi, Sally Blane—Ran this for midnight show, since the "terror-mystery" class are the kind we like for midnight shows. It was very good. Played Jan. 20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt—The best picture Holt has made in a long time. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Dec. 25.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

First National

BIG SHAKEDOWN, THE: Charles Farrell and Bette Davis—With the repeal of prohibition and the evacuation of beer barons and racketeers, First National have centered the spotlight on the counterfeit cut-rate drug products racket, re-enacted and admirably performed by foremost stars of the screen. Charles Farrell and Bette Davis, new combination love team, compose the romantic termination with flawless performances. Ricardo Cortez, Glenda Farrell and Allen Jenkins have roles suitable to their individual talents, and do favorably in their respective types, with a well balanced supporting cast completing the bill. Sidney Miller, one of our local boy talent, portrays a minor role which reveals a steady progress in carving his way to a successful screen career. Clever injections of comedy throughout keep the entertainment on an even keel. The usual production and entertainment value found in all products released through the First National sector. Played Jan. 17-18.—Running time, 65 minutes. William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—A very good picture and pleased a better than average crowd. Sally Eilers has a following here and this didn't hurt her any because she does some good work. I'd hang up a picture of her, if I had one, in my lobby.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Went big for me. My folks like Brown and also baseball. Hence, a perfect combination.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Brown fans will eat this one up. Baseball fans will also get a great kick out of it. Played to good business and a well pleased crowd. Played Oct. 7-8.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

FEMALE: Ruth Chatterton—Another fine picture from Ruth Chatterton with excellent support from the entire cast. Had a good attendance the first night in spite of sleet and the second night was good. Ruth is a good bet here and this is one of her best. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—Previous reviews on this one from "What the Picture Did For Me" were mostly in the negative. We took a chance and it seemed to please our customers. Played Oct. 3-4.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

MASSACRE: Richard Barthelmess, Ann Dvorak—This is a fine feature from First National. Step on this and it will make you some dough. It pleased 100 per cent.—J. W. Lauritson, Idan-ha Theatre, Soda Springs, Idaho. Small town patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—Played this on one day only (Christmas Eve) and did a fine business in face of all the church entertainments. Would call it one of Joe Brown's very best pictures. Lots of comedy and a nice little story. Good for Sunday, or any day. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 24.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—Here is a fine picture. Good story, well acted but from some cause was almost a complete flop at the box office. Paul Muni is a swell actor and if you can get them interested, they will like this one fine. Played too close to Christmas. Running time, nine reels. Played Dec. 17-18.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

Fox

BERKELEY SQUARE: Leslie Howard, Heather Angel—Another one of those strictly English pictures. Many more like this and we would have to throw up the sponge. Business bad. Running time, nine reels. Played Dec. 5-6.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

BERKELEY SQUARE: Leslie Howard, Heather Angel—Played this on a Sunday and Monday. The children suffered in agony and cheered when it was all over. But it held the attention of the adults. Box office, so so.—Tony Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Buddy Rogers, Marian Nixon—Ran this family night and it was wow. Funny and clean, just the combination I want for family night. Perhaps a little too much beer, but it is a good show at that. Entire cast is fine. Running time, eight reels. Played Jan. 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—Very good picture for mid-week. A little tiresome, but will please the most of them. Drew good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—These pictures are always clean and fit for family trade. Did average business, but the picture was not as amusing in dialogue as the others in this series. No kick about this one. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Dec. 22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Clean and very good entertainment. The people are always sure to see good pictures with Rogers acting. Played Sept. 28-29-30.—Spero D. Latchis, Latchis Auditorium, Brattleboro, Vt. General patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Best Rogers to date. Drew excellent business. Played Jan. 7-8.—E. H. Malone, Community Theatre, Hammond, Wis. Small town patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Just fair. Hope his next is better.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Not quite the big picture you would expect from Will but nevertheless very good. Human down-to-earth stuff that people like. Highbrow and lowbrow alike. The whole town does business when Rogers is starred at our house. Played Jan. 19-20.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

F. P. 1: Jill Esmond, Conrad Veidt, Leslie Fenton—This is an old picture but very good. A hard picture to advertise, but those we did get to see it spoke very highly of it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—My better class of patronage will not turn out for pictures of this type. The story insults the intelligence of the average patron. When Clara shows all she has you will have trouble with the ignorant masses who glory in passing audible remarks; you know—the smart-dumb kind. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Jan. 8.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Boys howdy. If you want to get an eyeful just watch Clara Bow in this one. It's the "Barker" all dressed up with Clara turning in a swell bit of entertainment. It looks like she's trying to break into the nudist colony but they will like it. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 3-4.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow, Richard Cromwell—A record crowd came to see "Hoopla," which, in a small town, isn't bad. Thought it would be too much "Bow backstage carnival dancing" where men only are allowed, but these were only flashes and did not hurt the picture in the main. First Clara Bow picture here in quite some time.—Tony Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Business about 50 per cent above normal and patrons were well satisfied. Be sure and exclude the children as this is adult entertainment. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Jan. 23-24.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi—Heard so much adverse criticism on this one that I was afraid to show it and so I put it on the Saturday before Christmas. Contrary to all expectations I had very satisfactory business. However, when I asked how the picture was enjoyed they all said the same, "Gee, 'The Three Little Pigs' was wonderful." I suppose the cartoon brought the crowd, and yet that assertion may be vey unfair to the feature. Running time, 75 minutes.—Played Dec. 23.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn—This is a dandy little program picture. Pleased my people more than "Take a Chance" in which Dunn is starred. Should go over on any date. Running time, 66 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—The patrons turned out pretty well for this one and business was above average. Had a Laurel-Hardy comedy and this may have helped. It's an action picture of the better type. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—A better than average program picture. I billed it to chime with the kidnapping cases headlining the daily papers today and was received by the greatest crowd I have had on a Saturday night. Played it on a weekend, and was a good spot for this picture. Fox has produced a high percentage of real pictures this year so far, and let's hope that they will keep it up.—Tony Balducci, Avon Theate, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy, Ralph Morgan—Not a bad sort of picture. Interesting to the end. Business rushing past the door. Used special advertising but could not get them in. Played week before Christmas. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 18-19.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers, Zasu Pitts—While I cannot say this was his best (as "State Fair" stands ahead of all his pictures) this is a natural for the small towns. Everybody went out feeling like they had been entertained. Personally call it excellent. Miss Desmond fine. Played Jan. 21-22.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theate, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—A snappy little picture that drew a nice Sunday and Monday business. Lilian Harvey is cute and John Boles will draw the ladies. He only sings one song which is hardly enough to satisfy. Business good. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 10-11.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—A dandy production. Business above aveage. Good singing, good story, good acting. You need not hide after showing this one. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Jan. 15.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lew Ayres, Lilian Harvey—Cannot class this as a big show. Just fair entertainment. Cannot imagine anyone being so dumb as Lilian Harvey was in this one. Did not draw. Played Dec. 23-24-25.—E. H. Malone, Community Theatre, Hammond,, Wis. Small town patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—This is a swell show. Good music and no risque dancing scenes. Can be played any night of the week and will satisfy. Patrons liked the show but they were so few that it was a pity to run the show. However, it was not the fault of the picture. Played week before Christmas and that kills any picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel, Walter Catlett—Full house with plenty for the second show but on bargain night. They seemed to get a kick out of this, in spots. I don't believe it is strong enough for anything but a double bill or else a bargain night. Running time, seven reels. Played Jan. 17-18.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel—I was afraid of this picture as the reports on it were somewhat disappointing. In my theatre, however, it did a very satisfactory business and pleased almost one hundred per cent. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Jan. 19-20.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

SHANGHAI MADNESS: Spencer Tacy, Fay Wray—Plenty of action. Made a good Saturday picture. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Dec. 23.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

SMOKY: Victory Jory—A swell horse western. Many thought it not as good as the book by Will James. But because of the many comparisons between the screen version and the book. I knew that for once my patrons were well satisfied. James' comments alongside "Smoky" were very good.—Tony Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley, Will James—Excellent Saturday show. The story of Smoky from the time he was foaled until old age. Story told by Will James. Grownups will enjoy it. Played Jan. 20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SMOKY: Victor Jory, Irene Bentley, Will James—The best animal picture ever made. An ideal Saturday night show. Small town exhibitors should get behind this and make themselves some money. Unfortunately, I did not know how good it was until I saw it the first night's showing in my theatre, and then it was too late. You'll have to go out and sell it to your country patrons if you expect to do more than normal business, as the book has not been so widely read. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 5-6.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster—A good picture to better than average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster—This picture followed "Hoopla" and is a far better production from every standpoint. Not exactly a family picture but the story had a moral to it. No adverse criticisms from the patrons. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 10.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster, Ralph Morgan—Eilers only fair. Morgan and Foster very good. Well received. Good entertainment. Played Jan. 7-8.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patonage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, David Manners—A fantastic production with excellent music and scenes and a lot of comedy. I got a poor print and this hurt the second night attendance. Seemed to please my patrons, with the exception of the complaints about poor prints. Wish Fox would get some inspectors who would really inspect films before they send them out.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Majestic

HEARTS OF HUMANITY: Jean Hersholt, Jackie Searle—One of the finest pictures it has ever been our privilege to run. Pictures of this type make friends for the theatre. Running time, 70 minutes. Played New Year's.—E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis. Small town and country patronage.

WORLD GONE MAD, THE: Pat O'Brien, Evelyn Brent—A dandy picture. Just the right kind of a story at just the right time. Play it by all means. Your best people as well as the rougher element will say "It's a dandy picture." Running time, 80 minutes. Played Jan. 7.—E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis. Small town and country patronage.

MGM

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Madge Evans—Just another picture. Played midweek.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

BLONDE BOMBSHELL, THE: Jean Harlow—Ten reels in a mad house. A wrangle from start to finish. Business poor. A few liked it.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—This is good comedy and a family picture. Some regular patrons stayed away because they do not like Ed Wynn's style over the radio. Business was average, but if laughter is a criterion to go by, then "The Chief" was O.K. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Jan. 13.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—This picture certainly didn't do the business that it was reasonable to expect. Joan seems to have lost her draw and Clark Gable has been miscast and shunted off to minor parts so many times that he's a "has been." It took too long to get this thing going and too many people have seen the same old wings so many times that they are tired of them. There are two or three big numbers in this that are plenty good, but they don't save the picture for Joan. "Wasn't she ugly in this?" I don't know how many people I heard make that comment. We plugged it plenty, but didn't do much better than any ordinary program would have done. Played Jan. 14-15-16.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—If it wasn't for MGM I would have been out of business long ago. Not only do they give us good pictures but they don't want to take all. Played Dec. 12-13-14-15-16.—Spero Latchis, Latchis Auditorium, Brattleboro, Vt. General patronage.

DAY OF RECKONING: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Here is a good picture for Satuday or any one day engagement. Hardly think it would stand up for two days or more. Richard Dix turns in a nice bit of acting. Played just before Christmas and business not so good. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 23.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

DAY OF RECKONING: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Personally I cannot say anything against this picture. We had bad weather and receipts were exceptionally low. I did not notice any walk-outs but perhaps that was because it was raining fast. At any rate the cash customers did not pay the cost of the overhead, let alone any film bills. Then, too, it followed "Christopher Bean" which drew above average and this always means several poor nights following. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, Billie Burke, Jean Harlow, Wallace Beery, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore—A really big picture with a great cast. Much better than "Grand Hotel." Acting is excellent and the story interesting throughout. Still not a small town picture unless you have more of the class of people who appreciate such entertainment than I have. Business was disappointing.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, La. Small town patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery, Jean Harlow, Billie Burke, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore—This is Metro's big picture and drew some extra business. To me, the picture is cheaply constructed. No big sets, not many people. About the only thing that would indicate a big outlay of money would be the high price stars and Jean Harlow's negligees. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Jan. 17-18-19.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

FAST WORKERS: John Gilbert, Mae Clarke—This is very poor entertainment. Just the type of picture that ruined John Gilbert and still Metro gives him more like it. One more and what little popularity he has will be gone. Played one day to fair business. Played Jan. 17. Running time, 66 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—Here is a better picture than "Tugboat Annie." We ran it under conditions that were not favorable for making money, but I say it's a dandy picture. Changing the name from "The Late Christopher Bean" to "Her Sweetheart" may have had something to do with the small business, but if your patrons like Marie Dressler, they will not be disappointed. The whole cast is perfect, good story, good sound. Played Jan. 21-22-23.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—This is a fine show but the humor is not broad enough to sink into the masses. The humor is subtle, the acting is great and everything is fine but somehow the masses do not get it. I knew for weeks in advance that business would not equal "Tugboat Annie." Business far above average. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Jan. 20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Two good stars in a mighty fine picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Jan. 13.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—Played this one late. It is an exceptionally fine production worthy to show in the finest theatre. A clean picture and not exaggerted. Pictures like this would bring patrons to the theatres that now stay away. Fully 50% of the present day pictures insult the intelligence of the average person. Not so with "Looking Forward." Did not do a rushing business but it pleased. Nothing trashy about it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 28.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jimmy Durante, Jack Pearl—All I can say is that I showed this picture on New Year and I had good business matinee and night. In addition to a good turn-out, the patrons seemed to enjoy the picture. Jimmy Durante is still popular and justly so. Zasu Pitts is always welcome. Nothing outstanding about Jack Pearl; Jimmy pushed him through the picture from start to finish. Remember Jimmy made "Hell Below" an outstanding money making production. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 1.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante—Good at the box office and got a lot of laughs. Some liked it and some, including the proprietor, did not. Went over good with the young folks but a little too silly for the more conservative. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 13-14.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Ricardo Cortez, Loretta Young—An underworld picture that got the money. Played Dec. 31.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Helen Hayes, John Barrymore, Lionel Barrymore, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—A man's picture. The ladies didn't take to it. Average business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: John and Lionel Barrymore, Clark Gable, Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—The stars in this one should make money for you, but the picture is poor entertainment. I hope that the day will come soon when the producers learn that it takes more than stars to make a good picture. This may go over well in the large towns, but here it is just another program picture that nobody wants to see. Played two days to only a fair business. Played January 15-16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Helen Hayes, John and Lionel Barrymore, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—Business better than average. Aeroplane titles are popular here. The cast studded with star names also had its bearing on the attendance. To me the parts taken by the Barrymores seemed too minor and commonplace. Print was in poor condition and for some reason or other my sound outfit must be turned on all the way to make the dialogue audible with any MGM picture, and I have one of the two best makes on the market. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Dec. 29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—A picture that holds the interest of the patrons from start to finish. Good cast, good story, good photography and good at the box office. This kind of picture is worth two or three of the so-called "specials" that in lots of cases are just special prices and special flops. Running time, 91 minutes. Played Jan. 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Myrna Loy, Max Baer, Walter Huston—Did a very poor business with this one, although I will say it was the fault of the title. If you can get the patrons to ignore the prizefight title and come in, they will enjoy this production. My patrons do not fall for prizefight or football pictures any more than they fall for Chinese, Japanese or costume pictures. I knew I was licked with this one when I heard the adverse criticism about the advertising. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Dec. 30.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore—Got more people on this picture than expected but didn't please many. Too long and heavy for anyone looking for entertainment. Running time, 127 minutes. Played Jan. 18.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady—A mighty fine picture. Star great and wonderful support. Story very entertaining. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady, Maureen O'Sullivan—A very good picture that was not so good at the box office. Alice Brady hard to understand. Good music and gorgeous settings. The Rainbow dance is exceptionally good. Generally liked by those who came. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Dec. 30-31-Jan. 1.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—You're always sure to see a good picture with Marie and Wallace. Played Aug. 15-16-17-18-19.—Spero D. Latchis, Latchis Auditorium, Brattleboro, Vt. General patronage.

Monogram

RIDERS OF DESTINY: John Wayne—Dandy. Hope Monogram keep him in good stories.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SENSATION HUNTERS: Arlene Judge and Preston Foster—Still effective from their last inoculation of success, Monogram are striving toward elevated regions with drama that will appeal to the majority of cinema followers, and will meet with a stamped approval of all critics in attendance. The film is based on the story "Cabaret" by Whitman Chambers, well represented by a stellar cast with Arlene Judge, Preston Foster and Marion Burns occupying the limelight, with perfect performance and with well balanced under cast. Good humorous comedy and two timely song hits well executed are important while the direction is under the capable reign of Charles Vidor. Monogram's last year prophecy has hit the stride and they give all indications of living up to their standard. Played Jan. 14-15-16. Running time, 67 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. Small town patronage.

Pathe

BIG MONEY: Eddie Quillan—Played the re-issue of Pathe's "Big Money" starring Eddie Quillan. Ran this picture for two days Friday and Saturday. The audiences' reactions toward this picture were very good and everyone liked it and enjoyed it. It is too bad that pictures with box office stars such as Mr. Quillan are not available more often than they are. In that event the exhibitor always welcomes a re-issue. Eddie Quillan in "Big Money" was assisted by Robert Armstrong and James Gleason. What a trio that makes! Business for the two days was very good. I am looking forward for more Quillan pictures. He is the type of star that appeals to both young and old and what more could a fellow ask for.—G. Vaveris, Strand Theatre, Johnstown, Pa. General patronage.

Paramount

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—Excellent production of its kind. A great children's picture but the adults liked it also. No one should be disappointed in it for everyone should know what to expect from the story. More of a novelty than entertainment. Business very satisfactory.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, La. Small town patronage.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—Played this with high school basketball team behind it. Child's entertainment only. Very disappointing. Played Jan. 24-25.—E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, S. D. Small town patronage.

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez, Elizabeth Young, Richard Bennett—Fast. Paramount almost made a hit out of a program picture. Played Jan. 12-13.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

BILLION DOLLAR SCANDAL: Constance Cummings, Robert Armstrong—Here's a good picture showing the scandal of the Teapot Dome. We played it plenty old, but good for any audience that has not seen it. Played Sept. 23-24.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—Don't let anyone kid you into saying this is not a fine picture. It's one of the cleanest and very best. If you are in a Catholic community, get them interested. The picture will please not only the Catholics, but every other creed. Did a fairly good business for me. Running time, nine reels. Played Dec. 14-15.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—A good picture of its type. Best to sell through churches, P. T. A., or Women's Club. Average business. Played Jan. 23-24-25.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Miriam Hopkins, Gary Cooper, Fredric March—A very good comedy but a little too sophisticated to do the business this cast deserves in my town. Should go over better in a larger town. Business average.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, La. Small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Drew good and pleased fairly well. People wanted to hear the brothers play. I believe this is their poorest picture.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Bros.—Each picture they make gets worse. Means nothing at the B.O. and following nice business on "Little Women" one wonders why the producers wish such trash off on poor unsuspecting exhibitors. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8.—E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, S. D. Small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Bros.—The nuttiest-craziest picture I ever saw, yet there was a laugh every minute. It's rapid fire, some good singing. We did not have many ladies the first night, but lots of kids, second night very few ladies. Believe the largest percentage of men have ever shown to. Played Jan. 25-26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Bros.—Harpo doesn't and Chico doesn't tickle the ivories. So what? A special disappointment.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

EIGHT GIRLS IN A BOAT: Kay Johnson, Dorothy Wilson—Much divided opinion on this. Some liked it, especially the fair sex, and some did not. Guess the title was deceptive. Personally liked it, but it was the biggest box office flop in months. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Jan. 14-15.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Margaret Churchill—If your town likes Ruggles, this picture will go over. If they don't, it won't. A rather weak story, but Ruggles makes it a very pleasant evening's entertainment. Went over fine for me.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen—Boy what a swell picture for a country town like mine.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen, Judith Allen—A mighty good program picture. My people like Arlen so it drew good and satisfied. It is nothing big, but should make a good weekend program.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—In my opinion this is a much better picture than her previous one. Drew very good business for me and every one seemed to enjoy it. Running time, 87 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Good picture, but didn't please all classes. Some complained. Played Nov. 20-21-22.—Spero D. Latchis, Latchis Auditorium, Brattleboro, Vt. General patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Here is a picture that even the most fastidious enjoyed. Miss West is without a doubt one of the most versatile stars on the screen today. This pleased every class. Played it on a mid-nite show on Saturday and then Sunday and Monday. When a picture holds up well for three days in this, it's got to be good. All compliments, no complaints. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Jan. 20-21-22.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper: This picture ideal for Friday and Saturday. Much better than average western. Great entertainment for youngsters. Played Jan. 12-13.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Ran this on Saturday and it pleased 100 per cent. Business above average.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, La. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: George Raft—Can't say much for the story, but Raft is all right. Made a good Saturday picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 20.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper.—Different. Interesting. Very good entertainment. People like the change. Played Jan. 5-6.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Ginger Rogers, Jack Oakie, Jack Haley—Pleasing musical. Nothing lavish, but good entertainment. Played Jan. 14-15.—E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Tom Keene—Westerns seem to be the dessert of our audience. Played two Tom Keene pictures to best week of any during the year. "Cheyenne Kid," an RKO release, was the other played this week.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Coswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn—This drew quite a little criticism. Some liked it and some didn't. I don't believe it is a picture that will be generally liked.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: Jimmy Dunn, June Knight—Hit and miss musical that didn't appeal to me personally. However, the majority of patrons liked it, so maybe I am wrong. Played Jan. 21-22.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

THUNDERING HERD, THE: Randolph Scott, Judith Allen—Who said westerns were dead? Paramount and Zane Grey never miss. This is a big western above average, with some beautiful shots. Take my word for it, it's a good outdoor picture. Played Jan. 19.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth, Baby LeRoy—Plenty of fun which attracted a little larger than normal audience. Played Jan. 6.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: Alison Skipworth, W. C. Fields—W. C. Fields at his best. If your patrons like Fields give it a good spot. Running time is short, but a lot of good comedy throughout. Played Jan. 19-20.—E. A. Reynolds, Stand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—Okay. Nothing to rave about. Business good. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 2.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—Excellent picture, Claudette at her best. Good story well received. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—They killed off most everybody in the picture which seemed to please the audience. A wild and woolly western. Business good. Played Jan. 13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—Played this to the biggest Saturday in two years. Even in a western, Paramount gives you stars, good sound, good photography and a marvelous story, and some of these vital points are missing in a lot of so-called "Specials." Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 20.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby—If your patrons like Bing Crosby, this will give excellent satisfaction. It's clean. Running time, 75 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—I guess every one heard the songs over the radio and wanted to see this one, because it does a good business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier—Chevalier with Edward Everett Horton makes this good entertainment and always does good business. Played midweek.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Dvorak—A deviation from Maurice Chevalier's usual pictures. Slippery highways cut into the attendance, but the feature satisfied. Played Jan. 1.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier—One of the worst drawing stars we have. His stuff never goes over here. Played Jan. 14-15.—Horn and Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

WHITE WOMAN: Carole Lombard, Charles Laughton. A two-year-old baby could talk any language better than Laughton did. Business no good and didn't deserve any. Played Dec. 16.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

WHITE WOMAN: Carole Lombard—Just fair. A good double feature show. Charles Laughton very hard to understand.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan—A man's picture. Good acting and some wonderful airplane scenes, but a little too brutal for some. A good sermon against war. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 17-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

AGGIE APPLEBY, MAKER OF MEN: Wynne Gibson, Charles Farrell—Rather warm in spots where it certainly does not help to build up the picture business. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Jan. 14.—E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis. Small town and country patronage.

AGGIE APPLEBY, MAKER OF MEN: Charles Farrell, Wynne Gibson—This picture is absurd. Jokes are cracked about dead parents; such jokes are never funny. Absolutely no moral to the whole sloppy story. A married woman living with man promiscuously is the highlight of the story. The box office proves that the big business done with Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell was due to Janet Gaynor. Personally, I like Farrell, but he meant nothing at the box office in this picture. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Jan. 24.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne—This was to be one of RKO's big specials. I will say they were white enough to withdraw it from this class and put it in the B class. To be regular fellows they should have ditched it entirely. I was expecting at least average business, but the reputation of this picture travelled before it, consequently I played to an empty house. Walter Huston making love to Irene Dunne is rightly compared to a high school boy in a home talent show. Huston may be all right in roles fitted for his type, but as a lover he merely speaks his lines. Another flop. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Jan. 17.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett—Just fair entertainment. Would please the Saturday night crowd. Played Dec. 30-31.—E. H. Malone, Community Theatre, Hammond, Wis. Small town patronage.

BLIND ADVENTURE: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—A very entertaining picture. They all said they liked it and so we could not expect any more. If they don't like a picture nowadays, they will be sure to tell of it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CHANCE AT HEAVEN: Ginger Rogers, Joel McCrea—When some one referred to this picture as a sweet, clean little show I fell over backwards. I was considering this one for Christmas and how lucky I was that I was warned in time not to play it. In my community mothers and sons, fathers and daughters, brothers and sisters, respectable girls and their gentlemen friends attend the theatre. Lucky indeed was the fact that I played this one two nights to an empty house. The first part of the picture was sweet and clean without question; but the last several reels were positively raw and disgusting. Pampering a spoiled girl about her giving birth to a baby and then more baby-coming and still more baby-coming; just the stuff that roughnecks and illiterates pass loud remarks about. To cap the climax the baby disappears before it is born legitimately. I think "Birth Control" would have at least been an honest title for this picture; patrons would then know at least what to expect. Sweet and clean? Anything but; and I am warning you to be careful on what nights you play it; that is, if you cater to family trade. This one is poison for little towns. If you play this one keep your lights very low or else you are going to see some very red faces on the respectable class of patrons—and justly so. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Dec. 26-27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CHEYENNE KID: Tom Keene—Westerns seem to be the dessert of our audience. Played two Tom Keene pictures to best week of any during the year. "Sunset Pass," a Paramount release, was the other played this week. Played Sept. 26-27.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

CROSSFIRE: Tom Keene—We seem to have extra good crowds on Keene pictures. We don't like to show them too often; it tends to overcrowd the appetites for westerns. Played Oct. 17-18.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

SEVEN "CUB" REPORTERS JOIN THIS WEEK

Seven new contributors, and each from a different state, have their first reports in "What the Picture Did for Me" this issue, attesting both the constant increase in exhibitor cooperation in the objectives of the department and the widespread extent of that cooperation geographically.

Read the reports of the following, cub reporters yes, but also experienced exhibitors:

J. W. Lauritson, Idan-ha theatre, Soda Springs, Idaho; G. Vaveris, Strand theatre, Johnstown, Pa.; Antonio C. Balducci, Avon theatre, Canastota, N. Y.; Sammie Jackson, Jackson theatre, Flomaton, Ala.; Spero D. Latchis, Latchis Auditorium, Brattleboro, Vt.; E. E. Holmquist, Broadway theatre, Centerville, S. Dak.; and E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis.

CROSSFIRE: Tom Keene—The best Tom Keene yet. Plenty of action, pleased a good crowd on Sunday. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 14.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding—Was afraid of this one. Found it to be a fine picture. Many said it was best show they had seen in weeks. Played Jan. 14-15.—E. H. Malone, Community Theatre, Hammond, Wis. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—Excellent dramatic performance of Ann Harding and William Powell. Just a little too much dialogue. Business fair. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 9-10.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

FLAMING GOLD: Bill Boyd, Mae Clarke—A very fine Saturday picture and good enough for any day. Something really to it, and plenty thrilling. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Jan. 20.—E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis. Small town and country patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Gene Raymond—The best musical I have run since "Whoopee." Pleased 100 per cent. The dance numbers get a little "hot" at times, but that seems to be what my patrons like. This picture should go over big everywhere. A big special if there ever was one. Good music, beautiful girls, elaborate sets. Astaire is great.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, La. Small town patronage.

FLYING DOWN TO RIO: Gene Raymond, Dolores Del Rio—What a honey this one is. Following the avalanche of musicals this is a wow. Draw big and comments from patrons more glowing than any in a long, long time, which only goes to prove that they will go over if they give them something good. Entire cast perfectly cast. Gene Raymond never before so good. Ginger Rogers and Del Rio excellent. Raul Roulien, this time cast in a characterization of his own native land, was perfect. Last, but not least, comes Fred Astaire, who just about steals the show. Watch him from now on. After many headaches, RKO has finally given us two pictures, thus far this season, but they are both pictures.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan, Frances Dee—Starts with bathing beauties, ends with gangsters. Plenty of action in this one. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 21.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

IF I WERE FREE!: Irene Dunn, Clive Brook—Good program picture. I only wish that these actors and actresses would speak the American language. The public is getting tired of hearing that English slant what no one can understand. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Undoubtedly one of the sweetest pictures of the season. Excellent cast and superb acting. Comments very favorable from the older people, but less so from the younger set. Business disappointing. However, this is a picture which should be shown in every theatre in the country for the prestige of the theatre and the industry as a whole will be greatly enhanced by such a picture.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, La. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Frances Dee, Paul Lukas—The greatest picture for entertaining 100 per cent. Some people came two and three nights to see this one, the first time we ever had this happen. We did the biggest business we have done in this house in over a year and every one praising the picture as best they ever saw. As to the picture, all I can say is, it is great. Need more like it. Played Jan. 14-15-16.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—A box office wow and one mighty fine picture. One of the biggest women box office draws in the history of pictures. The men will like it after they come, and they do come on this because the fair sex will make them come. Story just made to order for Hepburn and they'll have a hard time making another like it. The success of this picture will undoubtedly start a cycle of this type of picture, but the successes will be few and far between. Running time, 115 minutes. Played Jan. 17.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles—A fairly good musical comedy that pleased our audience. Nothing big; just a program picture. Played Oct. 21-22.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—Here is a honey from RKO which not only pleased but brought capacity crowds, and better still, the people talked about it and brought many more the next day. Bruce Cabot does some very good work here and was favorably received. The story, with Annapolis background, moves well and should "hit" anywhere.—Tony Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—Ran this one on Christmas and again showed "Three Little Pigs." Needless to say, "Three Little Pigs" was the drawing card, although "Midshipman Jack" gave satisfaction. It is clean, wholesome entertainment with a strong moral. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Dec. 25.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—Don't let me say anything about this if I can help it. The RKO exchange in Albany might hear me and raise my rentals. But I plugged this picture, played it late, and it broke every house record in the year. I personally didn't care for the picture, although Hepburn was something cooling and refreshing, if you know what I mean. But what I thought and what it did at the box office were two different things. Play this picture and plug "Hepburn."—Tony Balducci, Avon Theatre, Canastota, N. Y. General patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—One of the worst pictures that ever played in my theatre. The picture means nothing, business was nothing and nothing from nothing leaves nothing. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 2.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Rated as a wow, but just ordinary entertainment. Will please your customers, however. Played Oct. 28-29.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—This is a good western picture, full of interest and plenty of action and thrills. Our audience as a whole did not like this picture, but personally I think it just as good as any western can be. It is a little old, but then the age of westerns does not matter. Tom Keene is a good drawing name in our town and business good for one day. Played Jan. 13. Running time, 55 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SON OF KONG: Robert Armstrong, Helen Mack—An awful letdown from "King Kong." The public expects more than they get in this one. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 12-13.—E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, S. D. Small town patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris—Boys and girls, here's a real mystery drama that will keep them on the edge of their seats until the last minute. If your customers like mystery, step on this one. You can face your customers when they go out. Played Oct. 24-25.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper, George Raft—What a honey. Pleased every one, young and old. Lots of action and quite a bit of music. Splendid acting. Running time, 90 minutes.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Russ Columbo, Constance Cummings—Wish I had stepped on this more as people ate it up. Some came all three nights. Excellent music. I think it is lots better than "Too Much Harmony," but it's not as well known, of course. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8-9.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

EMPEROR JONES: Paul Robeson—Got by. Some like it real well. Robeson's escape in the forest dragged pretty bad, so I eliminated the seventh reel after the first showing and it made a better show without any one noticing the change. Played Dec. 22-23.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

HALLELUJAH, I'M A BUM: Al Jolson—I didn't know that one picture could be so poor. This rhythmic dialogue sounds like a glorified nursery rhyme. The first day, business was pretty good, as it was Sunday, but Monday receeipts did not take care of the electric juice. If you bought it, eat it or do anything you like with it, but don't play it. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Jan. 14-15.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

Universal

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—A splendid entertaining picture. Gave extra good satisfaction. Played Jan. 12.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Paul Lukas, Elissa Landi—Just an average program picture. The story is weak and the action is slow. Ran it to the poorest Sunday business in months. Landi and Lukas have no drawing power here.—D. B. Fiske, Fiske Theatre, Oak Grove, Ia. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Fair picture if your people like this type. Played Jan. 22.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore—A good picture well made, with Barrymore doing a good job, as the counsellor. No extra business, however. Played Jan. 14-15.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town patronage.

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—From the title you would think this one was one of those mushy love pictures. It's one of the finest racetrack stories you have ever had the pleasure of showing. Pleased our audience and to good business. Played Nov. 7-8.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

GUN JUSTICE: Ken Maynard—Good western and nice photography. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 10-11.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—This team does not draw at all here. I can't in the least blame my patrons, as I think that they are painfully silly, and every one of their pictures are the same. Universal should find a new story for them. Business fair. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

HORSE PLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine—If you like Summerville, picture okay. Plenty of comedy. Did not take in expenses. Running time, seven reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

HORSE PLAY: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Not so hot. This guy Summerville never did make money for me. His pictures are too silly. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight—A splendid program picture. Good story, fine singing and acting. Gave good satisfaction. Better than the average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY!: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—A little raw in spots, not bad. The courtroom scene saved the show. Here is a real comedy team and if the vehicles hold up, they should continue to draw good business for a long time. Business good. Played Jan. 20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carillo—Wonderful picture, but my patrons liked "Melody Cruise" best and told me so.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Leo Carrillo, Mary Brian—Will please your German people. A fair to good musical comedy. Did not consider it very big. Played Nov. 4-5.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERADY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—What a swell picture this is. Will rank as one of the ten best of the year. A great picture for New Year's and I hit it just right. Didn't break any records, but the picture will please all. Directed by John M. Stahl, who has never made a failure. Running time, 11 reels. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Excellent picture. One of the best from Universal. Good business to a well pleased crowd. Step on it; it's worth advertising. Tracy at his best. Played Aug. 8-9.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

SECRET OF THE BLUE ROOM, THE: Lionel Atwill, Gloria Stuart—Another mystery drama that keeps your audience in suspense until the last minute. A good picture for any day of the week. The kind they talk about after. Played Nov. 11-12.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

S. O. S. ICEBERG: Rod La Rocque, Gibson Gowland—A great picture of its kind, but did not do so well at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TRAIL DRIVE, THE: Ken Maynard—Poorest picture I have played from this star. Didn't go over here.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Warner

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Had more favorable comments on this than any picture I've ever played. 'Nuf said.—Samuel Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell—An excellent picture that drew me capacity business. Seemed like old times to put out the old SRO sign. Picture should please anywhere.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

FROM HEADQUARTERS: George Brent—A nice little program picture that will go over all okay for a one-night showing. Would not suggest a longer run. Patrons seemed to like it. Running time, seven reels. Played Jan. 2-3.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Ben Lyon, Mary Brian—A good mystery drama that keeps your customers in suspense until the last few seconds. A good picture for any day of the week. Have had some very good pictures from Warners this season. Played Oct. 10-11.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—This is a second run for us, and I am surprised how well it drew. People came back the second time to see it over and thoroughly enjoyed it. It's a great box office bet. I am not so sure but what I'll run it back the third time. Best box office picture on the Warner group. Played Jan. 19-20.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Although I did not play this picture until late, it proved a good draw and pleased exceptionally well. A picture worth playing in any house. Running time, 98 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Played this Christmas day. Did capacity business with it. It was really worth every cent of the film rental and the overage, as people came out and thanked me for allowing them to witness such a spectacle. Warners have the product, their prices are right, and they are the friends of the small exhibitor. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Dec. 24-25.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—Pleased Saturday night patrons. Blue Washington makes the picture. Give us more like it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

LADY KILLER: James Cagney—A very fine program picture. I think it is his best. Lots of action and very interesting story. Splendid cast gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A very good picture with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Good business to satisfied audience. Played Nov. 14-15.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—Another good picture from Warners with Arliss. Step on it. It's sure to please your Arliss fans. Warner has turned out some good pictures this year, but it's awful hard to get advertising from them. Played Oct. 14-15.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BROTHER, CAN YOU SPARE A MILLION: Ken Murray—This is a takeoff on the Morgan investigation. Personally, thought it was poor. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

OUT OF THE ETHER: Krazy Kat Kartoons—A good cartoon.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SAFE IN JAIL: Sunrise Comedies—This is a fairly good two-reel comedy. I had previously come to the conclusion that Columbia could not make a good two-reel short, but this is an exception. However, nothing too good about it, but better than all the others put together. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

UM-PA: Musicals—Just fair.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Educational

BIG SQUEAL, THE: Andy Clyde—Andy Clyde isn't the comedian he used to be. People are tired of him. Running time, 18 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

BROADWAY GOSSIP (No. 4): If the show is crowded run a Broadway Gossip. It will calm the house. Running time, nine minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

DIVORCE SWEETS: Tom Howard—Fair. Not bad. Nothing extra.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FARMER'S FATAL FOLLY: Moran and Mack—A very good comedy. Shown to a full house on New Year's, this comedy kept them laughing continuously.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

FROZEN ASSETS: Andy Clyde—Andy Clyde always amusing. This comedy made them laugh. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HONESTY PAYS, BUT NOT MUCH: Tom Howard—Who said that Tom Howard was a screen comedian? This short and the balance of his are poor. Running time, eight minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

LAST DOGIE, THE: Song Hit Stories—Exceptionally good. Ran this on a New Year's program and now and then a patron still speaks about it. Splendid recording and excellent singing. An outstanding short.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR MELODY: Musical Comedies—Only a dented tin can.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

POPPIN' THE CORK: Musical Comedies—This is without doubt the best musical comedy ever made—and I have played them all. Boys, this is a "knockout." Running time, 26 minutes.—E. H. Malone, Community Theatre, Hammond, Wis. General patronage.

SUNNY SOUTH, THE: Terry-Toons—Fair.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

BACKS TO NATURE: Todd-Kelly—A refreshing comedy. MGM has the comedies, no doubt about it. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Musical Comedies—See report on "Rhapsody in Brew."—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CROOK'S TOUR: All-Star Series—A comedy that seemed to be enjoyed by all. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—The best comedy produced to date. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

FINE FEATHERS: Oddities—Another swell short from MGM. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

FINE FEATHERS: Oddities—Another Oddity that is a knockout. Beautiful birds in natural colors. The comments by Pete Smith are clever and interesting. These Oddities have been consistently good. I now use them to strengthen my weak programs.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

HANDLEBARS: Oddities—If you want something refreshing, something novel, here it is. The Oddities of MGM cannot be beaten. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

LUNCHEON AT TWELVE: Charley Chase—This is a fine comedy. It is well that MGM entered the comedy field. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

ME AN' MY PAL: Laurel and Hardy—Poorest Laurel and Hardy comedy to date. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. H. Malone, Community Theatre, Hammond, Wis. General patronage.

MENU: Oddities—Here is a reel that will bolster up your program. Done in color. It is not only pleasing to the eye, but very interesting. The off screen talk is exceptionally clever. These MGM Oddities are fine. Not one dull moment in any of them. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MIDSUMMER MUSH: Charley Chase—A real funny comedy with Charley Chase at his best. You must go a long way to beat this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PLANE NUTS: Ted Healy and Stooges—Lots of comedy in this one. MGM makes them right. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BREW and BEER AND PRETZELS: Musical Comedies—I wonder where the producers get the idea that the slopping of intoxicants is funny or welcomed by decent people. The riff-raff may enjoy drinking scenes, but we can't continue in business with the riff-raff. Our efforts must be directed toward the decent population. Get them in and the others will follow. I consider my theatre at least a bit better than a grog shop, and while I cannot afford to shelve a picture, I do not advertise beer or brew on my programs, in my lobby or anywhere else. I want the good will of the people that are respected and it is mighty difficult to explain the junk that will creep into pictures.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

STRATOS-FEAR: Willie Whopper—The poorest cartoon I ever showed. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

STRATOS-FEAR: Willie Whopper—Fair.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TWICE TWO: Laurel and Hardy—Another Laurel and Hardy comedy that my patrons liked, even if I did not. They go over fine here. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TWIN SCREWS: All-Star Series—This comedy was much better than the average. The second reel is exceptionally good. Many good laughs.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

WHOLE SHOW IN ONE REEL, A: Goofy Movies—My people do not get the drift of this style of entertainment. Some do, but if audible mirth is the go-by, then these singles are disappointing. Running time, ten minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

WRECKETY WRECKS: Taxi Boys—Seemed to go over, which is all the long suffering exhibitor wants. Best Taxi Boys short I have run. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BARBER, THE: W. C. Fields—Fields is always good for laughs here and this got plenty of them.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN HENRY'S RADIO SHOW: Lanny Ross, Annette Hanshaw, Don Voorhees—Fine single reel.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

I HEARD: Betty Boop—Betty Boop cartoons are always good.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

LITTLE BROADCAST, THE: Headliners—This is a very good single reel. Worth running on any program. Running time, nine minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

MARRIAGE HUMOR: Harry Langdon—Good slapstick and well received.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MEET THE CHAMP: Eugene Pallette—Got more laughs than any comedy in years. Pallette as the champ is a riot. Running time, 20 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT: Betty Boop—This is a very good cartoon.—P. G. Held, Strand, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PLEASE: Bing Crosby—A very good two-reel comedy.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

POPEYE THE SAILOR CARTOONS: These cartoons are excellent and bring extra business.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

SAILORS, BEWARE: Eugene Pallette, Walter Catlett—Good.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

STATION T. O. T.: Headliners Series—Not much. Just a bunch of kids showing off. Running time, seven minutes.—E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE LITTLE SWIGS: Leon Errol—You can't go wrong on this. It's very good. Running time, 18 minutes.—Albert S. Raine, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

RKO

AIR TONIC: Headliner Series—A dandy musical short. Helps fill out a weak program.—E. E. Holmquist, Broadway Theatre, Centerville, S. D. Small town patronage.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER: Ruth Etting—This musical comedy is worth while showing. Ruth Etting has a fine voice and the comedy is all right. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CUBBY'S PICNIC: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—These are only imitation cartoons, and sad ones at that. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

FLIRTING IN THE PARK: Blonde and Red Head Series—Pretty fair.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

FORCED RESPONSE, A: Ely Culbertson—This is the first of the series that I played. I want no more. If I can't get rid of them in some way, I will be compelled to take my loss and shelve them. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

HOW COMEDIES ARE BORN: Gribbon-Kennedy Comedies—Terrible. Not one smile in the whole load. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MICKEY'S APE MAN: Mickey McGuire—These Mickey McGuire comedies are okay, but after preaching for two years to the RKO exchange, I find that it does no good to ask them for a print that doesn't have at least one patch to the foot. Very good entertainment. Running time, 20 minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris—A very good musical comedy. Running time, 30 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

SUITS TO NUTS: Gribbon-Kennedy Comedies—Another flop from RKO. The one who conjures up their comedies must certainly have a quaint, remote sense of humor. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

WHAT FUR?: Edgar Kennedy—Not so bad for Edgar. He has cut down on his noise a bit and this is an improvement. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

United Artists

MICKEY'S PAL PLUTO: Mickey Mouse—Just another Mickey Mouse cartoon. This one should please every one, especially the kids, but not as good as some of the others. Personally, I am disappointed in this series of shorts. There are many others on the market better. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NOAH'S ARK: Silly Symphonies—Not "Three Little Pigs" by any means. Somehow it seemed sacrilegious. Fables or fairy tales are okay, but when Disney uses Bible subjects—well, it does not seem exactly all right, especially when he brings prayer and supplication into burlesque situations. No good. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

GLEASON'S NEW DEAL: James Gleason—Gleason is good for a laugh in anything, but this wasn't so hot. Running time, 18 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS (No. 1): Didn't seem to please, although I personally liked it fine.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS SERIES: These are all good, as strange as it seems.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS: Does not please my patrons.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

VAUDEVILLE ON PARADE: Mentone No. 6—Knockout two-reeler. Could use a lot of shorts of this type.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Vitaphone

ALMA MARTYR, THE: Fred Waring and His Pennsylvanians—Good.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOSKO IN DUTCH: Looney Tunes—This is a good cartoon comedy presenting Bosko and Honey in Holland, the land of the windmills. Some good ice skating by Bosko. A very pleasing one-reeler. Run this one and listen to the audience laugh at Bosko. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DAY WITH DICK POWELL, A: Dick Powell—Excellent medium for selling "Footlight Parade." It is not only sales talk, but entertainment and comedy. Running time, eight minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

JACK DENNY AND BAND: Melody Masters—Another good number of the "Melody Master" series of musicals, with Jack Denny and his orchestra furnishing the music and they play several popular numbers. If you have not bought this series, get in touch with your exchange immediately. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RUFUS JONES FOR PRESIDENT: Ethel Waters—Vitaphone are certainly to be congratulated on their musicals. They hit the mark every time. This one is fine.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SITTING ON A BACKYARD FENCE: Looney Tune—This is a good cartoon comedy on the new contract and is sure to please both young and old. Many laughs and some excellent drawings. Here's hoping Vitaphone will give us more like this. Good entertainment and will make an excellent filler. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THAT GOES DOUBLE: Russ Columbo—A good two-reeler with quite a lot of comedy and some good music. Skating number especially good. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THE NAME IS FAMILIAR: Broadway Brevities—Very good. Enjoyed by all. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Very good dance act. Good for a change. Running time, 19 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Hal Leroy, Mitzi Mayfair.—Vitaphone sure puts out the short product. This one was entertainment from start to finish. Excellent. Running time, 20 minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

Serials

RKO

LAST FRONTIER, THE: Creighton Chaney—Very old, but it sure keeps the crowds coming. Running time, two reels each chapter.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler, Jacqueline Wells—A good serial that brought enough extra business to more than pay the rental. Wonderful scenery and is clean. Can recommend this for children and was liked by adults.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones, Madge Bellamy—This proved a good serial and held business all the way through. Jones very popular here.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

PERILS OF PAULINE: Evelyn Knapp, Robert Allen—Am on the fourth chapter and it is holding interest very well. Believe it will prove a good serial.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson City, Iowa. Rural patronage.

PERILS OF PAULINE: Evelyn Knapp, Robert Allen—First two chapters of this serial were very slow. It seems that the characters have found themselves. These Universal serials sure draw at the box office, though.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"THERE IS EXULTATION"

From the beginning we have emphasized, editorially and otherwise, the importance of the manager in the successful operation of the industry. Time and again have we proclaimed there can be no happy future for the motion picture until this importance is recognized.

Terry Ramsaye lends further strength to this opinion in his lead editorial, issue of Jan. 27, wherein he discloses—in the course of his extensive travels—there are many indications that the manager is slowly but surely being allowed his proper "place in the sun."

We quote from Mr. Ramsaye:

"Regardless of what may prove to be the practical outcome of the movement for profit sharing in theatre receipts by managers, there is immediate significance in its refreshing recognition of the importance of the manager as a component of the merchandising system. There should be exultation over in A-Mike Vogel's Round Table section."

There is exultation. There is also firm conviction that in spite of themselves, self-centered, narrow-visioned, fumbling executives, of necessity are coming to realize the desperate need of allowing the manager sufficient latitude in thought and operation, without which the exhibition of the motion picture cannot endure.

MORE ON PROFIT SHARING

In the final analysis, the condition of any theatre's profit and loss statement over a period of time rests, to a great degree upon the "selling" ability of the individual manager. The showmanship, initiative, personality and general business ability of the manager are, in a sense, as essential to the theatre's success as the attractions.

And if this be so, we would like to see put into effect a plan suggested recently, by which the capable showmen would be compensated on the same basis as are salesmen in other lines—a flat percentage, this to apply to all profits above the house "nut." Without doubt, such a plan of profit sharing will inspire managers as nothing else can. For the real showman, it means an opportunity to prove his actual value in terms of dollars and cents, which in itself should almost guarantee a better financial return for his employer.

Many smart exhibitors would no doubt welcome a workable plan of this nature, and now that the ice has been broken with the announcement of profit sharing in Warner Brothers and Interstate Theatres, we look forward to the time when managerial ability will be judged by other standards than now obtain in too many situations.

A CLEARING HOUSE

In our tour in New England last week, we visited with that fast-stepping showman, Jack Goldstein, RKO Radio advertising chief, who in the course of conversation observed that in the future he intended entering more seriously and actively into the Club affairs. The reason he gave is so sound, that we are repeating it for the benefit of other members inclined to be laggard in their support.

"The Managers' Round Table Club," he stated, "is the only real clearing house in the business for the manager. Whatever he may want to know, do or have done in regard to his theatre work, his surest and quickest source of aid is Club headquarters. The Club pages are crammed with a lot of good stuff on what showmen are actually doing to boost their grosses, and I make it a point to read it carefully each week.

"Therefore I feel that this organization has well earned my earnest support, and I intend paying my dues in the form of more regular contributions to the pages."

Theatremen who have been taking the many Club services for granted might do far worse than follow this member's example.

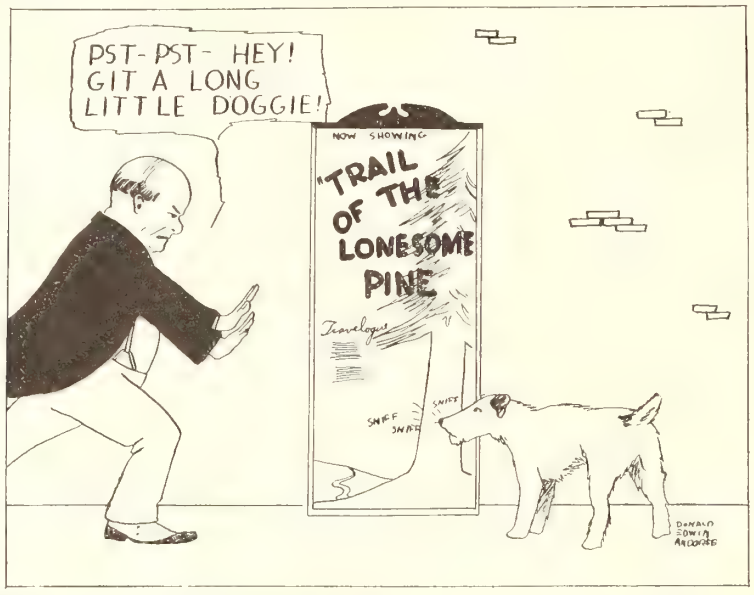
DISCOVERING MANPOWER



The major prize winners and those upon whom the Honorable Awards were bestowed in Paramount's "I'm No Angel" contest are announced in this issue. Also published are the highlights of the two winning campaigns. We are pleased to have been in on it, and to have noted that the competition drew such high calibred representation from the field.

But of far greater significance to us is the statement made by Paramount's ad head, Robert F. Gillham, to the effect that the stuff shown in many of the entries indicated a fine supply of extra manpower that may be very useful to Paramount.

We recall to the modest showman in the field who steers away from contests of this sort, the venerable saying that has to do with hiding one's light under a bushel.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Here's one we believe needs no caption!

Teaser Gags Sell "Hi, Nellie" Opening

Much of the advertising selling strength of the picture being in the title, the Warner exploiteers laid off from circusing the opening of "Hi, Nellie" at the New York Strand.

Thousands of teaser snipes with the title in red script and nothing else were spotted everywhere throughout the greater city ten days in advance, and a special record with the expression "Hi, Nellie" as shouted by six different voices were planted in strategic Broadway spots. The same gag was used in all local Warner houses for weeks ahead between curtains, and repeated with a sound truck working the main streets.

Three-inch stickers printed black on yellow, with copy saying, "Paul Muni Is Coming in a Big One" were used on all Strand letterheads, envelopes and programs for some time ahead of the opening. The title as a greeting phrase was further plugged by 1,500 Warner employees among friends.

Window tieups and hookins with fan magazines also rounded out the campaign, and the song hit of the picture was plugged by music stores and by orchestra leaders in hotels and on the air. The lobby flash also came in for attention (see photo) with the title and star punched out across the front in six-foot cutout letters, the color scheme in red, black and white, with a huge head of Muni done in full palette.

Strand "Hi Nellie" Front

Further newspaper breaks were secured with pictures of Sid Skolsky, New York news columnist, shown with Ned Sparks, one of the leads and this can no doubt be duplicated in any other spot where this column is syndicated.

Lederer Club Convenes For Music Hall Date

A club idea that sounds promising is a recently inaugurated international Francis Lederer Club, members of the New York Chapter being on hand to see "Man of Two Worlds" at Radio City Music Hall, after the performance convened for a meeting.

Rutgers Neilson reports that foreign branches of this organization wired congratulatory messages to the star on the general release date of his first American picture. Among the cities being represented were London, Prague, Berlin, New York and Chicago.

BOSTON PARTY

Tuesday night, March 6, has been selected by the Boston members for their Managers' Round Table Club "Get-Together," as reported by the following committee chairmen:

Jack Goldstein, RKO, General Committee; Joe Di Pesa, Loew's, Publicity; Gene Fox, Metropolitan ad chief, and J. J. McGuiness, Massachusetts Allied Theatre head, in charge of entertainment; Harry Browning, M. & P. Circuit ad head, and Charles Bassin, Oriental Theatre, in charge of arrangements.

The place and cost will be announced shortly, and a large attendance is expected. Circuit heads and division managers have endorsed the project, these including: Martin J. Mullin and Sam Pinanski, M. & P. Theatres; Max Finn, of E. M. Loew's Theatre; Charles Koerner, RKO Theatres, among others.

Further details will be carried in next week's issue.

Sock Ads Feature N. Y. "Nana" Date

Featured by a newspaper teaser campaign that plugged the new star from many angles, and followed by an out of the ordinary advertising series of display ads, United Artists' "Nana," starring Anna Sten, had its New York premiere at Radio City Music Hall, with a number of smart salable angles whipped across by the combined ad staffs of the Music Hall, United Artists and Sam Goldwyn offices.

The teaser campaign took the form of a number of large ads in which each day a new picture of the star was used, emphasizing a different angle of her personality. The size of the ad increased until on the opening day almost half pages were taken.

Tieups with a number of leading merchants included a number of ads plugging the star in conjunction with hat, dress and fur styles, and many Fifth Avenue windows were secured for similar hookins. Book shops displayed special cards created by Rockwell Kent, which were also used to publicize the novel.

Possibly the best newspaper break was secured with a story carried by many of the dailies which reported that congregations of Russian churches in the city were praying for the success of the star, who was brought from Russia by Sam Goldwyn.

Dempsey Wires Plug for "Prizefighter and Lady"

Salt Lake City being Jack Dempsey's home town, Manager Jack Marpole of the Paramount in that city, arranged for telegrams to be sent by the former champ to the leading local fight promoter, plugging "Prizefighter and the Lady" in advance of the date. The wire was read from the ring between bouts, with mention also being made of the theatre and date. As Dempsey plays quite a part in the picture, this idea went over very well, sport writers also publicizing it in their stories.

The special preview was put on for sport writers, representatives of women's clubs and other notables, and another feature of the campaign was a parade of hundreds of boys comprising the Junior Traffic Police, made up of honor school students who, with all the local Liberty magazine carriers, marched to the theatre headed by police.

CARAVAN. The start of the "Moulin Rouge Caravan" making a coast-to-coast tour of key cities to exploit the picture. Atop bus are a number of picture stars who are making the trip in special limousines.

Winners Announced In "Angel" Contest

William Hollander and his ad crew, for their efforts at the Oriental Theatre, Chicago, and Wm. L. Hendricks for his work at the Strand, Oshkosh, Wis., receive the two major awards in Paramount's "I'm No Angel" advertising, exploitation and publicity contest, as announced by Robt. F. Gillham, Paramount ad head.

Though Eddie Levin handles the Oriental in Chicago, all of Hollander's staff worked on the campaign, and it was therefore agreed that other prize provision be made so that all could share equally in the award.

Bill Hendricks, now at the Warner, Memphis, Tenn., landed the small city prize for the excellent campaign he put over while manager of the Strand in Oshkosh. Some of the highlights of his efforts and those of the Hollander staff are publicized on a following page of this issue.

Honorable Mention Awards

As many other entries were given high rating by the judges, Gillham announces that personal gifts from Mae West will be forwarded to those whose campaigns have been selected for honorable mention. They are as follows:

H. F. Arnold, Indiana, Terre Haute, Ind.; Geo. Baker, Newman, Kansas City, Mo.; Paul Binstock, Republic, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Robert Blair, Saenger, New Orleans, La.; Harry Botwick, Paramount, Rutland, Vt.; E. Brodie, Paramount, Haverhill, Mass.; Dan Burgum, Paramount, Greenville, Miss.; J. J. Clayton Tunstill, Saenger, Pine Bluff, Ark.; Chas. B. Taylor, Shea's Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y.; E. E. Whitaker, Fox Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.; R. W. Waterson, Tivoli, Michigan City, Ind.; Anna Bell Ward, Ben Ali, Lexington, Ky.; A. F. Weiss, Jr., Olympia, Miami, Fla.; George P. Zeppos, Rex, Wheeling, W. Va.

Honorable mention has also been awarded for the following theatre campaigns in which managers have neglected to include their names: Flynn, Burlington, Vt.; Ritz, Denison, Ia.; Saenger, Mobile, Ala.; Ambassador, St. Louis, Mo.; Strand, Jonesboro, Ark.; Paramount, Greenwood, Miss; Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.; Stanley, Utica, N. Y.; Sheboygan, Sheboygan, Wis.; Loew's, Canton, O.; Palace, Morrilton, Ark.; Paramount, Lynn, Mass.; Paramount, Springfield, Mass.; Warner, West Chester, Pa.; Strand, Lowell, Mass.; Paramount, Syracuse, N. Y.; Liberty, Portland, Ore.

"DEADLINE"

February Tenth marks the date set by the judges — the "deadline" for January exploitation campaigns forwarded by managers to be considered for the first month's Quigley Award. There has been a gratifying response in the number of entries received from every section of the country, from small towns as well as big cities.

As already noted, the following well-known executives, representing three different branches of the industry, have consented to act as the Committee of Judges to determine the campaign that in their opinion will merit the January Award:

GEORGE J. SCHAEFER, Vice-President and General Manager, Paramount Pictures

S. CHARLES EINFELD, Advertising and Publicity Director, Warner Bros. Pictures

ARTHUR L. MAYER, Managing Director, Rialto Theatre, New York

It is expected that the January winner will be announced in the February 17 issue, at which time the winning campaign will be publicized in detail for the information of the membership.

The competition for the next Award, that of February, is now being waged briskly and, from indications, will be even more spirited than the first-month battle. Remember that every manager everywhere in the world is eligible for these Awards and that campaigns may be entered on any picture of any product, domestic or foreign.

GOOD AD. The above is a shot of one of Erle Wright's ace ads on "Roman Scandals" at the Poli, New Haven, Conn. The original ad was three columns on 100 lines, selling the star and return date very effectively. We like it!

Magicians' Society Guests of Rosenthal

Money evidently is quite free in Bridgeport, Conn., according to the quarter-sheet teaser snipe card put out by Manager Morris Rosenthal, Majestic Theatre in that city, the card containing copy offering $50,000 for the capture of the "Invisible Man."

The theme of the story was well carried out in an advance lobby stunt, in which a rocking chair was kept in continuous motion by being geared to a windshield wiper motor, with copy on a card alongside telling of "The Invisible Man" in the chair. The laughable goldfish bowl gag was also used, wherein chemicals were placed in the water to cause a ripple effect, announcement being made that the "invisible" goldfish could be actually seen twice daily only, the idea gathering the curious in large numbers.

Another angle that worked out very effectively was a large black box placed in a store window in which a man dressed in black performed various feats of illusion. The only things visible from the street were cutout title letters painted in white and a chair painted white in front and black in the rear which when turned around quickly gave the effect of immediately disappearing.

Rosenthal also put over a special preview for the local branch of the Society of American Magicians, the guest of honor being the national secretary of the association. The event landed a good story in the newspapers which quoted the secretary on the possibilities of actually making a human being invisible, the copy of course including full theatre credits and plugging the picture.

CONNECTICUT FINDS BUSINESS ON RISE

Western New England Showmen Show Plenty of Ingenuity in Lining Up Effective Campaigns That Are Selling Many Tickets

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Taking a four-days swing up through New England, your Chairman in quick succession visited the members in Bridgeport, New Haven, Hartford, New Britain and Boston. Much was seen, and below is set down briefly an account of the editorial ramblings through some of these spots.

Morris Rosenthal, Majestic, Bridgeport, sums up neatly the improvement in grosses, as follows:

"Five months ago, the cheaper balcony seats went clean an hour before the orchestra filled. Today both floors sell evenly, as the former balcony patrons now have money enough to sit downstairs, and the balcony is occupied with those who for the first time in months have money to spend for the movies."

What with factory wheels again turning, and with government funds putting money in circulation, Bridgeport showmen are cheerful and working hard to get their share of this new dough.

For instance Matt Saunders, skipper of the Poli, and locally active for many years, put plenty behind a recent campaign on "Flying Down to Rio," and cashed in on a healthy newspaper campaign. Matt's lobby is plenty big, as are all those in the Poli houses, but he keeps it handsomely decorated through the brush of his able artist, Johnny Buyk.

Town Flesh-Hungry

The above mentioned Rosenthal also has a staunch helper in the person of art head John Fogarty, who is turning out some distinctive air brush lobby stuff. These showmen have built their own photographic workshop, and are turning out some neat enlargements at little cost for much less than they would have to pay in the open market. More about this in a later issue.

The town is hungry for flesh shows, states Manager Cuneo, of the Globe, who bases his opinion on the turnaway he is doing with amateur nights and revues put on by the pupils of the theatre's dancing school.

Eddie Dolan, of the Lyric, former legit house, also thinks "vaud" would do business, and another vote in this direction comes from Edgar Lynch, helmsman of the Warner Cameo, one of the first houses in America to have talking equipment.

Edgar, however, manages to get his share of business as is, having done big on "Little Women" with a lot of ace angles, which will all be publicized in an early issue. Mike Carroll, his assistant, is now learning to snap pictures of Lynch's ideas for the Round Table pages. Incidentally, Edgar broke into showbusiness years ago while he was in the army and stationed in Panama. It's quite a story, and it may appear soon in these pages.

This first visit in years to Bridgeport left a decidedly pleasant impression, so far as the managers and their theatres are concerned. The boys not only seem to take a lot of pleasure in running their houses efficiently, but are continuously on their toes to try anything new that will react favorably upon the box office, and this thought also came to mind in visiting the members in New Haven.

New Haven Bullish

One of the main industries of this spot being Yale University, Ben Cohen of the College, makes good use of the "studes" for many of his stunts, such as debates with chorus girls from the stage, a stunt with which he has promoted a lot of breaks in the papers, usually tough to picture stuff. Ben has been in and out of New Haven, and has the local situation sized up well.

It seems that when money was much easier, the "A" houses could usually depend on profitable business, but today theatre men say that the house with the attraction gets the breaks, with the "B" stands profiting through lower prices.

Ace Showmanship

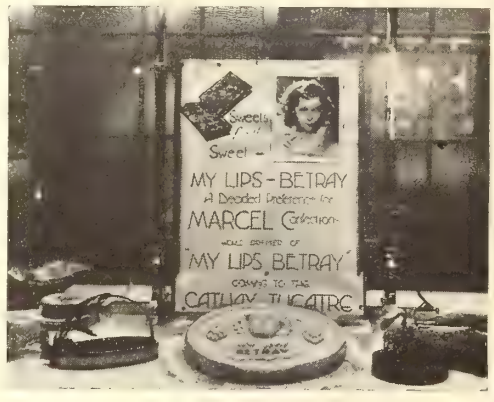
Jack Sanson is inclined to agree but nevertheless is credited with doing a lot to bring attention to the Roger Sherman, although he modestly gives the credit to his Warner pictures. Personal and family illness has not slowed up this member, and his campaigns are doing much to keep the town picture conscious.

Walter Lloyd, over at the M. & P. Paramount, gets a general ace buildup from the rest of the showmen in this stand, and although he refrains from overuse of the personal pronoun, his level headed and clear thinking showmanship has done much to keep the theatre-pot boiling quite merrily. Details of his recent campaigns, as well as those of the other members in New Haven will also be carried in these pages. Walter has much worth repeating to say on showbusiness of today.

Erle Wright at the Poli, a comparative newcomer to the town, has already added his bit to the general high level of exploitation. One of his ads on "Roman Scandals" is reproduced in this issue and other things he has done will be brought to the attention of the membership. It's all good. Erle campaigned around Pittsburgh and other spots, knows where to go and how to do it.

As in Bridgeport, the boys are working together to make the town more theatre-conscious, and it was good to hear the nice things each manager had to say about the other fellow.

(Next Week—What was seen and done in Hartford, New Britain and Boston.)



Griffith Promotes Shanghai Windows

Shanghai, China, being quite a cosmopolitan city, takes quite readily to modern theatre exploitation methods, as indicated by reports from Beverly Griffith, Fox China manager, who forwards some recent instances of advertising activities.

Pictured below is a decidedly class window on the Shanghai engagement of "My Lips Betray." Note, the especially baked cake in front of the theatre card, this confection creating a lot of attention and gathering a goodly number of the curious. The rest of the display is in keeping with the atmosphere of the picture.

Quite an extensive campaign was also put on for the Shanghai showing of "Cavalcade," featured among the many angles being a large window in the leading tobacco shop advertising "Cavalcade" cigarettes, with stills from the picture used as border decoration and tastily arranged.

From such visual evidences of foreign exploitation, it is apparent that theatre men in other parts of the world are rapidly learning the ropes, turning out stuff that in many cases is on a par with picture advertising on this side.

Smart Shanghai Window

Benjii Gets Many Calls On "Mr. Skitch" Teaser

A return of over a thousand phone calls is reported by Manager Ed Benjii, Orpheum, Kenosha, Wis., on the calling-card gag he used in advance of his "Mr. Skitch" date. It was a teaser idea, the card containing only the title, the phone number of the theatre and handwritten copy as follows: "Called, and you were out. Sorry to have missed you." Ed distributed these cards to homes and in office buildings, and in answer to the many phone calls the theatre cashier announced the picture and date, also adding information about story.

Benjii also put over a nice co-op page, in which each ad included a pictorial reproduction of some prominent American scene, familiar to tourists and sightseers. Money prizes were given to those identifying the landmarks, name of merchant in whose ad each appeared, and state in which each is located.

Ed states that as a result of these two ideas business was above average on the picture and therefore he is passing these along for the information of the membership.

"Alice" Photos Help To Build Good Will

Add Harry Botwick's name to the list of smart showmen who almost automatically take advantage of every opportunity to further good will among local students. This Round Tabler, who is turning out a lot of fine campaigns for the Paramount, Rutland, Vt., after his date on "Alice in Wonderland" gathered all the stills and other photographic material on the picture and presented them to the junior and senior high schools. Harry says this material was accepted with many thanks and added to the school libraries, much valuable institutional publicity forthcoming.

The accompanying photo illustrates special side wall display on "Little Women," made up for the theatre by a well known artist spending the winter in Rutland. The background was light blue with black charcoal etching and the four heads were pencil drawings on cream paper on beaver board frames. The dates and title plaque were of beaver board, lettered in soft contrast. It was lighted with baby spots, and was reported to have attracted more attention than any display Botwick has yet used.

Incidentally, this member reports the use of an oldtime gag, the planting of 100 "snow birds" made possible by a snow storm during the run of "Alice." These were stuck into snowdrifts in various parts of the town and attracted sufficient attention to make them worthwhile.

Damen Promotes British Fan Magazine Contest

A city-wide tieup that is causing plenty of buzzing has been put over by Dillon Damen, British advertising and publicity manager for Warner Brothers, who has promoted Film Weekly, a popular London fan magazine, to run a "Choose Your Star" contest, in which nine featured Warner players are listed and readers asked to place these players in what they consider the chronological order of ability for stardom.

The winners are selected from the lists of those entrants which correspond most nearly with the correct order as decided by the total voting. To give the idea further publicity, a special trailer showing scenes in which these players appear was shown in many London and provincial theatres during the run of the contest.

The magazine also distributed heralds each week, further plugging the idea and thousands of replies are reported.

WASHINGTON ROUND TABLE PARTY FEB. 17

Ace "Get-Together" Arranged by Members in Capital Zone at Washington's Club Michel; $1.50 Per Head Covers Cost

Starting at 11:30, on Saturday night, Feb. 17, and continuing from then on, Round Tablers and their friends in the Capital City district will put on their Managers' Round Table Club "Get-Together" at the elaborate Club Michel, 14th and Thomas Circle, N. W., Washington.

A great time is promised, and a great time will be had. The various committees are working hard and fast to make this an event to be long remembered, and judging from the reservations reported, few managers in Washington, and within reaching distance, will fail to be on hand Feb. 17 to enjoy themselves and to meet their friends. The party is to be strictly "stag."

Good food, plenty of brew, headline entertainment in an atmosphere of conviviality and good fellowship—at a price within reach of all. One dollar and fifty cents is the cost per head, and immediate reservations are suggested, to be made through Round Tabler Walter Morris, Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Committees Now Working

Morris heads the arrangement committee in Washington, and Round Tabler Frank Boucher, Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, is taking care of details in Maryland and Virginia. Other prominent showmen who are lending their aid are Elmer H. Brient, Loew's Theatre, Richmond, Va.; Benjamin T. Pitts, Pitts Colonial Theatre, Fredericksburg, Va.; J. Louis Rome, Associated Theatres, Baltimore, Md., and Carl B. Sherred, Paramount Strand, Cumberland, Md.

Round Tablers Carter Barron, Loew's Fox, and Guy Wonders, Warner Washington Theatres, are handling the entertainment, and that means plenty of real big time acts to entertain the guests. Frank LaFalce, Washington Warner ad chief; Hardie Meakin, RKO Keith head, and Rodney Collier, of the Rialto, are doing the publicity.

Harry Hunter, Paramount exchange manager, is looking after the attendance from the local exchanges, thus insuring a good turnout from the film men. Harry is endeavoring to secure guest tickets for the golf addicts who will arrive early Saturday, or expect to stay over Sunday.

From every report, nothing is to be left undone to make this event outstanding. A number of prominent guests have been invited, including Messrs. J. J. Payette, Washington Theatre zone head; Stephen A. Early and Marvin H. McIntyre, the White House secretaries; A. Julian Brylawski, Washington M.P.T.O.A. president, among others.

However, the committee promises no speeches, no formality, just a good time. "Come as you are," they say, "and remember if you can't get away for the start of the party, it will run for a long time." Every manager who can possibly make it is not only urged to attend, but to make his reservation now by using the blank below.

Laurence Puts on Annual Charity Matinees

The details of his 15th annual series of toy and Christmas toy and old clothes matinee, put over in conjunction with the Red Cross, are given by Manager H. L. Laurence, Capitol, Paris, Tenn., who states that these events brought greater returns this year than ever before, the two matinees netting hundreds of packages of various kinds of food and clothing sufficient for the needs of his local charity and church cases.

"H. L." also states that his New Year's eve midnight show went over splendidly with nearly a thousand tickets sold in twenty minutes, and many hundreds turned away for lack of space. For this occasion, a stage band was imported, in addition to which a vaudeville performance was given, after which the stage was cleared and the audience invited to dance.

Although there is nothing original in the idea, it was new in this situation, and the fact that it brought the theatre plenty of valuable advertising is sufficient proof that an idea no matter how old is good if it works and it certainly did for "H. L."

WALTER MORRIS, Chairman
Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Enclosed find $..... for ..... reservations ($1.50 per head) to the Managers' Round Table Club "Get-Together" to be held at the Club Michel, 14th and Thomas Circle, N. W., Washington, D. C., on Saturday, February 17th, starting at 11:30 P. M.

SELLING PUNCH IN POSTERS

Wisconsin Theatre Artist Gives Opinions on What Can Be Done To Make Posters Sell More Tickets

by DONALD ANDORFER

Strand, Whitewater, Wis.

You may have heard it said that a poster artist in the theatre was merely a luxury. This is not true; the poster artist is today a necessity and his posters should be first, last and always a sales medium.

Donald Andorfer

Your artist can sell the show with one good illustration in place of a lot of copy. In an early article on Ballyhoo in the HERALD one manager stated that "illustrative descriptions are ideal—many verbal ones are asinine"; he has put in present day vernacular what a Chinese philosopher wrote centuries ago, i. e., "One picture is the equal of a thousand words." The poster can and will attract more attention if it is seven-eighths illustrated and one-eighth copy.

Many theatres have what might be termed a "newspaper" front. They tell one-half the story and then add superlatives and adjectives and stills by the score. Some emphasis on the picture's merit naturally makes the public dubious and doubtful of the veracity of the statements. What is more important, we are advertising to crowds who are more or less in a hurry to reach their home, work or some other destination and they will remember an attractive picture longer than a sign covered with words which they are not likely to stop and read.

Why tell them the story on our fronts? Let them come inside and see it. A rule among outdoor advertisers is to limit the message from two to 14 words and this rule should apply to theatre advertising also.

At the present time, the public is beginning to tire of musicals and the theatre that has been showing most of the musicals will do well to place emphasis on the romantic or humorous angle of the next musical that comes along. This change will give your artist an opportunity to use a different sales angle and will revive the box office receipts.

Artist Must Create Punch

The poster artist must decide on the sales punch for his display. The manager should do nothing more than send up a press sheet and a few stills and remarks on the possible local reaction to the type of picture; beyond this point, the artist should be permitted to work alone. After all, we have spent a great amount of money to learn our profession and we read books and magazines on advertising and keep in touch with all the new ideas in our game. This is our business and we should know what will and will not sell a picture.

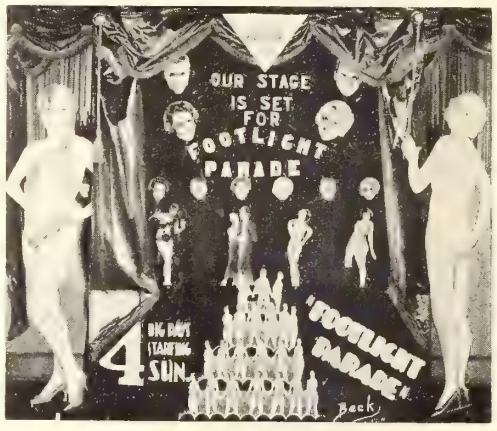
This is the first of the articles on better posters, contributed by Don Andorfer, whose excellent work has appeared frequently in the Club pages. This Round Tabler has some decided opinions on what should and should not go in a lobby display, contending that the right kind of art is necessary today to get patrons off the street and into the theatre. Theatre artists who agree or disagree with Don and would like to say something on the subject are invited to contribute their thoughts which, of course, we will be glad to publicize.

I know a theatre manager who at one time was a sign painter and when he employed a young theatre artist he insisted on his doing sign lettering and expressed his desire to have only lettered signs covered with stills. What a break for a trained poster artist! Needless to say, the fellow didn't stay on the job long.

In the northern part of this state is a theatre manager who literally "plasters" the front of his theatre with still so that the lobby is not visible through the doors! During conversations with acquaintances I had made I brought up the subject of movies and everyone I talked with said they detested going to this theatre. Most of them remarked it was like going into a sign shop. They preferred the opposition theatre, which employed a poster artist who created inviting lobbies.

Suggests Fewer Signs

At one time I attended a theatre that advertised a coming attraction with exactly ten signs each having the same copy and devoid of any design or illustration! If a coming attraction must be announced with several signs, which should never exceed four in number, let the artist vary the copy on each poster and use different illustrations; for instance, one poster might portray the star of the picture, another a forceful screen from the picture, etc. This makes for variety, which is always interesting.



So, Mr. Theatre Manager, let us use larger illustration, less copy and fewer stills. We can cut expense for you in this manner and bring in more money at the box office. The theatre that looks like a photo gallery or a sign shop must lose prestige and patronage, but the theatre with sensible, original, clever seat-selling posters will grow to bigger and better things, so let's start the year off right. Give your artist a chance to do his part in selling the show.

Manuel Creates Sock Display for 35 Cents

Coincidental or otherwise, it seems that some of the most effective animated displays received recently by the Club have been on "Footlight Parade," and the latest, by Manager Johnnie Manuel, Kenton, Kenton, Ohio, not only packs a wallop, but tops the others in regard to cost, the whole idea being put through, according to Johnnie, for the startling sum of 35 cents.

As the accompanying photo shows, the flash is in the form of a miniature stage, complete in every detail including footlights, border lights, back drop and tormentors. The 15-inch cutout figures in the center are mounted on an endless belt that moved that section of the display from one side of the stage to the other.

Of course, the photo cannot do justice to the striking arrangement or the special lighting, but the idea was good enough to keep a large crowd around it in advance of the showing and during the date.

Manuel's Fine Display

Our thoughts on the added box office strength of animated displays have often been voiced in these columns, and Manuel's flash is another confirmation of the worth of this form of advertising. Incidentally, the small sum spent was made possible through the salvaging of most of the material from other Warner theatres in this Round Tabler's zone.

Capital Showmen Put Over President's Party

Showmen in Washington got together and put over a big campaign for a benefit show at Loew's Fox in honor of President Roosevelt's birthday, the proceeds of the event going to the President's Warm Springs' fund.

Heading the arrangements committee were John J. Payette, Washington Warner Theatres' zone chief, and working with him were Hardie Meakin, RKO; Lou Browne, Loew's; Frank La Falce, Warner Bros.; Rodney Collier, Universal; Carter Barron, Loew's, and Guy Wonders, Warner Bros.

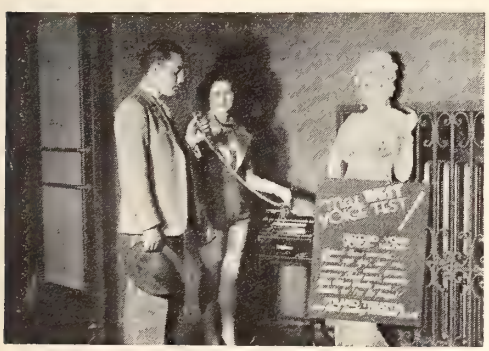
Highlights of "I'm No Angel" Prize Winner Campaigns

In the two drives put over by the Paramount contest winners it hardly seems that any possible ticket selling angle was neglected. Literally, these winners utilized hundreds of different ideas, and proved they did with tear sheets, samples of all other advertising and photographs illustrating all stunts. As it would be manifestly impossible to detail everything they did, the following will touch upon those slants which returned the biggest dividends.

Oriental, Chicago, Ill.



Bill Hollander and his staff, headed by Eddie Levin, Oriental publicity chief, started well in advance to plug the special world premiere on the night before the scheduled opening. Besides all manner of publicity breaks in all newspapers, fashion layouts and West pictures were planted in women's sections of the papers, including a full page spread of costume designs, with serialized West life story and series of West stories, written by Cary Grant, getting much space. Radio breaks were secured on prominent hours as far as three weeks in advance.

West street bally was promoted into American Legion parade, as described in a previous issue, department stores featured West gowns in windows and large ads with orginal West gown from picture displayed, and many other shops tied in in this fashion. A "Diamond Lil" ball, given by the Chicago four hundred, resulted in many breaks, pictures landing in all roto pages. Many local ballrooms put on special West parties, all ads including proper theatre mention.

Strand, Oshkosh, Wis.

Bill Hendricks put on his prize winning campaign at this theatre before moving on to the Warner, in Memphis, where he is now stationed. Actually, he lists over a hundred various things to promote the showing, and the following are some that got the most attention:

A continuous crowd gatherer was a loudspeaker behind three sheet cutout West poster, cashier with mike, plugging the picture and continuing bally frequently during the day. "West" voice test put on in lobby with dictaphone (see photo) into which patrons were invited to speak, the "come up and see me" line for prizes.

House artist worked in lobby on West poster, tying in nickname contest for tickets, and department store cooperated on West letter contest, using many ads to put it over. A traffic stopper was a girl in bed in furniture window with copy that she was resting up for the wisecracks in the picture.

Street bally with West impersonator in swank car with chauffeur handing out heralds was used, and special West night put on at leading night club advertised in newspapers. Linoleum mats were lettered and placed all over town and further bally was West girls on street carrying lettered parasols and distributing candy in imprinted bags.

Telephone chain call idea was effective with cashiers each calling five friends and asking them in turn to call five others about the picture, this tying up telephone exchange in 15 minutes. Radio show in foyer landed full page co-op ad, each plugging picture. Clever cards with theatre ad were given out at football game with copy saying, "Throw this card in the air when Oshkosh makes the first touchdown."

Girls riding bicycles, each carrying one letter of star and picture, paraded down the street, and plane was promoted to tow hundred foot theatre banner over town and surrounding country. A Hollywood premiere was put on opening night which featured a "West walk" contest on the stage.

Splendid newspaper cooperation was secured in town and in all neighboring cities, Hendricks landing much valuable free space in art and stories. He rolled up an amazing number of ace box office stunts and without doubt he, and the Oriental Theatre boys, are fully entitled to the prizes.

Warnerites Issue Ace Press Book on "Fashions of 1934"

Another one of those highly practical press books, which also manages to be very attractive, has been put out by S. Charles Einfeld, Warner advertising and publicity chief and his staff on "Fashions of 1934." Bound in a blue and black cover, which carries snappy designs selling the theme of the picture, the body of the book is composed of over 40 pages, leading off with explanation and photos of 23 stunts used on the New York campaign.

Other ideas that should sell extra tickets include fictionized serials for newspaper use, full page Sunday feature article, complete material for 10, 20 or 30 minute broadcasts, pages on pages of exploitation slants of every kind, and a special ten page insert of ads of all sizes that sell the picture from every possible angle.

There is enough material in this book to suit the demands of showmen in most any size situation, large or small.

Sell Co-op Page in Both A.M. and P.M. Papers

Working with Manager Ray Hendry, Capitol, Salt Lake City, Hal Elias, MGM exploiteer, whipped across an effective number of stunts on the showing of "Christopher Bean" in that city, one of the slants being a large compo book placed in the lobby, the pages of which were illustrated with stills and copy from the picture, and patrons invited to turn the various pages, which they did in large numbers. A co-op page that helped a lot consisted of merchants' ads which included scenes taken from different Dressler pictures with passes given to readers who turned in correct lists of the names of the pictures and the players shown. Incidentally, this was the first time a co-op page was sold in Salt Lake City which appeared in both morning and afternoon papers. That's real promotion!

ATTENTION—

Two new direct services for managers have been added to the contents of "Better Theatres," beginning with the current issue, that appears as Section Two of today's Motion Picture Herald.

One is "Maintenance Tabs," the other is titled "Electrograms," and both give the manager a lot of timely advice. Sedge Coppock, well-known Round Tabler, of the Paramount, Stapleton, N. Y., speaks on dressing up the theatre and show; and, of course, Jack Knight writes another helpful article on modern theatre operation.

There is pelnty of "meat" in these articles and new features. Don't miss them.

Jake Again Trots Out the "Upside-Down" 24 Sheet

Late reports from Waterloo, Iowa, indicate that "everything is rosy with Rosenthal," to use the well known slogan that identifies the Iowa Theatre, in that city, where Jake Rosenthal keeps the folks excited with his activities.

A recent stunt on "Little Women" was the venerable gag of posting 24 sheets upside down, and Jake says that half his town called up to report the bill poster's mistake. The rest of the campaign was along more conservative lines, imprinted photos of Hepburn being sent to all school teachers in the city and surrounding territory and indorsements by the Mayor and clergymen used as lobby blowups and in ads.

The picture was given an unusual distinction by the attendance in a body of a large group of nuns together with a prominent clergyman who brought his entire choir to see the show. Jake also registered with a neat lobby stunt, in which a group of local youngsters dressed in the garb of the four "little women" welcomed the patrons as they entered the foyer.

As a result of all these ideas, Rosenthal reports excellent business, and also sends along a shot of himself with Tom Mix, who recently appeared at the Iowa.

Bevel Stepping Fast Down in Tennessee

From Harriman, Tenn., comes a welcome report of L. W. Bevel's doings at the Princess in that situation.

Most important was the personal appearance of the former "Freckles" of the Our Gang Comedies, and Bevel, realizing the possibilities of this booking, unusual for a town the size of Harriman, went to work to get the extra business needed to make the engagement successful. Complete coverage of every town within drawing distance was accomplished, and heralds plugging the date were distributed in every situation, and from the way "L. W." is smiling as he congratulates "Freckles" (see photo) indicates that the advertising was not in vain.

Bevel and "Freckles"

Bevel put out a herald for his New Year's Eve show that—to say the least—attracted plenty of attention. In his copy he planted the words, "murder, fire and police," these tieing in with the rest of his message, in red and large caps against the other copy, printed in black and smaller. For instance, he says he is guilty of "price murder" in offering his show at "fire sale" prices, etc. The herald was six inches wide by 18 deep.

Good Will Contacts Bring Booth Extra Business

In a recent issue, we publicized the activities of Manager Billings Booth in putting over a number of profitable benefits on a percentage basis with many of his local organizations at the Jefferson, Springfield, Mass. These valuable contacts, no doubt, had much to do with the choice of the Jefferson as a meeting place for the county Parent-Teachers Association, Booth having effected many such cooperations with various P. T. A. units.

In addition, this aggressive Round Tabler was also selected to speak before the Springfield Motion Picture Council, his subject being "Production, Distribution and Bookings of Motion Pictures," this being included in a front page newspaper story, copy including mention of the fact that Billings is a charter member of the Managers' Round Table Club.

As a further result of these organization tieups, the Council selected many of the neighborhood theatres in Springfield of the Winchester Circuit, of which the Jefferson is a part, in which to show Friday and Saturday programs of endorsed pictures, this also clicking for two-column front page spread.

Word Building Contest

Among other of Booth's recent ticket selling ideas is noted a word contest which he reports very successful. It was in the form of a competition in which many tickets were awarded to those making the most words out of the name "Jefferson Theatre." The "snapper" in the idea was that the words had to be listed on a regular contest blank only given to those attending the show.

From the first week of the contest, business showed a notable increase and the idea went over so well that even the English department of the Junior High School endorsed the idea and got behind it to put it over. On the night that the prizes were awarded, the usual procedure was followed in requiring participants in the contest to be in the theatre or to hold a paid ticket for the show. Booth says that the only expense to the theatre was the cost of printing the blanks, a not too costly item.

Mexico City Goes Strong For "Gold Diggers"

A campaign that went "Broadway" in many respects was put over successfully by Filipo Mier, Warner Bros. Mexico manager, for "Gold Diggers" at the Cine Palacio, in Mexico City.

For a street ballyhoo, Mier had four girls of different nationalities, German, French, Mexican and American, parade through the main streets of the city distributing heralds and small photos of the chorus girls in the picture. The girls wore signs on their backs reading, in Spanish, "I'm one of the Gold Diggers," and the heralds were in the form of Mexican pesos. The photographs that were distributed constituted a tieup with one of the big stores in Mexico City, whereby the store paid half of the cost of the photos in return for half the space on the back which was devoted to store advertising.

Mier's "Digger" Front

The song hits were of course plugged on all radio stations and a novel contest was sponsored whereby prizes were given to listeners in for the best Spanish translation of the words of the American songs, this last bringing in hundreds of replies.

American and English residents were contacted with special mailing cards, and at the annual Foreign Club ball held a few days in advance of the opening, Mier arranged an effective pavilion with posters and stills announcing the picture, also to play the song hits for the dancing.

The accompanying photo of the front of the theatre indicates that the above campaign returned gratifying dividends and Mier is to be congratulated for whipping over this campaign in fast American tempo.

Taylor Promotes Many Windows on "Scandals"

Merchants in Buffalo are certainly well sold on the benefits of cooperative theatre window displays to judge from the number obtained by Manager C. B. Taylor, of Shea's Great Lakes Theatre, on "Roman Scandals." Eight leading music stores, including department stores selling music, broke out with flash displays, all using the ballyhoo record between recordings of the song hits.

The tieup with Cantor's radio coffee sponsors resulted in cards displayed in all stores selling this brand and in addition life size cutouts of the star were also used by the merchants. Kresge's gave the picture an entire front window, built around copy which read, "Enjoy a Roman Holiday at Kresge's, and Then See Eddie Cantor, in 'Roman Scandals', etc. and etc."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

Coming: A Fourth Year of

ACHIEVEMENT

SINCE Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was introduced early in 1931, its revolutionary qualities have fulfilled every hope and prediction of its sponsors. It has helped cameramen and producers so tremendously... it has affected the motion picture art so profoundly... it has contributed to so many cinematic triumphs, that a further prediction can now be made: In its fourth year, as heretofore, this Eastman film will be an important factor in the most conspicuous motion picture achievements. FLOATING COMFORT

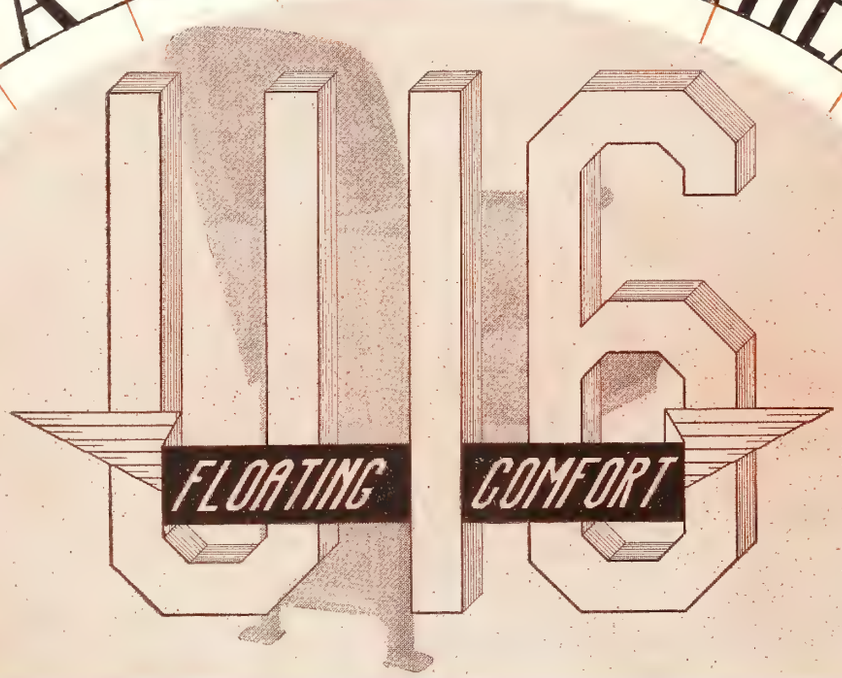
TO MY MANY FRIENDS IN THE THEATRE INDUSTRY

On December 1st, 1933, I joined the International Seat Corporation as Vice President in charge of sales, after severing a connection of sixteen years. This step was important inasmuch as the product to which I brought my experience and happy associations was comparatively new.

The nationally known chair I sold in the past was, to my belief, and still is the best in its class. But I now state, without hesitation and with sincere enthusiasm, that the U 16, with FLOATING COMFORT, marks the dawn of a new era in theatre seating. In simplicity of construction and beauty of unit design, it is as far advanced over present equipment as the "airflow" auto is over the horse and carriage.

The growth of any industry is measured by the continuous perfection of its product. Outside of the steel back panel and steel bottom board to replace veneers, which were specified and adapted by Paramount seven years ago, theatre chair design has progressed little in the past twenty years.



With the designing of the U 16 by automotive body engineers on the principles of unit construction, the theatre chair industry has jumped twenty-five years ahead of its present day product.

I would be happy to have you inspect the FLOATING COMFORT of the U 16 at my show room in the Paramount Building, or at the offices of our representatives if you were unable to attend my recent show at the Astor Hotel in New York.

Observations

¶ Further defining the new position in the industry won by the theatre manager—a position in keeping with the training and energy his responsibilities today demand—is the adoption by a number of theatre groups of a bonus plan, by which the manager shares financially in the prosperity of a theatre according to the success he brings to it.

And need it yet again be pointed out that such success does not come alone from the playing of pictures having noteworthy box office virtues, or merely from the gift of shrewdness in the arts of exploitation? In the first place, pictures are made in Hollywood, not in the manager's office, and there will always be a percentage which will require, if not defy, an inspired ingenuity in those who would exploit them. The successful manager is he who can keep the box office level from too many deep dips by selling, not only the picture, but his theatre; and who can keep the property operating effectively without waste in time and money.

Management in this sense—in today's sense—is not mere exploitation. It is fiscal and technological supervision as well. And it is this kind of management which well deserves to participate in the profits of proprietorship.

Incidentally, the bonus plan was suggested many months ago by Mr. J. T. Knight, Jr., in one of his early articles in BETTER THEATRES.

¶ Because to cool the theatre during the warm months is the most obvious recommendation of modern air conditioning, this function in theatre operation suggests itself most readily as we dare to think of spring. Yet it really is, of course, an all-year-round affair.

Today it is appreciably different from the time when summer cooling became the boast of our million-dollar theatres. And the developments in the science of air conditioning have also placed its mechanical means within reach of houses far more economically planned. Well indeed that this is so, for the public today is learning about air conditioning, for offices and homes as well as theatres—and that the better theatres have it.

The public is becoming air conditioning-conscious, as it were, because at last the research work devoted to it has developed a good-sized industry. In a recent address, Mr. H. F. Hildreth, representing Westinghouse, explained this prominence thus:

"First, it should be remembered that literally millions of dollars have been expended in the necessary research work to uncover the facts and principles of the subject.

"Second, because of the fact that at last somebody is actually doing something about the weather, naturally everyone would talk about it, write about it, cuss it, discuss it and what not! I think I might say with perfect safety that few subjects in our memory have had the publicity, good and otherwise, that air conditioning has.

For identification of writers and editorial notes on articles in Better Theatres refer to Among Contributors to This Issue, on page 32.

"Third, the demand is here, the market is ready, and with proper engineering and applications, air conditioning just cannot be kept in the background."

Mr. Hildreth further declared that the engineering principles and facts of air conditioning now are "as nearly accurate as is humanly possible."

"In a large sense," he said, "the publicity given has been entirely justified, and we can now safely say that air conditioning has reached the stage where it can be considered as a self-liquidating investment."

¶ The name of Dr. A. N. Goldsmith has been suggested among those worthy of representing the theatre in the motion picture Code organization. He is certainly all of that. An engineer of international affiliations, widely experienced as an organizer, energetic in all his activities, he has also demonstrated a deep, constructive sympathy in the affairs of the motion picture theatre since the presidency of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers added these to his many interests.

He has sought for example, to make the Society more intimately useful to the motion picture industry, to carry its activities to the rank and file. He has attended every meeting of the Practical Projection Committee. The theatre's daily job he judges not too small for the technologist's pains. And this very attitude suggests that he would bring to the Code deliberations not only a proper knowledge of the theatre, but full appreciation of those who do the theatre's work.—G. S.

DRESSING UP YOUR THEATRE AND SHOW

By EDWIN SEDGWICK CHITTENDEN COPPOCK

Declaring what your patrons want is change—and offering some inexpensive ways of giving this to them

DID YOU ever have an expensive hat or suit which you wore a great deal, but soon found yourself tired of, although it was still serviceable? Sure you did. So have all of us, and so do we come to feel about other things. And that's how your patrons feel about your theatre. A woman puts a new bit of trimming on an old hat, and she is proud of herself and quite as pleased with her appearance as if the hat were new. Why can't we do the same thing to our theatres?

It is extremely simple to perk up the house a bit to relieve the stereotyped impressions your patron gets as he sits in the auditorium of your theatre watching a show. After all, your policy probably consists in an almost constant repetition of the same type of show—feature picture, newsreel, comedy, cartoon, etc., and yet you undoubtedly realize that variety and change and novelty amounts to the essence of this business. I am convinced that false economy practiced at the sacrifice of the creation of different atmospheres for the presentation of a show, is costly and will have a telling effect upon gross business, all other things being equal.

If you are married, I'll wager anything that you have barked your shins on a chair that happened to be in a different place, simply because your wife got tired of seeing the furniture in the usual order and shifted the layout of the room. She wanted a change. We all need change, and certainly the common meeting place of the people, your theatre, should reflect the necessity of change.

SMALL REPAIRS OF BIG EFFECT

IN THE paragraphs below I offer some simple ideas for freshening the appearance of your house at a minimum cost, plus a few thoughts on a new use for existing idle equipment in your theatre.

BOX OFFICE

The first point of impression is the box office. Why not have a second set of draperies of inexpensive material for use in summer. Are the walls of the box office clean, or are they covered with scribbled telephone numbers? Fifty cents worth of paint and a porter's time can very simply solve this problem.

How about the ticket chopper? Every patron entering the theatre walks past the chopper and cannot help but glance at it. If it is painted, why not change the color scheme occasionally with ten-cent store lacquer?

STAIRCASE

The lobby probably does present a changing appearance because of the difference in posters and the positions of easels. But how about the grand staircase just off the lobby going to the balcony? It is a safe bet that the carpet on the leading edge of the steps is worn. It is a very simple trick to loosen the carpet on the entire stairway, and push it down 4 or 5 inches, thus putting a new surface of carpet on the tread of the steps and hiding the worn spots. This little plan has probably been used before, and I am sure you will agree with me that while not as effective as new carpet, of course, it creates a decided improvement.

HANDRAILS

The handrails naturally become worn by constant use. If they are finished with varnish, it is simple enough to sandpaper them and put a little varnish on. If you like to putter around the place yourself, why not try it sometime? (The exercise won't do you a bit of harm!) Otherwise have an usher who takes pride in the appearance of the theatre in which he works, do the job. If the handrails are painted you have a little different problem. I have found that two coats of good lacquer, covered by another coat of clear lacquer, gives a serviceable wear-resisting finish.

LOBBY WALLS

Possibly the walls beside the stairs are covered with finger prints. Try removing them with a weak solution of Ivory soap and water. In places where the wall is chipped or scratched, temporary touching-up can be done with a bit of water color. Even show card colors from your poster artist will do the trick.

IMPROVEMENTS THAT COST LITTLE

IF YOU HAVE read this far in this article, you probably have one of two impressions. First, you may have decided by now that this discussion is lot of old-maidish nonsense, or it may have served to remind you that patrons, who make the existence of the theatre possible, would have their pleasure enhanced if they were not annoyed with things in the appearance of theatres that they would not tolerate in their homes.

Some people, of course, criticize modern theatres and say that they are over-decorated and in bad taste, but you and I know that over-decoration is deliberate because motion picture theatres in general are supported by the "masses" and not by the "classes." The bulk of the people that make up your audience possibly are tired of the drab appearance of their own homes. They are seeking color, illusion, splendor and glamour, and the least expensive way that they can find it is through a visit to your theatre. Certainly that should be sufficient reason for making a conscientious effort to maintain the appearance of the house, and in maintaining that appearance, to effect enough changes so that people seeking relief from drabness will not be treated to a similar monotony, in both the appearance of the theatre and the stereotyped character of the show when they come to your playhouse

FURNISHINGS

Why not shift the furniture around a bit? Move the furniture from the balcony foyer downstairs to the orchestra floor. Shift things around in the lounge. Put new ash trays in the women's lounge, and make a slight change in the lamping of the chandeliers. All of these things cost practically nothing but a little effort, and the resultant effect will be sufficient reward for a little back-bending.

If the walls of the men's and women's lavatories are not of tile, but are painted, it is extremely simple to achieve new effects by repainting these walls and possibly by trimming them with a simple stencil design that you can get for 25c in any progressive paint store.

AUDITORIUM FLOOR

The other day I happened to be checking loose seats in the theatre and noticed that the concrete floor, which had been painted some two years ago, was becoming a bit shabby. Truthfully, we were not in a position to repaint the entire floor at that time, but we were able to paint a strip of floor on each aisle in the width of two seats. The change in the appearance certainly justified this expenditure. If an usher is seating with a flashlight, the patron naturally looks at the floor to avoid stumbling. Your carpet, of course, is clean, but when the patron turns into the aisle to be seated, the contrast between a clean carpet and a shabby floor isn't any box office help. Cement paints have been developed that will dry over night.

ADDING INTEREST TO THE SHOW

I PERSONALLY believe that the greatest possibilities for the relief of sameness about your theatre is in the presentation of the program itself. Those houses that are fortunate enough to be equipped with a Brenograph (Brenkert effects projector) have almost unlimited possibilities to color up a program, but the theatres that are not so equipped are in the majority.

For those theatres which have effect projectors, almost unlimited change is possible. Instead of just putting a background design on the screen, why not occasionally divert the beam with the mirrors on the front of the lamp and put a design on the sides of the proscenium arch or on the organ grilles or ventilator grilles at the sides of the front of the auditorium?

SHORT SUBJECTS

If your stage happens to be equipped with a light colored traveler curtain, pillars of solid color or any simple design will become effective in adding atmosphere to a short subject. Pages and pages could be written suggesting stunts to do with the Brenograph, but I believe that the houses that need dressing up in the atmospheric presentations of their programs (because they are apt to lack it now) are those that are not equipped with an effects projector. Any theatre that has two old incandescent spotlamps, whether they be from the stage or permanently mounted on the balcony rail, can achieve remarkable effects for the ornamentation of the show.

Regular sciopticon condensers and objective lenses for these spotlights to convert them into stereopticons, are expensive. Any High school student with a rudimentary knowledge of optics can plan for you a sciopticon mounting for these spotlights. Possibly a discussion of the arrangement in our theatre will be sufficient for you to see a way to make a similar device.

A sheet-iron tube about 30 inches in length, was fitted on the front of the spotlights, with a slit near the back where a slide or metal stencil could be placed. An objective lens was fitted into the far end of the tube. The tube itself was made of two sections that telescoped so that the distance from the back of the tube to the objective lens could be changed. Obviously such construction is necessary in order to focus for a sharply projected image. We were able to equip completely two 1,000-watt spotlamps with these mountings for $6 each. Now for the use of these sciopticons.

APPLYING PROJECTORS

Mount them on the balcony rail where they are out of sight, and where you probably already have an electric outlet. Any poster shop with a cut-awl can cut out a simple design from shim brass, thus giving you a stencil that can be slipped into the slot at the rear of the lens tube. To color the effect, of course, a sheet of gelatine may be slipped in next to the stencil. A simple design that we have effectively used for the presentation of the newsreel consists merely in closing the traveler curtain to the sides of the screen, using a shim brass stencil of a cameraman and camera projected on the traveler curtain for the entire newsreel.

To create further atmospheric effect, proscenium strip lights, or a hanging spot from the grid, or another spot from the balcony rail, covered this section of the traveler with a background color of blue, while a piece of amber gelatine was placed over the stencil of the cameraman. If you carry out this idea, I am sure you will be agreeably surprised at the pleasant effect created, and the touch of color that is added to the drabness of a black-and-white screen show.

If the mechanical description above hasn't been sufficient for you to picture in your mind the construction of this type of sciopticon, I am sure you will understand the plan quite clearly if you will merely look at the construction of any simple stereopticon of the type used in schools for the projection of educational slides. Naturally, the focal length of the lens used is dependent on the distance of throw and the size of image you desire. Single stereopticon lenses cost only a few cents and are exchangeable. In using these sciopticons for six months, we have built up a library of brass stencils of the following designs: cameraman, triangles, moon and stars, dogs, horseheads, campfire, bathing girl, golfer, diamonds, baseball played with bat, cowboy, etc. Hundreds of other designs will suggest themselves to you. The flexibility feature of such apparatus is itself extremely valuable, as to the place upon which the image may be projected, the size of the image, its color from the use of gelatine, and its low-cost construction.

The public is definitely color-conscious. Automobiles used to be sold on their mechanical perfection, but today the color of their bodies is an important factor. Fountain pens are colored, glassware is colored, there is color everywhere, and why shouldn't people coming to your theatre to release themselves temporarily from a drab existence, also enjoy color?

SEASONAL SETTINGS

Another simple little stunt to add atmosphere and color to a film presentation is possible if your stage is quite wide and there is an unused space on the apron at each side of the screen. By placing a baby spotlight in the foots, and hanging another spot out of sight directly overhead, miniature seasonal settings can be simply lighted. Why not borrow fountains from the local florist? How about a simple harvest scene

MAINTENANCE OF THEATRE MACHINERY

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

The care electrical and mechanical equipment needs to continue working efficiently—the tenth article of a series

ANY DISCUSSION of mechanical and electric maintenance must of necessity emphasize the three words, lubrication, cleanliness and adjustment. Practically, these three words cover the entire problem.

Full appreciation of the technical significance of lubrication, cleanliness and adjustment by the manager, and the conscientious effort on the part of the engineer or theatre handy-man to put them into practice, will save money and the inconvenience of sudden breakdowns.

Lubrication is certainly the most important element in mechanical maintenance. Poor and insufficient lubrication will result in ineffective and costly operation even of the finest equipment. The old saying, "It's not the first cost but the upkeep," must have been the reaction of a man who did not appreciate the importance of proper lubrication.

The purpose of oil as a lubricant is to keep sliding or rotating surfaces apart. The oil forms a film between the two metal parts, which minimizes wear and reduces friction, thereby eliminating the excessive heating of the metal parts. Under the microscope, the smoothest bearing surfaces of a well-built machine is made up of ridges, hills and valleys. A cross-section of this same surface will appear as a saw-tooth edge. When two such surfaces are rubbed together, or one rotated upon the other, the high spots tend to wear down. Continuing this action at even nominal speeds will soon develop excessive heat. In the incident of axles, the heat expands the metals causing the axle and the bearing to stick, commonly referred to as "freezing."

SELECTION OF PROPER LUBRICANT

WATER, GREASE, oil, graphite or soapstone might be used to lubricate these two surfaces. The action of a lubricant is to fill up the valleys and to form a film between the two surfaces. Until such lubricants are "broken down," or are lost by leakage to the point where the high spots of the metal come in contact again, the process of lubrication might be said to have been accomplished. From this discussion it follows that one of the primary qualities of a lubricant is the keeping of a film between moving parts.

HEAVY PARTS

In cases of heavy moving parts, the pressure tends to increase the rate of breakdown of the lubricant. Hence the film strength or the resistance to breakdown is one of the qualities to consider in selecting a proper lubricant. The necessity of having this quality eliminates water from being considered a good and satisfactory lubricant.

VISCOSITY

Possibly the next most important quality of a good lubricant is that it must not run out from between the bearing surfaces. This depends to a great extent upon the viscosity of the oil or grease, and the effect that heat has upon the viscosity. The viscosity of any fluid is the resistance offered by the fluid to the flowing motion of its particles. A liquid that flows as easily as water is said to have a low viscosity, whereas one that flows like thick molasses has a high viscosity.

If reducing the wear between two surfaces with the smallest amount of lubricant is all that is necessary, it follows that it only would be necessary to use the thickest oil or grease possible. But heavy oils and greases do not necessarily greatly reduce friction. Therefore a medium must be arrived at in selecting a proper lubricant for a particular part of a machine. The proper oil will reduce friction and wear to a minimum, should not run out of the bearing too freely and should not break down rapidly.

EFFECT OF TEMPERATURE

Attention is especially directed to the fact that temperature is a very great influence on viscosity. It is for this reason that lighter oil (lower viscosity) is used in motor cars in winter than in summer. It follows that the oil used in motors or ventilating fans or pumps so located that they are affected by the seasonal change of temperature, should be lubricated with lighter oils and greases in winter than in summer. Specifically, a fan and motor located in a penthouse on the roof is subjected to the freezing temperatures of winter. The motor may not be able to carry the starting load if a heavy body oil is used. However, in warm weather this same fan and motor is subjected to the highest temperature. At such times the heavier oil will prove most satisfactory.

This briefly and very generally covers the subject of those qualities necessary to keep in mind when selecting a proper lubricating oil. Cheap or reclaimed oils should not be used, they are very expensive in the long run. It is recommended to use the oil and grease products of a reputable producer or refiner. Most of the larger oil companies have on their staffs lubricating engineers who will visit theatres and advise on proper grades of oils for each particular job. This service is rendered without charge. Also, the manufacturers of equipment are always glad to give advice as to the proper oils and greases to be used on their machines.

CLEANING THE EQUIPMENT

CLEANLINESS of mechanical and electrical equipment is second in importance to lubrication and is of much more importance in reducing wear and increasing prolonged life and performance than generally realized by some managers. Dust may be removed from motors, generators and fans best by the use of an electric blower. These blowers are especially designed with a long rubber nozzle for getting air pressure into places that are difficult to reach in any other way. Such blowers are comparatively inexpensive and should be in every theatre.

REMOVING GREASE

Thick grease or thick and hardened oil can be removed by using kerosene or gasoline. Metal bearings of bronze or babbitt should be cleaned from time to time. When these bearings are cleaned certain grooves will be noted. These are oil grooves and should be carefully cleaned so that they won't be clogged with sediment or dust that has worked its way into the oil. These oil grooves are for the purpose of permitting a free passage for the oil when accelerated by the rotary motion of the axle, and the oil from these grooves feeds in between the bearing surfaces. Such grooves also assist in retaining the oil in the bearing and retards the loss of oil through leakage. On some machines there are definite rings or packing provided to protect against the loss of oil through leakage.

On other types of machines the bearings are fed oil by oil rings which obtain their oil from an oil bath or oil well through which the ring passes. In this type of bearing it is essential that the lubricating oil in the well be kept at the proper height, otherwise the bearing will not receive the necessary amount of oil.

Glass oil cups and grease cups are provided on many types of machines. These should be kept filled and properly adjusted at all times for protection against dry bearings. Most bearing boxes and bearing oil wells are provided with dust caps or covers for the purpose of keeping dust from getting into the wells or bearing boxes. It has often been noted that such covers have been removed or lost, and replacement of these covers is necessary; often satisfactory substitutes can be made right in the theatre.

ADJUSTING THE EQUIPMENT

ALL EQUIPMENT should be kept in proper adjustment. An improper adjustment of the parts of a machine has a direct effect upon the rate of wear on the various parts and the performance of the machine as a unit. Loose bolts and nuts, belts too long or too short, foundation bolts loose, or worn bearings, all should be taken care of just as soon as discovered. Delays in all matters of adjustment in the parts of a machine always indicate excessive wear and strain, which in turn mean large expenditures for maintenance and repairs.

USE OF FUSES

With particular reference to all electrical equipment, protection against overload is provided for by fuses. A great responsibility rests upon the manager and the electrician to see to it that circuits and equipment are not over-fused. Over-fusing jeopardizes the equipment; it is liable to become damaged before the excessively large fuse link would melt, thereby breaking the circuit.

The cheapest and most usual circuit breaking device is the fuse. All fuses consist of a link or wire of fusible metal encased in a cartridge or plug, usually referred to as cartridge or plug fuses, depending upon the form. The fuse link is most generally of lead-zinc or tin alloy. All fuses are installed in the electric circuit to be protected in series.

All fuses are in some way plainly marked with their predetermined, safe carrying load. When a burned out, or "blown" fuse, is removed, replace it with a fuse of the same rated capacity. When more than the rated load passes through the fuse, there is heat enough generated at the fuse link to melt it, thereby breaking the circuit, resulting in saving the equipment from damage due to over-heating.

CIRCUIT BREAKERS

The general practice of all fuse manufacturers, except in certain exceptions, and usually indicated on the fuse label, is to design their fuses to take a 10% overload for an indefinite period. All fuses should "blow" when overloaded 25%. There are other devices for protecting electric circuits and the connected equipment, known as circuit breakers. Most types of circuit

VENTILATING FAN (replying to J. M. O.): Your theatre with 209 seats should have installed a fan capable of delivering 5,225 cubic feet of air per minute. This is figured at the rate of 25 cubic feet of air per seat per minute. The cubic content of your theatres is 58 X 23 X 12, or 16,008 cubic feet. This means that with a fan delivering 5,225 cubic feet per minute you should get a complete air change every 3½ minutes.

We recommend a forward curved multivane fan, which operates at a low peripheral speed, combined with large capacity and quietness while in operation. It is also recommended that the fan be directly connected to the driving motor. Delivery of air at the point in your theatre indicated on the sketch should be satisfactory. A pressure will be built up in the auditorium, and air will be forced out of the entrance doors.

Some consideration must be given to the installation of directional louvres at the point where the air enters the auditorium. These are necessary so that proper distribution of air may be had and each person will get his share.

Write to any of the standard ventilating fan manufacturing companies and give them the following data and ask for their prices and terms on the equipment. We are sure that you can install it with local labor. Tell them:

1. Cubic feet of air per minute required.
2. Static pressure required (about 1 inch would be sufficient for you).
3. Type of motive power available.
4. Noise must be at a minimum, because blower must be installed within ..... feet of delivery point of air into auditorium and will only have approximately ..... feet of duct run.
5. As the whole installation must be as inexpensive as possible, a constant-speed motor is desirable.

In the construction of the ducts, keep them large; if they are to be made of sheet metal, line them with some sound absorbing material.

YOUR QUESTIONS: These pithy paragraphs, presented under the title, "Maintenance Tabs," will henceforth be a regular feature of Better Theatres, prepared by J. T. Knight, Jr., to supplement his more comprehensive discussions of theatre operating problems. The purpose of "Maintenance Tabs" is to give the theatre owner and manager authoritative practical service in the daily operation and maintenance of their properties. Your questions are therefore invited. They will be promptly answered in these columns with identification only by means of initials. In addition to answers to inquiries, "Maintenance Tabs" will offer advice on operating and maintenance topics selected by Mr. Knight.

CLEANING FLUES: All boilers are provided with flue cleaning openings through which the heating surface can be reached by means of brushes or scrapers. The flues of coal burning boilers should be cleaned once each week to keep the surface free from soot or ash. Oil-burning boiler flues should be examined frequently to determine when cleaning is necessary.

CRYSTAL FIXTURES: The crystals on lighting fixtures are best cleaned by dusting with a soft air blast from an air hose, or brushed with a soft painter's duster; then apply alcohol with a soft camel's hair brush. Finally polish each crystal with a soft rag or a dry camel's hair brush.

THERMOMETERS: Dial type thermometers which operate on the principle of different coefficients of expansion of two metals riveted together and coiled similar to the main spring of a watch, are not good for use in theatres. The length of time during which they give accurate reading is usually very short.

A 985-SEAT THEATRE THAT COST $40,000

● Illustrated here is a new theatre with a capacity of 985 on a single floor, built at a cost of approximately $40,000. The theatre is located in Brockton, Mass., and was recently opened under the name Modern. A modern design, effected through the use of modern materials and patterns, characterizes the architecture and plan. The architects were Eisenberg & Feer of Boston. The Modern is a single-floor house in a building measuring 62 x 132 feet, with a lobby entering at right angles, measuring 25 x 65 feet. The building is of brick, erected around a steel frame, with the roof framed in steel bowstring trusses and a steel and concrete roof deck. The roof is insulated with ¾-inch "Insulite" board over which is a five-ply built-up roof. All interior partitions are of gypsum and cinder block reinforced with steel. The front of the building is faced with artificial limestone, with a granite base, and is trimmed with porcelain metal. The plan includes lounges of simple modern design and furnishings. The auditorium has Celotex wall surfaces, on which modernistic patterns are stenciled. Of the total cost, $27,500 represents the structure, and $9,500 the equipment. The shell of the building cost $16,000, $3,500 went for heating and ventilating, $1,200 for decorating, and $1,600 for lighting and wiring.

RECENT DECISIONS IN THEATRE CASES

By LEO T. PARKER

Recounting and analyzing for the theatre owner and manager a variety of late litigations decided by the higher courts

DISCUSSION HAS frequently arisen with respect to the right of a theatre owner to restrict the lower floor of the theatre exclusively for one classification of persons, such as the white race. A careful review of the leading higher court cases discloses that the courts have consistently held that a place of public amusement is a private business which is not governed by rules governing common carriers or other kind of business affected with a public duty. Therefore, in the absence of state laws or regulations, the proprietors are not, as in the case of common carriers, obligated to admit anyone who may apply and be willing to pay for a ticket, but may admit or exclude persons at their pleasure. Moreover, if anyone applies at the ticket office of a theatre and desires to purchase tickets of admission and is refused, he has no right of suit against the proprietor of a theatre for such refusal.

Also, it is important to know that in the absence of a statutory regulation, a theatre proprietor may make such rules and regulations for the conduct of the business as he sees fit, and he may segregate or exclude persons of all classes or races and admit only whomsoever he desires. In other words, a ticket of admission to a theatre in the absence of a statute requirement is a mere license and revocable at the will of the proprietor.

When the right of revocation has been exercised, if a ticket holder attempts to enter, or if, after having entered, he refuses to leave, he becomes a trespasser. He may be prevented from entering or may be removed after having entered, with such force as is necessary for the purpose, and it makes no difference whether the ticket is one for general admission or for particular seats in a designated portion of the house. Where, however, a ticket is sold to a purchaser, whether white or colored, and the theatre proprietor refused to permit the purchaser to occupy the seat or portion of the house called for by the ticket, no more force can be legally used than is necessary to prevent the purchaser from entering or occupying the seat or the portion of the house called for by the ticket. Therefore, the purchaser is not subjected to abusive or insulting or offensive language, or otherwise by improper treatment, else the theatre owner may be liable in damages.

However, as above stated, in the absence of statutory regulation a theatre owner is not liable in damages for failure to refuse a patron, who has purchased a ticket, to enter the theatre providing the value of the ticket is refunded to the purchaser and he is refused admission to the theatre, or ejected therefrom with the least amount of force necessary under the circumstances.

CASE

For example, in the latest higher court case involving this point of the law, De La Ysla v. Publix Theatres Corporation (26 P. [2d] 818, Salt Lake City, Utah), it was disclosed that four Filipinos purchased four tickets to the Victory theatre and paid $1.40 therefor. The Filipinos presented the tickets to the usher and as they were about to enter the lower floor called for by the tickets, the head usher halted them and showed them to the balcony, to which the Filipinos objected and demanded an explanation. The head usher stated, "It is the rule of the house that we are not allowed to seat you Filipinos on the lower floor by reason of your race and color."

The Filipinos filed suit against the theatre owner and asked the court to grant a judgment of $4,000 damages as a result of such racial discrimination in the presence of many persons at the theatre at the time. The Filipinos contended that they were entitled to a judgment for damages because they were put to "shame, great embarrassment, mortification, ridiculed and humiliated thus causing them great disgrace, mental sufferings and humiliations of their personal dignities."

It is interesting to observe that the lower court refused to hold the theatre owner liable and dismissed the suit. The Filipinos appealed to the higher court which stated the following important law:

DECISION

"Their only remedy is for breach of contract, and the measure of their damages the amount paid for the tickets and other legal and pecuniary damages sustained by them as a direct and proximate result of the breach; but, in such cases, no recovery may be had for compensatory or punitive damages for disappointment suffered by reason of having been denied admission or for humiliation or mental suffering and the like. . . . Considering the case from the viewpoint, as we do, that the only legal damages for the alleged breach of the contract stated in the complaint was the purchase price paid for the tickets, and regarding all other alleged elements of damage as irrelevent and for which, under the allegations of the complaint, no recovery on the alleged breach of contract can be had, how stands the case?"

CASE

Also, in another higher court case, Taylor v. Cohn (47 Or. 538), it was shown that a negro purchased tickets to a theatre to occupy boxes. On presenting themselves and the tickets they were informed that "it is a rule of this house not to allow negroes to occupy boxes and you will have to exchange your tickets."

The negroes refused to exchange the tickets and were thereupon requested by the theatre owner to leave the theatre. The purchaser of the tickets filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages alleging that he was greatly disappointed, disturbed in mind, and humiliated, etc. Since no statute regulated the operation of theatres in this respect the higher court held the theatre owner not liable, and quoted the law as follows:

DECISION

"The case as presented by the plaintiff has not a single tortious feature. He had purchased tickets, calling on their face for seats which he insisted on having, and it was the duty of the defendant to give them to him; but his failure to perform that duty was simply a failure to perform his contract with the holders of the tickets, and for such failure the remedy, as in any other simple breach of contract, is in assumpsit for damages for the breach. . . . The proprietor of a theatre is a private individual, engaged in a strictly private business, which, though for the entertainment of the public, is always limited to those whom he may agree to admit to it. . . . When he sells a ticket, he creates contractual relations with the holder of it, and whatever duties on his part grow out of these relations he is bound to perform, or respond in damages for the breach of his contract, if it is of that only that complaint can be made."

Said the Oregon court further:

"It is clear, therefore, that plaintiff cannot maintain an action in tort against the defendant (theatre owner) to recover damages for the wrongful refusal to permit him to occupy the seats purchased, nor for the humiliation or inconvenience attending such refusal."

On the other hand, it is well to observe that some states have enacted statutes which prohibit theatre owners, and other owners of public places of business, from refusing to admit any patron on account of his race, creed or color. Under these circumstances a theatre owner may refuse admission to any one who violates any rule which he may have adopted, such as refusing admission to all persons who are intoxicated or unclean (158 N. Y. S. 867); improperly dressed (78 N. Y. S. 1109); mixed party as a colored person and a white person (103 Misc. Rep. [N. Y.]). Moreover, the theatre owner is not liable where an ordinary employe refuses admission to a patron because of his color, and the evidence indicates that the proprietor did not authorize the employe to do so (142 N. Y. S. 515).

MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

IN MY ARTICLE in the January 13th issue, I referred generally to the fact that a wilful or negligent act committed by the employe of a theatre operator in the line of his duty, which resulted in injury or humiliation to a patron, would generally make the operator liable to the patron. That statement applies to all the employes of a theatre operator alike, with but one possible exception. The one limited exception to this rule is a special police officer.

A number of theatres, especially those located in large towns and cities, make it a practice to employ special police officers or constables to maintain order on the premises. Generally such an officer is appointed by local authorities and is authorized by them to exercise the duties of a peace officer, being paid, however, by the individual employing him.

Let us now assume that John Jones is employed as a special officer at a theatre. His duties are to maintain order, restrain boisterous patrons and generally to guard his employer's property. While engaged in his duties at the theatre he hears an argument taking place at the box office and finds that a patron who has bought an admission, is protesting to the cashier that he has not received his correct change. Jones intervenes in the quarrel, and failing to placate the patron, loses his patience and bodily ejects the patron, inflicting serious injuries upon him. The customer sues the theatre operator for assault and recovers a verdict.

For the benefit of those who think that a special policeman is a privileged character, let me explain that the verdict in the above case is completely justified by law. To quote a leading case, "The weight of modern opinion is that where private persons, with the consent of the state, employ its police officers to represent them, and to do special work for them in protecting and preserving their property and maintaining order on the premises, and such officers are engaged in the performance of their duties to their employers and are acting within the scope of their powers and duties, they become and are the servants and employes of such private persons, and for negligent and wanton acts committed by them in the line of their duty, and when engaged in the performance of such duties, to the injury of others, their masters or employers are liable."

By this statement it must not be understood that the employer of a special police officer is liable for all the acts committed by him. The decisions hold generally that a special officer acts sometimes as a public officer and sometimes as the servant of the person employing him.

As a public officer, such a special policeman bears the duty of preserving the public peace and arresting offenders.

As the servant of the person employing him, his duty is to protect his employer's property and to maintain order upon the premises and to carry out the work assigned to him by his employer.

For any wanton or negligent injury to a third person, committed by the officer, while so engaged in his master's business, his employer is liable.

However, insofar as the officer acts as a public servant, charged with the duty of maintaining law and order, such as arresting a person for disorderly conduct, he does not act as his employer's servant. For injuries to a third person, while so officially engaged, his employer is not liable.

In any given case, the question whether the doer of the act complained of, was, at the time acting in his official capacity or within the scope of his employment as a servant is sometimes hard to determine. Ordinarily the question is left for the jury to decide.

Theatre operators employing special police officers, should drive home to them the very important fact, that up to the point where they are forced to make an arrest of a patron, they must forget that they wear shields and uniforms—or risk their employer's money and their jobs.

LANDLORD RETAINS $17,500 DEPOSIT

A LANDLORD is entitled to recover damages and take possession of theatre premises, where the tenant fails to pay rent in accordance with the lease contract. Also, under certain circumstances, the landlord may be entitled to retain in his possession any amount of money which the tenant places on deposit for the purpose of guaranteeing payment of rent, or if such deposit is made in view of the good will of the theatre business previously established by the landlord.

CASE

For illustration, in Burns & Schaeffer Amusement Company v. Conover (168 Atl. 304, Red Bank, N. J.), it was disclosed that the owner of a theatre building entered into a lease with a theatre operator as tenant at a rental of $10,000 a year for a term of ten years. By the terms of the lease the theatre operator agreed to keep the interior of the premises in good and proper repair, not to make any alterations without the written approval and consent of the landlord, and that it would "use the premises demised herein only for the moving picture or theatre business during the duration of this lease." There were also these clauses: ". . . . The party of the second part (theatre operator) agrees to pay, and does hereby pay, at the making of these presents, the sum of Twenty Thousand Dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, in consideration of the good will of the party of the first part (landlord) and as a guarantee for the prompt payment of said rent. . . ."

After the theatre operator had operated the theatre for a period of time he failed to pay the rent in accordance with the lease contract. The landlord took possession of the theatre building and retained the $20,000 deposit.

The theatre operator filed suit to recover the $20,000. The landlord refused to refund the deposit contending that $2,500 was due for rent and that he had been required to expend considerable money in restoring the premises because of the tenant's violation of its obligation

MAYFAIR LANE: A THEATRE'S UNIQUE CAFE

Above is a view of the theatre entrance and the sidewalk cafe adjoining, just inside of which is located the unique lounge called Mayfair Lane, which, in the other picture on this page, is shown as it frequently functions, as the scene of parties.

A SIDEWALK CAFE and a tropical lounge are now established features of the Mayfair theatre in Miami, Fla. Gay umbrellas in many colored stripes provide comfortable shade over bright orange-and-black wrought-iron tables and chairs which line the parkway in front of the theatre. As many as 25 guests can be accommodated while waiting for friends, and before and after a performance. All this is quite unique, of course, and very successful, as we shall see.

Mayfair Lane, the tropical lounge, which is reached from the lobby, was introduced about a year ago. As many as 100 persons may be served at a time in this lounge. Hot or iced tea and coffee is available at all hours. The management declares that fully 30 per cent of the patrons stop in the lounge for refreshments. A hostess is in attendance at all times, and colored maids in neat uniforms serve from a kitchenette.

One of the special attractions offered by the theatre is a place where individuals or clubs may entertain. A woman may want to entertain a group of friends at bridge, to be followed by a "movie." She may have the use of the lounge for the afternoon or evening at absolutely no cost. Playing cards, tallies, and pencils are furnished by the management if she does not bring her own, and hot or cold refreshments are served at such time as she may call for them. At the close of the game she ushers her guests into the theatre. On the way out they stop for another cup of tea. If this hostess wants to add sandwiches or cake to the tea, then she is privileged to bring them with her, and the maids will serve whatever she provides. Or if she prefers, the theatre hostess will arrange for a caterer to furnish light refreshments. All that this costs the one entertaining, aside from extra refreshments, is a ticket for each of her guests. This service is proving popular with clubs, and many of them are taking advantage of such an easy and unique way of entertaining.

Off this lounge, is a small patio where several tables have been placed and which offers a more secluded spot for those who prefer more privacy.

Notices of parties in Mayfair Lane, with the names of guests, are given the society editors of local papers, and of course this helps to advertise the Mayfair theatre. Conversely, Miami merchants gladly supply the tea, coffee, sugar, cream and wafers for the advertising given them by a dignified credit line on a wall poster.

The Mayfair is not a large theatre—it seats only 400—but it is one of the most successful of the Wometco group, and a measure of its popularity is attributed to its Mayfair Lane and Sidewalk Cafe. To let the manager of the Mayfair himself—Mr. Sonny Shepheard—report on this unique service and how it works:

"Upon entering the theatre patrons are ushered through this lounge, and the hostess and the maid are there to take care of any patrons desiring to wait for friends, or to wait until the feature is over or to play a rubber of bridge.

"The hostess encourages attendance at the matinee by getting people to play bridge. She phones people and arranges parties for them. The only cost to the theatre is the salary paid the hostess and the maid."

WHY UP-TO-DATE SOUND EQUIPMENT?

By KENDALL CLOUGH

An examination of human hearing in relation to recent advancements in the art of motion picture reproduction

RECENT CONVERSATIONS with a considerable number of exhibitors and projectionists indicate a wide diversity of knowledge and opinion as to the technique of sound reproduction in the theatre. There seems to be no such difference of opinion, however, on the fact that good sound is a considerable factor in determining the receipts at the box office. Because this is true, it is to the interest of the exhibitor and projectionist alike to appreciate the factors that contribute to good sound, according to standards today, in the theatre, as well as the faults that cause sound of poor quality. Some of the considerations here discussed may have been brought to the attention of exhibitors and projectionists previously, but the whole subject is important enough to bear such repetitions as are necessary, especially in the light of conditions today.

The early Greeks determined that sound was the result of vibrations in the air and that the rate of the vibration determined the pitch of the tone. It is highly improbable, however, that these physical considerations had any great part in the development of the musical scale as we know it today. Rather, it may be presumed that the scale developed along purely artistic principles, and that the true physical nature of musical sound was investigated long after the arts of harmony and orchestration were being practiced to a degree of excellence attained by the early masters.

In spite of the fact that the dictionary defines an art as an applied science, it frequently happens, in technical history, that the art precedes the science, the latter becoming the stepping stone to greater developments in the already existing art. The same idea might be facetiously applied to the sense of hearing, for it is only in the last two decades that any very scientifically accurate facts have been learned about the nature of the human ear (in spite of the eons that this venerable sound device has been in use!). At this point we proceed to the actual nature of the human ear in relationship to pitch, and to intensity (loudness) in order to form some sort of a basis for the electrical and acoustical aspects of sound reproduction.

THE IDEA of pitch is best expressed by means of the chart in Figure 1. For simplicity, the keyboard of the piano is used with actual frequencies or rates of vibration opposite the keys. It will be noted that Middle C of the keyboard has a rate of 256 vibrations per second, while C^1 (one octave above) has a frequency of 512, or twice as many vibrations. In the same way the octave below Middle C, or C_1, has a rate of 128 vibrations. If one will follow out the scale as marked it will be apparent that the frequency rate of the sound doubles for each octave, as is seen by tracing out the C's, for example, which appear as 32, 64, 128, 256, 512, 1,024, 2,048, and 4,096, the latter being the highest fundamental tone that appears on the keyboard of the piano. In order to give the range of pitch encompassed by other musical devices in terms of the frequency scale, they are shown graphed above the keyboard drawing in Figure 1.

This fact of the frequency of vibration doubling for every octave of the scale is an important matter electrically for it permits the use of carefully calibrated oscillators for plotting the performance of the various units entering into a sound system, as well as the plotting of the results against a graph scale that is not only logical mathematically, but also assigns increments of equal proportions to the various octaves of the scale. This is the logarithmic scale and is the horizontal scale that has been used in plotting the curves in Figure 2, which shows in a pictorial manner some of the performance characteristics of the human ear.

This curve depicts data taken by Fletcher on a great many individuals, and averages are plotted for the group. The lower curve indicates the value for the sound pressure necessary for the average individual to just perceive the sensation of sound at any frequency within the range of audibility. The upper curve of Figure 2 indicates the value of sound intensity that causes the average individual the sensation of feeling—that is, very loud tones along the curve which cause the ear to tickle or which actually give pain to the listener.

It is interesting to observe that at 1,024 cycles (two octaves above Middle C) the ear has an intensity range of almost 10 million times—that is, the ratio between the lower intensity that can be perceived, and the loudest tone that does not cause discomfort to the ear. It will be noted also that the range of loudness decreases as the pitch or frequency becomes rather low or extremely high, so that a point is reached at either end of the scale where the ear perceives sound at the same level at which discomfort occurs. This fact rather defines the limits of audibility as seen by the curves, to the range between 20 and 18,000 cycles per second. While the most modern equipment does not aim to cover such an enormous range of tones, due to very practical considerations as well as to the fact that certain of these frequencies do not contribute in great measure to the reality of tone, nevertheless the figures above indicate that the ear is a device having larger capabilities than is often realized, being capable of responding to tones over a range of almost ten octaves and to changes of volume of some millions of times in a portion of the pitch range. Further studies by several investigators disclose that within that range these are approximately one-half million combination values of pitch and loudness that are within the discriminatory powers of the ear, and it should be noted that this figure applies to pure tones as distinguished from complex tones, such as are emitted by most musical instruments and the voice.

WE SHOULD note that the chart of Figure 1 applies only to the pure tones emitted by the various instruments. Thus we see that actual keys are present in the piano for frequencies of 27 to 4,096 cycles per second. Actually, when any particular key is struck, not only the marked frequency or fundamental tone is heard, but harmonics or musical overtones of the instrument as well. It is well known that it is the presence and relative intensities of these overtones that establish the character of tone and individuality of the various instruments. The overtones are likewise of equal or even greater importance in the definition of the speaking voice as well as in the reproduction of that class of sounds known as noises. In the latter classification are such sounds as the clatter of horses' hoofs, the clapping of hands, the sound of rain, gun shots and the characteristic sounds of other mechanical devices.

The presence and importance of certain of these harmonics add greatly to the complexity of sound reproduction in the theatre,

Gentlemen:

Your model 309 full range reproducer and horn, installed by Mr. Irving Synnes in my theatre, "THE ALAMO," at New London, Iowa, are giving very good results. They have increased our attendance considerably and many patrons tell us they have never heard any better sound.

Truly yours,

Syncrofilm
SOUND EQUIPMENT

You Want Profit
Don't You?

SYNCROFILM gives you your best chance to get it. Wide range is the demand of patrons. They go to the houses offering it, in preference to theatres with older equipment. Improvement in box office receipts always follows Syncrofilm. Why deprive yourself of this advantage when a small investment in Syncrofilm will give you the last word in sound reproduction?

When you choose Syncrofilm you get the benefit of the many years of experience that have made Weber Machine Corporation the largest independent manufacturer of sound equipment in the world. Long life, freedom from trouble and perfect reproduction are engineered into every part of Syncrofilm.

first in the recording of such effects on the film, and second in the reproduction of such sounds at proper intensity in the theatre.

The exhibitor is well aware of the improvements that have been made in film recording itself. The advent of noiseless recording and the reduction in the granular formations of the emulsions, have gone far to permit the recording of about an octave more of these important overtones than was possible in the early days of sound-on-film.

yet when she goes forth in the roadster the noises of the crowded business intersection must be sufficiently loud to create an illusion of realism to the audience. Some comprehension of the change in volume of these two possibilities may be better appreciated by reference to the data in Figure 3, where it is seen that these two effects represent a power ratio of 2½ million times.

Thus, summarizing, we see that the human ear is capable of responding to an

Tabulation Showing Approximately the Relative Intensity of Various Sounds

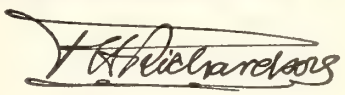
Before the advent of recordings of this type it was manifestly impossible for the exhibitor to extend the range of his reproducing equipment without getting more extraneous noises and "static" than he had contracted for. With these considerations out of the way, as they are in a large degree at the present time, the exhibitor who has not investigated the progress that has been made in reproducing equipment is robbing his program of much of the realism that is latent in the film.



In addition to the extension of the range of pitch on the film we must take due regard of the improvement in volume range of the recordings. A good show, of course, demands that when the heroine of the subject whispers, it shall be truly a whisper, astounding range of both pitch and intensity. These capabilities must be exercised if the auditor is to leave the theatre with the impression that he has seen a good show. It will be the purpose of a future article to discuss more explicitly some of the improvements that have been made in the apparatus for sound reproduction that make possible the realization of the desired effects that can now be attained with the improved film.

[This is the first of a group of araticles on changes in methods and apparatus of sound reproduction, as observed and appraised by an engineer doing development work in this field. A note on the author appears on page 32.—THE EDITOR.]

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

LOW WAGES: A SMALL TOWN THEATRE PROBLEM

FREQUENTLY I am appealed to by small town and village projectionists who either complain that their pay is too low, or inquire what it really should be. Before me lies a letter from a small town projectionist down in Virginia, part of which reads:

"I am asked to project two shows a night without a helper. Must work every night except Sunday. It is required that I take care of the sound equipment, test its tubes, adjust its optical system and make all necessary repairs, for all of which I receive $12 per week. Minimum living cost here is $7 for room and board. It would cost in excess of $30 per month to have an RCA service engineer check up the equipment once a month.

"I have spent very real money and sincere effort in fitting myself to do the work properly. (Incidentally I not only have your Bluebook, but have studied it to my benefit, be it said.) The owner claims he cannot pay more, but I feel the sum is too low. I am dissatisfied, often feel I don't care whether I put on the best show possible or not. Perhaps I should not feel that way, but if the exhibitor wants really good work, should he not be willing to pay at least reasonably for it? May I ask what you think about the matter?"

At first glance $12 per week seems absurdly low—outrageously so, in fact. However, it must be remembered that only the evening hours are involved. This man has all day to himself, unless possibly a short while spent in attending to the equipment. However, while fully realizing the financial troubles of the small town exhibitor, I would say that two shows per evening should be well worth at least a wage of $1.50 per show, or $18 per week. Even that will seem absurdly low to city men, but this is not a city, and theatre revenue in small towns is limited.

It is seldom good business policy to pay wages so low that the projectionist has really just cause to feel dissatisfied. If that is done it will almost certainly be found impossible to get a man who will take the best care of the equipment and put on the best possible show. In the end such a policy will certainly work out to financial loss rather than gain.

Put bluntly, it is poor policy to be too niggardly in the matter of pay, even in a village. Excellence in projection work means much to the box office, and the exhibitor or manager foolish enough not to understand that fact will certainly in the end be the financial goat.

As to not feeling like putting on the best show possible, while I can thoroughly understand the feeling, still it won't do. Put on the best show you can—or quit putting one on at all!

SEEK INFORMATION ON CODE SCALE

FROM TWO MEN who sign themselves "Chief Operator and Assistant Operator," comes a letter reading, in part:

"We know you are about the only one we can turn to for reliable information. We work in a town of 10,000 population. The boss gets rid of the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES before we get a chance to see them since the N.R.A. came. We would very much appreciate your kindness if you will take the time to drop us a line wiseing us up on remuneration for operators. We receive $15 and $13 a week."

It would really seem that projectionists would have sufficient enterprise to have the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES for themselves. There are many reasons why projectionists themselves should subscribe. In the first place, this is the paper that, in its component part, the old Moving Picture World began almost 25 years ago the struggle for recognition of projection as something more than merely "operating a machine," and for at least sufficiently increased pay to attract to the profession men of superior ability. That fight was begun about the time the I.A. entered the field, and was carried on vigorously years before the union organization had any real power.

But length of service is not all. The service of the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES to the profession of projection, and to the cause of the projectionist, is continuous. It is not only comprehensive, it is responsible, without fear or favor, to the best interests of the entire industry. The motion picture, as something to be sold to the public as entertainment, is the primary concern of these publications. And since the value of projection to the motion picture is fully realized, years of effort and a great deal of money has been spent in efforts to elevate projection to the level of a profession, to provide good working conditions for the projectionist, and to instruct the men in the technics of their craft.

These correspondents have been given the information they sought. But had they been subscribers to the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES themselves, instead of depending on the subscription of the theatre, they would have had the information without asking for it.

PROJECTION ON A SMOKE SCREEN!

ROY J. ARNTSON, projectionist of Minneapolis, has had a rather weird projection experience, which he describes in a recent letter. He writes:

"It has been quite some while since I have sent in 'Bluebook School' answers, but here I am again. Have read and digested your articles regularly. The sincerity of your purpose and success of your endeavor is evident. I know it will continue.

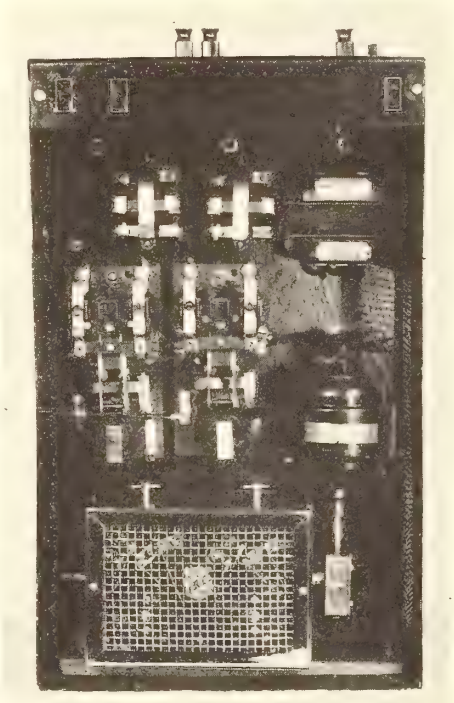
"In a recent article I made note of your request for reports on condition of films received. Attached are two clippings taken from Warner's stock. These numbers were punched throughout the entire production. Seems to me this is a direct invitation to the projectionist to punch holes, or to do whatever he may please to the films. Such emasculation certainly is prima facie evidence that the company cares nothing for the effect of punch marks on theatre screens.

"Incidentally, Columbia prints fail to have the number ahead of the first reel, though it is on all subsequent reels. Why not on the first?

"And now for an oddity that happened recently in our theatre. So far as I know it is in a class all to itself. One night at about 10:30 I had the amazing experience of seeing four distinct, separate pictures, each on a screen in our theatre, whereas there is but one screen, really. It reaches almost to the theatre ceiling, however. What happened was this:

"The theatre is heated by ducts placed in three openings along the ceiling center line. That is to say, the heat is forced down into the theatre through these openings. That night some one who did not understand the furnace was sent down to fire up. He did not manipulate certain dampers correctly, with the result that from the ceiling opening next the screen, a cloud of pure white smoke billowed out, forming a screen upon which the picture showed up distinctly. An instant later the same thing happened at the second opening, and then at the third. The characters were plainly visible on each screen, that on the real one being most distinct. The effect lasted but a short while. The smoke gradually diffused and the picture went back where it belonged, the 'ghosts' fading slowly from sight before our eyes, the last one to go being the one next the projection room."

This must have seemed rather ghostly, those scenes fading out in the air. I'd like to have seen it myself.



As to the film punching, I am forwarding the clippings to the general manager of Warner theatres. I am very certain Warners are not to blame and don't want any such thing done to their films. The marks doubtless are punched by some exchange. Whoever is responsible should be most emphatically advised that such film butchery is highly undesirable. If exchanges can mutilate film with hundreds of punch holes and thus force projectionists either to cut them out or to project them to the screen, then they certainly have absolutely no legitimate kick coming if the projectionists themselves butcher up films with changeover marks.

DESCRIBING NEW CHANGEOVER DEVICE

FROM J. K. STICKNEY of San Diego, Calif., has come a description of a new changeover device, which, unless I am in error, is the invention of a San Diego projectionist. The inventor and sponsors are unknown to me, and I have not personally inspected and tested the device. Mr. Stickney says:

"The many articles appearing recently on automatic changeover devices are interesting. While a few depend upon mechanical-electrical action, most efforts are centered upon a photoelectric tube, which is set into action by a cue photographed upon the film.

"Most projectionists are more or less familiar with the various present methods employed for changeover. However crude some of them may be, still they have served the purpose, though not always well, hence the introduction of a machine to perform the office will be compelled to run a severe gauntlet of criticism.

Automatic changeover device. See text.

"The Standard Release Print was hailed by many as a means for eliminating various changeover marks placed upon film, to its injury, by projectionists. However, it was found to have faults, the chief one of which is refusal of producers and exchanges to adopt 2,000-foot reels, which operates to induce many projectionists to 'double up' reels, in which operation four or more frames are lost in removing the trailer, making the splice and replacing the trailer when the run is finished, thus eventually destroying the changeover signal on each alternate reel.

"To assure perfect changeover under conditions that make visible changeover signals unnecessary and eliminate all cause for film damage, a new changeover device is offered, which we will describe in all its essential features.

"This device consists of two trip mechanisms, one for the upper reel of each projector, and the changeover unit illustrated in the accompanying photograph. In addition are the requisite switches controlling the two projectors and dowsers.

"The trip mechanism is built into each upper reel and its hub and so arranged that the reel may be installed in, and removed from, the magazine in the usual manner. This change can be easily made by the projectionist himself. With the trip mechanism in place no cue mark or anything else impressed upon the film is necessary. The device utilizes a small lever as its means for operation. It is inserted between layers of the film and moves clear thereof when uncovered in process of projection, this movement mechanically operating a switch in a cabinet located entirely away from the film.

"This switch is in series with one arm of a magnetic switch and a low voltage magnetic coil located within the changeover unit illustrated. There is a separate coil for each projector. By connecting the switch, the arm of the magnetic switch and the magnetic coil in series, the device is prevented from functioning except when the projector is in operation.

"In the changeover unit is located a small motor which runs continuously, driving a shaft extending in back of the panel of the mechanism. Along the length of this shaft are a pair of clutches and controls, one for each contact drum, which latter are located on the front of the panel referred to. The entire unit is mounted in a small cabinet, which may be mounted at any convenient point on the projection room wall.

"In action, as the trip mechanism lever in upper reel is released by unwinding of the film, one of the magnetic coils is energized, which puts the proper clutch on motor shaft into operation, causing contact drum on the face of the panel (under wire guard) to make one complete revolution, whereupon the clutch automatically disengages and the drum becomes stationary, the device automatically setting itself for the next changeover.

"When the contact drum rotates it moves clockwise and engages the first contact, which operates a locking magnetic switch, thus automatically starting the idle projector. The next contact (invisible in photo) automatically closes the dowser of the working projector and opens that of the other.

"The third and last contact opens the locking magnetic switch controlling the projector being cut out of operation. Sufficient time is allowed between the first two contacts to permit the idle projector to attain full speed. The film is all wound down into the lower magazine before the projector being cut out finally comes to rest. The time relation between the dowser controlling contact and other contacts may be altered by the projectionist.

"In rewinding, the projectionist inserts the trip lever of the mechanism at proper distance from end of film, which location may be governed by standard release print cues if present. When the reel is in place in the upper magazine the device is ready and requires no further attention by the projectionist. The reel may be inserted and removed without disturbing the device because of the fact that the circuit operating it is complete only when the projector is in actual operation. Also by opening a small switch, the device may be made inoperative and manual control substituted."

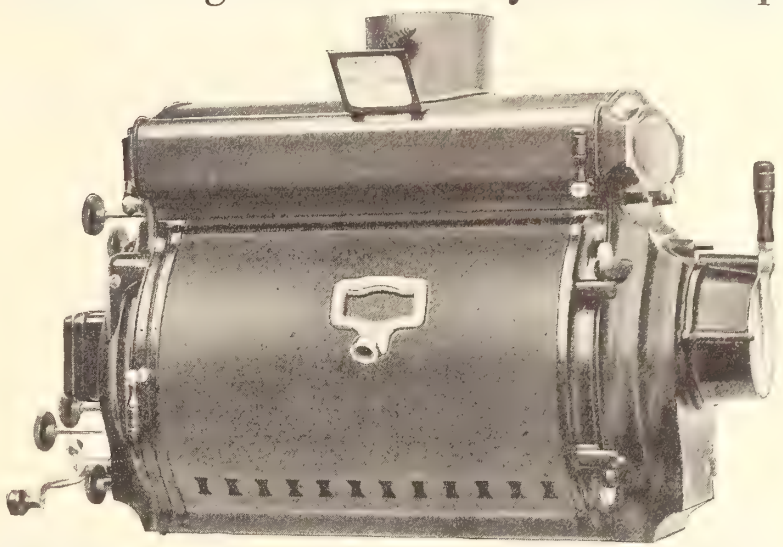
The foregoing description is wholly by representatives of the inventor. I can see but one real objection to its adoption; namely, that it tends to make it still easier for the projectionist to stay away from the working projector where he belongs every minute it is in operation. I do not care to express any views one way or the other until I have actually seen the device in use in practical projection and checked up on its performance. That it will do as claimed I can see no legitimate reason to doubt. The question then resolves itself into, Do we want it done? Some while ago I would have answered with an emphatic no. Today I am more or less in doubt. There are so very many one-man rooms now, and in them the projectionist certainly has more than enough to do. In such projection rooms an efficient automatic changeover might be of great assistance.

PROJECTION GROUP DISCUSSES A.C. ARC



THE LAST MEETING of the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, was graced by the presence of more than twenty men, including Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president, and Sylvan Harris, manager of the S.M.P.E.; an invited delegation from the National Carbon Company, including E. L. Geib, manager of its arc department; and Mr. Lad, of India, who was a most interested spectator. He addressed the committee briefly.

The 4-hour committee session was almost entirely devoted to discussion and investigation of the merits of the new type a.c. arc light source and its accompanying equipment, supplemented by a lengthy and varied practical projection demonstration by Rudy Miehling, who has developed an "adapter," which can be applied to any of the present standard low-intensity equipments. After a lengthy discussion and the demonstration, it was the consensus of those present that with proper equipment, properly handled, the new light source gave an even distribution of light on the screen, that the light was of pleasing tone, and that it provided higher screen illumination than was possible with the smaller type of low-intensity now in use, at an added operation cost of only about 1½c. per hour.

It developed that the whole secret of successful work with the new arc lies in very close arc regulation, which Mr. Miehling's adapter accomplished within ¼-volt. That is to say, when the arc voltage rises as little as ¼-volt, the mechanism gets busy and gives Mr. Positive Carbon a boost ahead.

What we heard and saw at that meeting was still another proof of the high value of the work of the Projection Practice Committee, if further proof were needed. The committee is to be congratulated upon the excellent record established. It is well handled by Chairman Rubin and Secretary Hopkins, and its work has been greatly

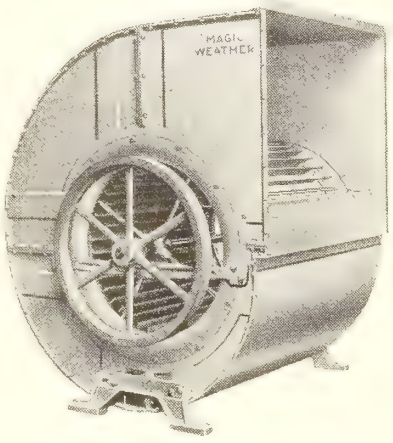
Richardson's Handbooks on Projection
IN THREE VOLUMES



Universally accredited as the best and most practical treatise ever published on projection and the many problems daily confronting the man in the projection room. The remedy for hundreds of every day perplexing annoyances is explained in detail and in simple language.

Volume 1-2 is devoted to the general subject of projection including its allied activities, but without information on sound. Volume 3 deals exclusively with sound. All three volumes are profusely illustrated and contain over 1400 pages of information and helps. Each volume contains Richardson's famous Question and Answer Series.

aided by the presence of Doctor Goldsmith, who is present at every meeting. The committee consists of H. Rubin, J. Hopkins, J. O. Baker, T. C. Barrows, G. C. Edwards, J. J. Finn, C. Flannagan, S. Glauber, C. Greene, H. Griffin, W. C. Kunzmann, R. H. McCullough, P. A. McGuire, R. Miehling. V. A. Wellman and myself.

PROPOSING REELS OF 1,500 FEET

THERE IS SOME movement on foot looking to sane consideration of the very large percentage of projectionists who demand 2,000-foot reels of film. Some proposal has been given the proposition of fixing the reel length at 1,800 feet, though as yet no definite action has been taken by any responsible body.

Unbiased examination of both sides of the 2,000-foot-reel squabble provides convincing evidence that there is some right on both sides of the argument. The producers and exchanges have valid objections to the 2,000-footer. Projectionists have very valid objections to the 1,000-footer. But just why the 1,800-foot reel? Why not split the difference and adopt a 1,500-foot reel, gradually displacing the present smaller and larger carrying reels as the present lengths pass out of use.

Certainly the producer and exchange men could advance no very valid objection to that length. It is neither long nor heavy enough to be cumbersome. The length would fit in well with present established practice of productions in 1,000-foot lengths. Four reels would carry 6,000 feet of film.

LUBRICATION OF H. I. LAMPS

JOHN L. STANHOPE, of Portland, Me., asks, "What do you regard as the best means of lubricating moving parts of high-intensity lamps? Should the parts be cleaned after each projection of a film?"

When all is said and done I know of no better, more efficient lubricant for hot, moving parts, or to prevent screws, etc., subjected to high temperatures from sticking, than just plain high-grade powdered graphite, a supply of which should be in every projection room. Mix it with kerosene and lubricate the parts with the mixture. The kerosene will of course quickly evaporate, leaving the parts coated with graphite.

Caution: Graphite is an excellent conductor of electricity, therefore care must be taken to avoid getting it either dusted or smeared on insulations.

To lubricate screws, remove and dip them in the mixture, then replace. If well coated you will find they will not stick when it is time to remove them again.

Moving parts of high-intensity lamps need only be cleaned once each day, but the job should be done thoroughly. Remove the carbon contacts (positive) and clean them thoroughly, using Crokus cloth by preference. In the event arcing may have caused swelling of the metal at any point, use a fine file to remove the "hump." In doing this be sure to keep the part as nearly as possible exactly flat, or even with the rest of the metal. If it be a bit too high, arcing in other places will result. If you get the spot too low, you will have, in effect, reduced the carbon contact by that much. It is a job calling for very careful work.

Crokus cloth is best for such work, rather than harder abrasives, though it is true at times conditions may compel the use of the latter. Be very cautious, however. Excessive use of sand or emery paper, even the finest available, will wear the surface down slightly, perhaps sufficiently to induce fine arcing, and a tiny arc soon grows to a larger one, as you well know.

CASE OF BUCKLED FILM OR WORN PARTS

THE FOLLOWING letter has been referred to me by E. W. Kundert of the Empress theatre in Beresford, S. D. The letter is addressed to Messrs. Ryan & Kundert and states, "This station [Veterans Administration Facility, Hot Springs, S. D.] is having certain trouble and asks your help. We operate a twice-a-week motion picture show. The projectors were installed in 1931. We now have W.E. sound and Simplex projector mechanisms. Mr. Clarence N. Danielson is our very efficient projectionist.

"There has been criticism from one who attends our shows that certain things can be done with films as they are being projected, but Projectionist Danielson and myself hold it cannot be done. In order to ascertain who is right in the argument, we are trying to get viewpoints of different projectionists as to their own experiences. A letter answering the following questions would be appreciated.

"(1) During times when there are strips of film that show up clear and in sharp focus on the screen, whereas other parts are blurred and apparently out of focus, is there any possible way, using the focusing screw, that the blurred part may be cleared up?

"(2) If this can be done, would it be practicable for the projectionist to alter the focus for a strip of film, say, 100 feet long?

"(3) Does light intensity affect the clear cutting [definition] of screen image?

"(4) Should it be necessary to alter the focus every time a new reel of film is threaded into the projector?

"(5) Is it not true that focus, framing, etc., should be checked at the beginning of each reel, and that it should not be necessary to make any further change during the projection of that reel?"

(1) Hardly. The effect is due either to working projector parts or to film that is buckled. When the out-of-focus effect appears, have the projectionist open the lower magazine door and drop a scrap of paper into the film roll. When it again disappears, repeat the operation. Then when rewinding, stop when the paper marker appears and stretch some of the film between the markers tightly on some flat surface. If it lies perfectly flat, then the fault is not in the film, but in worn aperture plate tracks and tension shoes, both of which must be renewed. You may test the shoes and plate tracks with a steel straightedge. For reasons too lengthy and two well known to justify using space to explain here, the film must lie perfectly flat over the projector aperture (see page 638, volume 2 of Bluebook). If it does not, the film image will be more or less blurred, according to the amount of buckle.

(2) The film cannot be focused sharply all over the screen if it does not lie perfectly flat over the aperture.

(3) No.

(4) Most emphatically no.

(5) Yes, but mark the "check." The film photograph should be threaded exactly in frame, and the position of the lens for one film should be its position for the next one, unless something is radically wrong.

PROJECTIONISTS TO PAY LICENSE FEE

THE ORDINANCE under which New York City projectionists have been licensed for many years without any payment has been amended. On December 31st all licenses expired and could be renewed only upon payment of a fee of $10. New licenses or renewal of licenses allowed to expire by non-payment of the $10 fee, will cost $15. If a license is permitted to lapse in excess of 30 days, the guilty one must stand re-examination.

All very well, perhaps, though based upon present licenses issued, the resultant income should be in excess of $50,000, whereas the whole cost of the license bureau cannot possibly be more than a fraction of that sum, and any considerable excess above cost amounts to charging the citizen for the privilege of earning a living for himself and family.

Put in another way, it would seem reasonable that each branch of labor should pay the actual approximate cost of such examination and license as may be necessary for the protection of the public, and to keep out men of inferior ability. No reasonable kick on that. But a license fee to be just must be based upon actual cost of such action by the city, and as has been intimated, unless there is a very, very large falling off of applicants, a $10 and $15 fee is outrageously excessive.

Another thing: If the city charges a fee for examination and license, then it is only fair, just and honorable that the examination be such as will keep out men of inferior ability. It must, in common fairness, be such as will debar men from entering the profession of projection until they are able to prove themselves to be competent.

TAIL FLAME OF NO SCREEN VALUE

MANY PROJECTIONISTS have the mistaken idea that light emanating from the arc tail flame has value in screen illumination. This I have on several occasions declared to be wrong. The matter recently came up in a letter from the supervisor of projection of a theatre chain, who spoke of light from tail flame as having large screen illumination value. I advised him he was in error, whereupon he indicated I had "better study up on the subject, as I evidently did not understand it."

I then laid the whole matter before the Scientific Bureau of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company. Here is the reply prepared by Mr. Alan A. Cook:

"The conclusion on the subject of light from the tail flame, as expressed in your letter of January 10th, seems absolutely correct to me. The projector optical system is designed to focus the crater floor of the arc at the aperture plate, and any area outside the crater is practically useless, insofar as screen illumination be concerned."

THE RANGE OF AUDIBILITY

J. L. MATTEWSON, of Minneapolis, Minn., asks, "Will you advise me as to the range of pitch, in cycles per second, of various voices and instruments? The information will be highly appreciated by one of your years-old readers, who wishes to you every happiness the coming year."

I referred the question to Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, who answers as follows:

Male voices, in speech, cover from 100 to 8,500 cycles. Female voices, in speaking, cover from 190 to 8,500 cycles. Various instruments range as follows:

Violin 190 to 8,500 cycles; French horn 85 to 6,000; base drum 50 to 1,050 cycles.

The high and low limits of audibility among human beings are 20 to 17,000 cycles.

JAMES P. CHALMERS 90 YEARS OLD

MANY OLD TIMERS will still remember James P. Chalmers, founder of the Moving Picture World and one of the pioneers in motion picture periodical publication, who met an untimely death through accident many years in the past. I am sure it will please you all to know that his father, James P. Chalmers, who was one of the Chalmers Publishing Company in Moving Picture World days, still is with us. Mr. Chalmers just celebrated his 90th birthday anniversary and is now talking confidently of what he proposes to do during the next 20 to 25 years.

In the name of all those of early motion picture days, I wish Mr. Chalmers many more years may be added to his life.

SPENDING MUCH TO SAVE LITTLE

I AM in receipt of an intermittent sprocket from an Ohio projectionist who says, "I hand you an intermittent sprocket removed from one of my projectors. It was three full months before I was able to get permission to even remove the movement from the mechanism, and then only after the sprockets on each projector were equally bad was I permitted to send it to the shop, a distance of less than a half-mile from the theatre.

"The screen image did a St. Vitus dance. The gears are so very badly worn that I can rotate the shutter one sixth of a complete turn without the motion being felt in the main driving shaft. Such is projection!"

The sprocket teeth are very badly worn indeed. They present visual evidence of managerial foolishness. Were it possible to assemble the facts, I would be very willing to wager good money that those two sprockets have cost the theatre $100, at the very least calculation.

But what I am unable to understand is the statement that the projectionist was "not permitted" to remove the intermittent movements from the mechanisms. May I ask who prevented it? By what right did anyone prevent it? The business of a manager is to manage the theatre. One of his duties is to employ a competent projectionist, and to know that he is competent. If he is unable to form intelligent judgment in so vital a matter, then he is himself incompetent as a manager. However, having fulfilled his duty in that respect, that ends it. It is his business to manage the theatre. It is equally the business of the projectionist to manage the projection equipment placed in his charge. The manager has the right to demand results. He has the right to discharge a projectionist if he believes he is wasting current or supplies, but before he declares a thing to be waste it is well that he know exactly what he is talking about.

This manager has compelled the use of two sprockets long, long, long after they should have been discarded. In so doing he has made it impossible to project a decent picture. Is that good business?

PROJECTION IN CHICAGO

AT THE OPENING session of the last S. M. P. E. convention, the body was addressed by Mr. C. F. Strodel of Balaban & Katz, one of the great Midwest theatre circuits owning and operating 35 theatres in and around Chicago. After his entertaining and enlightening address, Mr. Strodel and this writer had a conference of considerable length, during which I remarked somewhat as follows:

"Mr. Strodel, it has always seemed to me extremely foolish for companies operating many theares to employ projectionists without making any real effort to determine their qualifications to assume such a responsible position. The projectionist takes charge of thousands of dollars worth of equipment, which is both complicated and in some of its parts highly sensitive. The length of its life will, within reasonable limits, depend upon the care with which it is handled and the ability and knowledge applied to the handling. By ignorance and carelessness the useful life of this equipment may be very materially shortened and the bill for replacements and repairs very largely increased.

"Not only this but you must depend upon the knowledge and skill of these men to reproduce faithfully and bring out the full entertainment value of the productions for which you pay huge sums of money each week in rentals. Without the application of skill and knowledge, you very well know the entertainment values of any production may be very largely decreased.

"Why then, is it, Mr. Srtodel, that your company makes no real effort to cause applicants for the position of projectionist in your theatres to pass a competent examination as to their ability?

Mr. Strodel's answer rather amazed me. He agreed with me thoroughly but made the point blank assertion that it could not be done. His reasons for saying that, I do not care to set forth without his consent. If they are valid reasons, then the thing is disgraceful to the point where I could not myself be an exhibitor. If I were one I certainly would close my theatre permently before I would permit any one, regardless of whom he might be or what his position might be, to prevent me from examining, or having examined any man it was proposed I should employ.

Later, at Mr. Strodel's invitation and through his courtesy, I visited a few of the Balaban & Katz Loop theatres; also two of those operated by Jones, Linick & Shaefer, and I was much gratified at the excellence of the projection. I first visited the 4,000-seat Chicago theatre on State Street, where I met Manager R. C. Bruder, who paid high compliment to the projection staff and to Jack Schaefer, head of the sound department.

Sound here must have been quite a problem. The Chicago has an auditorium 125 feet wide, and the sound distribution is remarkable in its perfection. Away over to one side and half-way down front, at a literally terriffc angle to the screen, the sound was excellent, with some but very little fade-away.

Up in the projection room I was privileged to meet and talk with the two men then on duty, though unfortunately I am unable to now recall which two it was. The staff consists of Glenn Sweeney, Harry Ragen, Seth Noble, Joseph Karmazin and Martin Johnson. Judging by the excellence of both screen and sound results, Local 110 is to be complimented upon having such excellent men in her membership. The screen image is of approximately correct dimensions, the screen light distribution excellent. My only criticism holds equally true of all theatres visited, namely: Picture distortion due to 'way-up-yonder projection room location.

From the Chicago theatre I went to one of Jones Linick & Schaefer's smaller theatres, the Randolph, of which R. Ryan is manager. I stopped only long enough to note that the picture size, lighting and light distribution were excellent, but that the sound was not as clear as it should have been. I did not try to analyze the trouble, time being very limited. The Randolph projectionists are H. Zeigelmaier, S. Dakoski and L. Zalewski.

I next visited the Balaban & Katz Oriental theatre, managed by Ben Bloomfield. The Oriental seats 3,200. Picture size, screen light distribution and brilliancy all excellent, as also was the sound and its distribution. Simplex-Super projectors and Western Electric sound equipment are used. The projection staff is composed of J. Dickstein, Richard Morris, Louis Herman, Leslie Linnick, Frank Freiwald and Harry Scholl.

At Balaban & Katz, United Artists I met J. F. McDonald, assistant manager, S. B. Soible, the manager, being absent. The theatre seats approximately 1,700. The projection angle is far beyond that approved as maximum by either the Society of Motion Picture Engineers or the Bluebook of Projection. The screen image therefore is very badly distorted. Projectionists Ray Horrall, Sam Spiro, Frank Barch and Edward Moore seem to be doing excellent work, but of course they have no power to correct distortion due to placing the projection room close to the high theatre ceiling. The equipment consists of Simplex projectors and Western Electric sound. Both the Oriental and United Artists theatres have three projectors. The last named has the best projection room, once one gets to it, of the three Balaban & Katz theatres named, though they are all fairly good.

At the Roosevelt theatre on State Street, I merely glanced in. Both picture and sound seemed quite creditable.

Having learned that my old friend, Sam Levine, general manager for Jones, Linick & Shaefer about 1906 to 1910; was on the managerial staff of one of their theatres, I looked him up and we spent a few moments talking over old times, after which I visited the Orpheum, on State Street, which was opened about 1906 or 1907. It then was the very last word in swank motion picture theatres. I met B. Anderson, manager, climbed up to the old projection room I had not entered for fully a quarter of a century, shook hands with H. Schafner, projectionist. Not one darned thing had been changed except the equipment and a few feet added to one end to accommodate sound equipment. It is just as cramped and crowded as of yore. However, considering the conditions, Brother Schafner seemed to be getting excellent results.

CURRENT METERS—An alternating current meter of the moving vane type, and a direct current meter of the permanent magnet type, will both indicate the same on straight direct current, such as supplied from a direct current power line or a well designed motor-generator. On pulsating direct current, such as supplied from a bulb type rectifier, the a.c. meter would indicate a higher reading. This means that the indicated value on a rectifier meter would be under the actual value. The same thing would be true when measuring the arc voltage, when the power came from a bulb type rectifier.

LIGHTING COSTS

• An instructive bulletin on the cost of illumination has been issued by the Hygrade Sylvania Corporation, through its lamp division in Salem, Mass. Prepared by Robert S. Bolan, chief engineer, the bulletin names and discusses the factors through the manipulation of which illumination costs may be to some degree con trolled.

"In electric illumination," it is stated, "there are three factors which one may juggle by using lamps of different voltage rating, to obtain the desired balance or economy. These are (1) lamp life, (2) current consumption, and (3) illumination produced. We may increase lamp life and reduce current consumption, but the illumination efficiency will be greatly reduced and, in the long run, we shall be paying more for the light obtained. Or we may reduce lamp life, increase current consumption somewhat, and obtain a higher percentage of illumination, thereby saving money in the long run. It is in the intelligent balancing of these three factors, therefore, that we can get the most light for our electric-light-bill dollars.

"In this connection the accompanying chart tells the general story at a glance. Taking 100% as the average, we note that when a good lamp is operated at its rated voltage, the life, light and wattage will be 100%, or the stated ratings of the reputable lamp manufacturer. But if we should operate the same bulb at 5 volts under the rated voltage, the wattage drops to 93%, the light drops even more to 86%, while the life shoots up to 182% or almost double the normal life. The other side of the picture is seen when the bulb is operated at 5 volts higher than the rated voltage. Now the wattage increases to 107%, the light much faster to 117%, while the life is cut to 56%.

"The deduction to be made from this graphic presentation is that the illumination efficiency is highly responsive to the operating voltage and wattage consumption, while the lamp life reacts even more to such changes. Short lamp life with high quality bulbs is usually due to severe over-voltage operation, although severe vibration or jolts may also cause premature demise of ordinary lamps not designed for such service.

"To obtain economical electric illumination, therefore, the consumer should make certain that the light bulbs are operated at least at rated voltage, and, for maximum efficiency, at a few volts (say 3 volts) above voltage, so as to obtain that greater illumination efficiency at some sacrifice in lamp life."

• Chemical for the purpose of dispelling odors created by the flinging of stench bombs has been made available by the Molnar Laboratories of New York. A first-aid material is supplied, with sprayer and instructions for use, while further means is available for complete eradication of the smell.

TUBE DEVELOPMENTS

• Advancements in the electrical industry during 1933 are reported in a review of the year by John Liston of the General Electric Company, and from it have been selected sections concerning electronic tubes, which not only have become standard instruments of projection, but are finding uses in other parts of the theatre. Thus in the field of this magical modern device during 1933:

"Several new control-type Thyratrons were developed, the most important design features embodied in these tubes being inert-gas filling and the shield-grid principle.

"Inert-gas filling results in a tube which is independent of ambient temperature effects and which is suitable for intermittent operation, as the characteristics are constant even when the voltages are first applied to the tube.

"In the shield-grid Thyratrons, the shield grid protects the discharge from extraneous charges and shields the control grid from both the anode and the cathode. This allows an extremely small control grid having low interelectrode capacity and low electron-emitting properties. The overall result is the reduction of grid current to a one-hundredth part of that usually encountered in corresponding three-electrode Thyratrons, with corresponding reduction in the grid power required. Also, because of the low control grid capacity, the four-electrode tube is less affected by transients in the output.

"Among the new units are a three-electrode tube having a one-half ampere current rating and inert gas filling; two half-ampere (average anode current) shield-grid tubes, one being mercury filled and the other gas filled; and two shield-grid mercury-filled Thyratrons having average ratings of 2.5 and 6.4 amp. respectively.

"A 100-amp. metal Thyratron is suitable for controlled rectifier use in the 250 and 600-volt commercial fields.

"A new phototube is a vacuum type with a sensitivity nearly equal to that of the conventional gas-filled types, and because of the high vacuum its stability during life is a great deal better. It was designed primarily for applications where the maximum in sensitivity and stability are both essential. A relatively higher infra-red sensitivity, small size, and convenient mounting are added advantages.

"Interest in the generation of electrical oscillations at frequencies of many millions of cycles per second resulted in the production of two vacuum tubes of the three-electrode type for these frequencies.

"The ultra-short-wave oscillator tube was designed for use as an 'electronic oscillator' where the frequency of oscillation is a function of the time of transit of the electrons. An output of approximately one watt can be obtained at frequencies of 700,000,000 cycles per second.

"The design of three-electrode, water-cooled vacuum tubes was carried to unusually small dimensions to obtain relatively high output power at very high frequency. The filament leads are located at the top and the grid lead at the bottom. Outputs of several hundred watts can be obtained, at frequencies as high as 300,000,000 cycles per second, using two of these Pliotron tubes in a balanced circuit.

"The use of graphite as an anode material was extended. Graphite has a number of advantages over the materials commonly used in the past for the manufacture of anodes, and these new anodes approach black-body radiation in their ability to dissipate heat. Therefore increased factors of safety have been obtained in the operation of these tubes.

"A new Kenotron tube designed for use as a half-wave rectifier is a two-electrode, high-vacuum radiation-cooled tube having an inverse peak voltage rating of 20,000 volts and a peak current rating of 100 milliamperes. In a circuit using a combination of these tubes, an output voltage of approximately 15,000 volts can be obtained with a direct current of approximately 25 milliamperes through a resistance load."

CURTAIN TESTS

● Theatre owners, managers and architects will be interested to know of a recent report of the U. S. Bureau of Standards regarding proscenium curtains. The report follows a number of fire tests, and is as follows:

"Many municipalities and a few States have enacted regulatory laws and have placed theatres and opera houses under police supervision because of loss of life in theatre fires. Most of these laws require an asbestos cloth curtain, or one of other incombustible materials, to close the proscenium opening between the stage and the auditorium, but many of the essential details are not given. The lack of information needed in formulating code requirements led to an inquiry by the Bureau into the fire-resistive properties of theatre proscenium curtains. After examination of the structure and operation of many installations in 3 cities, fire tests were made on sections of 6 different types of curtains of about one sixth the area of those usually installed in theatres. Two of these were steel curtains with asbestos board insulation on the stage side, and four were made of asbestos cloths. One curtain made of a single ply of heavy wire-reinforced asbestos cloth and another made of two plies of plain asbestos cloth of the best commercial quality and usual weight, were both found to be deficient as barriers against smoke and fire. Curtains made of two plies of cloth with steel frames to hold the plies apart provided protection against a severe fire for a period of about 15 minutes. Both types of steel curtains gave protection for a half hour or more and indicated reliability for the protection of persons and property. Most auditoriums are so designed that an audience filling it can make their exit within 5 minutes, but proscenium curtains should give protection for a longer period, so as to provide proper margin of safety.

"Flexible asbestos cloth curtains without the steel frame, when subjected to pressure from the stage side, were found to bind against the proscenium wall with serious probability of failure to close under fire conditions. Tests of the asbestos cloths from which the curtains were made showed that all suffer serious loss of strength after subjection to flame or high temperature."

MAZDA PROJECTION

● Reviewing recent developments in various branches of the electrical industry, the General Electric Company notes changes made in Mazda projection lamps. It is stated that improvements have made possible screen illuminations twice as high as those of two years ago.

All of these lamps show improvement in wattage per unit of source area—that is, in concentration of source. Means have been introduced for the better control of bulb blackening, and a marked advance has been achieved in the wattage for a given size of bulb.

A new feature is the rating of lamps for this service at 100 volts. The line voltage, by means of a small rheostat and a voltmeter provided in the equipments, is reduced to 100 volts, thus giving satisfactory life and candlepower performance from the lamps in service. Special forming and heat treatment of the filaments were developed to reduce warping or twisting of the coils, making it possible to place the coils much closer together, and a new type of supporting structure was provided for mounting the filament.

In the biplane lamp, one grid of coils is placed before the other and so staggered that an almost solid rectangle of light is presented to the lens. The potential advantages of a biplane construction for the higher wattage equipments of each class had long been known; but it was not until the new filament treatment and mounting had been perfected that the full advantages of the biplane source could be realized. Biplane construction is now incorporated in five of the new lamps: in 500-, 750-, and 1000-watt sizes.

If Smith leases a theatre from Jones, and then acquires sound equipment on a lease basis, Jones cannot obtain a lien on the equipment if Smith fails to pay his rent. This was the decision handed down the other day by the United States District Court of Texas, Southern District, in litigation brought by Messrs. Dunlap and Schnorenberg, owners of the Bijou theatre in La Feria, Tex. The house had been leased to E. F. Stein, who acquired Western Electric sound equipment for the house. The landlords charged that Stein did not meet his payments on the lease, and they sought a landlord's lien on the sound equipment, contending that the agreement represented a conditional sale instead of a lease, but the court held that all title remained in Electrical Research Products.

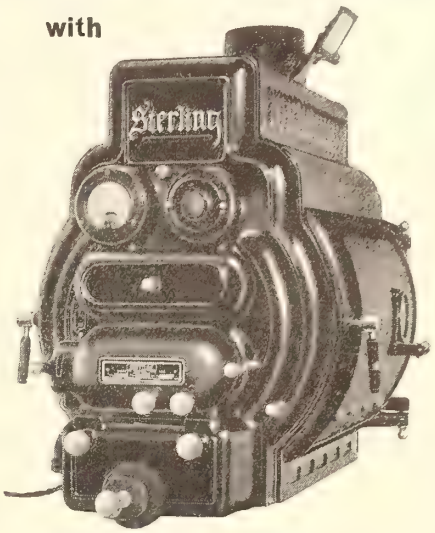
breakers may be set for any pre-decided load within certain limits. When so set, a circuit-breaker will open the moment that the set load is exceeded.

There are various electrical hook-ups; some require fuses while others require circuit breakers. Sometimes both are used. The blowing of a fuse is a danger signal and definitely indicates that there is a wrong condition somewhere in that particular circuit. It therefore follows that all equipment connected in that circuit should be checked and examined before placing a new fuse in the circuit.

Here are some of the more common conditions that will cause a fuse to "blow": (1) ground of the circuit, (2) loose connection (thereby increasing the resistance of the circuit), (3) overloaded conditions, (4) dampness (sometimes inside a conduit), and (5) short circuits.

All of these conditions constitute real dangers not only to some piece of equipment but might cause a fire in the theatre. If there are electrical conditions within the theatre that are not thoroughly understood, there should be no hesitancy in calling a licensed electrician to correct and explain that condition.



A sufficient supply of fuses or renewable links should be on hand in the theatre, conveniently located so that there will be no unnecessary delay in the replacing of fuses. The question might be asked, which are most desirable "one-time" fuses or renewable fuses? In the plug fuses up to 30 amperes, the "one-time" fuse is very satisfactory. Fuses of 30 amperes and above of the cartridge type are most economical if they are of the renewable link variety. However, unless there is an electrician in the particular theatre, or the manager is especially watchful, the renewable link fuse becomes a danger—a danger because of the temptation to over-fuse by putting two or more fuse links in one cartridge, thereby raising its capacity two or three times, whichever the case might be. Some renewable cartridge fuses are so designed and manufactured that it is extremely difficult to put in more than one fuse link. This type is very desirable.

THE CARE OF MOTOR-GENERATORS

MOTOR-GENERATORS perform such an important function in most theatres that it is extremely important to give them proper care and attention. Generators are designed to change alternating current to direct current, or the reverse. They are generally designated a.c. or d.c. generators, especially specifying the output side of the generator. Theatres are only concerned with the d.c. type of generator. The input or alternating end of a d.c. generator never seems to cause much trouble, and if the bearings are kept well oiled with a proper grade of oil, and the oil wells and bearings are washed out with kerosene every three or four months, and at the same time the whole machine is blown out thoroughly to remove all dust, there will be no annoyance from this end.

The output or d.c. end seems to cause more trouble. The bearings, brushes, brush holders and commutator must have regular careful, and skilled attention. The brushes must be of proper composition; a spare set of brushes should always be on hand. This is an insurance against prolonged breakdowns which is well worth while. Communicate with the manufacturer of the generator if there is any question as to kind or quality of brushes. In writing with reference to a generator, always refer to it with all the data shown on the name plate. With this data the manufacturer can immediately identify it.

FITTING OF BRUSHES

The fitting of brushes in the holders and to the curvature of the commutator is important. This should not be attempted by any one other than a skilled electrician. The commutator must be kept free from oil, carbon or copper dust; in brief, kept clean. Most difficulty in connection with the commutator and brushes is indicated by excessive arcing between the commutator and the brushes. It does not take long to damage seriously a generator set when the brushes and commutator are arcing. This arcing is generally caused by the collection of carbon or copper dust with some oil on the commutator bars, and as the armature revolves this oily paste is carried into the grooves between the commutator bars by the brushes. In this way a short-circuit is established between the bars of the commutator. The commutator bars are separated from each other by thin sheets of mica. These mica separations must of necessity be kept below the top surface of the bars, thereby forming shallow grooves between the bars. The grooves must be kept clean. The commutator should be cleaned every other day.

TROUBLE FROM ARCING

Many times the commutator surface becomes rough or uneven. This may be the result of age with a long period of "wear and tear," but generally it results from excessive arcing which has not been corrected immediately. There are times when this condition has become so bad that there is no other solution other than to dismantle the generator and send the armature out to a shop and have the commutator turned down on a lathe. When this commutator roughness is only slight it may be corrected or greatly improved by the use of sandpaper. The use of sand paper or stones on the commutator must positively not be attempted by any except a highly skilled electrician.

The following are the more general causes of arcing between the brushes and the commutator: (1) improper fitting of brushes, (2) high mica, (3) copper or carbon dust in commutator grooves, (4) overload, or (5) short-circuit.

REGULAR INSPECTION

IN ALL THE foregoing discussion with regard to the lubrication of bearings, most specific reference was made to motors or generators; however, the same care and cleanliness should be expected for all fans, pumps, compressors, elevators, organ lifts, sign flashers and organ blowers. Oiling, greasing and the washing out of bearings cannot and must not be a haphazard procedure depending upon the whim of some irresponsible employe.

Depending upon the number of hours each day that a piece of equipment is operated, a schedule for oiling, greasing and washing out bearings should be drawn up. This card or lubricating chart should be tacked up or otherwise posted in close proximity to the particular piece of equipment; then some specific employe should be delegated to lubricate that machine in accordance with the schedule and to enter that fact on the chart. Whenever the manager, in passing or on inspection trips, passes that machine, he should examine not only the piece of equipment but the chart also, and assure himself that the particular piece of equipment is getting proper attention. This procedure is especially important in cases of fans, motors and pumps that may be located in attic spaces or out-of-the-way basement locations.

It is hoped that this article has emphasized sufficiently the real need of careful attention to the lubricating problems of the theatre. Specific recommendations as to the grades and makes of oil to be used on any particular equipment is impossible to include, because of the great variety of type and makes of equipment installed in theatres. No attempt has been made to present any theoretical lubricating, cleaning or adjusting program, but the practical necessity for the manager to establish careful mechanical and electrical maintenance has been pointed out. With the information contained herein the manager can initiate to good advantage an immediate checkup of the theatre to determine the exact condition that now exists.

If you will take steps immediately to correct faulty conditions and make plans to protect yourself in the future against a recurrence of them, this article, as a friendly reminder, will have undoubtedly served its purpose.

to keep the theatre clean and sanitary and the interior in good repair. Also, the landlord contended that the purpose for which the $20,000 was deposited was "in consideration of the good will of the party of the first part (landlord) and as a guarantee for the prompt payment of said rent." Moreover, the landlord proved that for many years previously he had operated the theatre successfully and had built up a considerable amount of good will.

Therefore, in view of these facts the higher court held that the landlord was entitled to retain the full $20,000 deposit, and stated the following important law:

DECISION

"We recognize, and feel impelled to give effect to, the aspect of the payment as consideration for good will. The defendant (Conover) not only was a landlord. He had been an operator in the moving picture business over a period of years, first for others and then for himself. He had built up a good will both in himself as distinguished from a location and in the particular theatre, known as the 'Strand,' under lease. . . . The payment was a consideration for the conveyance of the good will. It was also a guarantee for the prompt payment of rent. But there was no division or allocation of fixed amounts to these separate purposes, and there was no obligation upon the landlord to permit the tenant to remain in possession without paying rent. . . . For the reasons given we think that the tenant was not entitled to receive $17,500 or any part thereof."

LIABILITY FOR FILM CONTRACT BREACH

THE LAW is settled that a person damaged by the wrongful and negligent act of another is required to use ordinary care and prudence to protect himself from loss, or, as sometimes stated in court decisions, to minimize the loss. It has also been held that the burden is upon the party committing the injury to offer evidence in mitigation of damages. In other words, the courts have consistently held that where two parties enter into a valid contract and one of the parties breaches the contract the other party is required to exercise an ordinary degree of care to reduce the resulting damages to a minimum. Failure to do so will result in the court rendering a judgment for damages in favor of the complaining party for an amount less than the actual damages sustained.

On the other hand, the law requires that the person who breaches the contract must prove to the satisfaction of the court that the other party failed to use ordinary care to reduce or minimize his damages resulting from the breach, otherwise he is liable for complete damages.

CASE

For instance, in First National Pictures Distributing Corporation v. Sewell (171 S. E. 354, Bertie County, N. C.), it was shown that a theatre owner and a film distributor entered into a contract by the terms of which the theatre owner agreed to accept and pay a specified sum for a stipulated number of films. The theatre owner breached the contract and the distributor filed suit to recover damages. The lower court held the theatre owner liable for $805, but the theatre owner appealed to the higher court contending that if the distributor had made reasonable effort and used ordinary care to re-rent the films to other theatre owners he could have reduced the damages to a considerable degree. Therefore, the higher court reversed the lower court's decision and said:

DECISION

"In an action for breach of contract, it is a well settled rule of law that the party who is wronged is required to use due care to minimize the loss. . . . While the duty is imposed upon the injured party (distributor) to use ordinary care and prudence to minimize his damages, nevertheless the burden is upon the injuring party (theatre owner) to offer evidence tending to show such failure to exercise the requisite degree of care and prudence to reduce and minimize the loss complained of."

OPERA CHAIRS NOT LEGAL FIXTURES

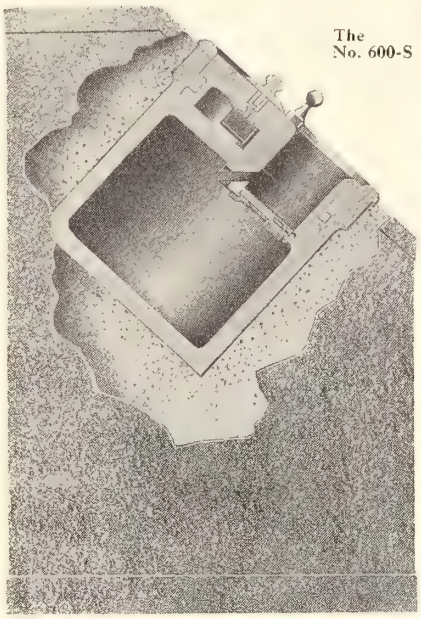
A GREAT MANY legal controversies have risen between the sellers of theatre equipment and subsequent purchasers of theatre buildings as a result of the seller of the equipment attempting to obtain possession of it because the purchaser or theatre operator failed to make payments in accordance with the contract of sale. A review of the important recently decided higher court cases discloses that the different courts have laid down the law as follows:

"FIXTURE" DEFINED

A legal theatre "fixture" is any theatre equipment which is attached to the building in such a manner that its removal will effect permanent damage to the theatre premises.

Another well established rule of the law is that a new purchaser of a theatre building can prevent the seller of a theatre "fixture" from removing it from the theatre building, although the original contract of sale between the theatre operator and the seller of the equipment clearly specifies that in the event the theatre operator fails to make payments, in accordance with the contract of sale, the seller may take possession of the equipment and remove it from the theatre building.

On the other hand, it is important to know that although a new purchaser of a theatre building objects to the seller of theatre equipment removing the same from the theatre, he cannot prevent the seller of such equipment from removing it if the latter proves that the equipment is not a legal fixture. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is National Theatre Supply Company v. Mishler Theatre Company (167 Atl. 324, Altoona, Penn.).



CASE

In this case it was shown that the Mishler Theatre Company entered into a conditional sales contract with the National Theatre Supply Company for the installation of 668 opera chairs in the theatre building to replace approximately 700 old was established to give the theatre owner and manager practical advice in precisely those problems which have come to the front as a result of current efforts to end the worn-out, run-down condition that overtook thousands of theatre properties during the depression. PLANNING THE THEATRE

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I AM considering erecting a theatre replacing the one I am now operating and have under lease, and am taking this means of trying to ascertain from you information regarding the same. The set-up is as follows:

Size of town (population), 1,600. Size of lot, 88 feet front, 165 feet deep. Size of theatre under consideration, about 400 seats.

Question 1—Will size of lot permit erection of theatre of above seating capacity, also three or four stores with apartments above stores? Entire building to be of fire proof construction.

Question 2—What would be the most advisable materials to use?

Question 3—Approximately how much would such a theatre building cost to erect, including complete equipment for theatre (except projection and sound equipment)?

Since the whole matter is still in the contemplative stage, I would not care to have the project made mention of, however I shall be sincerely grateful to you for a reply to the foregoing questions and for such additional information as you may be in a position to convey.—L.B.

The Answer:

THE SIZE of the lot, 88 x 165 feet, is entirely too large for a theatre with a seating capacity of 400. If you should use the full width of the lot for the building, you have at least 39 seats in a row across the width of the auditorium and would only require 21 rows of seats. This would make a very badly proportioned auditorium, therefore I suggest you use a center bank of thirteen seats with two wall banks of four seats each. The total width of the building, including seats, aisles and wall thickness will be then 46 feet. I advise you either to sell the balance of the lot or use it for free parking space for your patrons.

Having twenty-one 20-inch seats in a row will require twenty rows. Spacing these rows 32 inches back-to-back, it will require 53 feet 4 inches for the seats. Figuring the front stores 30 feet deep, the foyer 12 feet wide, the stage or platform 15 feet and 15 feet between the first row of seats and stage or platform, the total length of the building, including wall thickness, will be 128 feet. I do not think that you require a stage for such a small house, so I presume that a platform large enough for small vaudeville acts will suffice. With a frontage of 46 feet, I suggest you make the lobby 16 feet wide, leaving one store on each side of the lobby 17 feet wide, after making allowances for wall thickness and stairway to apartments above stores and lobby. Of course if you do not care to sell the unused part of the lot you can extend the front over the full width of the lot for stores and apartments. This would give you three more stores, or two stores and drive space should the lot be an inside lot with no other access to the parking space than from the front.

I believe that concrete walls for sides and rear will be most economical, the roof construction either steel deck or steel joists with concrete. For the front elevation there are a great many new glass products, which are very effective, especially when the designs call for modernistic treatment. For the interior you can either use acoustical plaster or sound absorbing materials. The cost of such a theatre with apartments over stores and lobby, all complete except sound and projection equipment, will be approximately $25,000.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

I WANT to construct a beautiful small theatre in a lot which is in a corner of two streets. This lot is 20 meters by 40 meters. I want the front of the theatre looking to the main street, that is where it has 20 meters with two stores, and I would like to have four stores on the side where the other street is—that is three, and the one in the corner, which have entrances by both streets.

Enclosed you will find an outline that will help you to have an idea of what I want. I want to spend about $15,000 in the construction of the building only, not counting equipment. I think that with this amount of money a beautiful small theatre can be constructed here in Puerto Rico, as the wages and laborers are very cheap.—P. G.

The Answer:

ANSWERING your inquiry, I ask you to pardon me for using my measurements in feet and inches, instead of meters, so that I can visualize the proportions of the building better, as it has been a very long time since I have used the metric system. The sketch of the floor plan shows that it is a fairly good-sized theatre. The front facing the main street will be approximately 65 feet, 6 inches, while the elevation facing the other street will be 131 feet. A theatre of this area could not be built in the United States for four times the amount which you expect to spend. Even at that figure one would have to practice the strictest economy in design and construction. While labor may be very cheap in Puerto Rico you must also remember that materials amount to over half the total cost.

Let us plan the auditorium with 21 seats across the width. This would give a center bank of 13 seats and two wall banks of four seats each, and would require only two aisles. The width of the auditorium should then be 43 feet, leaving 20 feet for the depth of each store facing the side street. Suppose we make the stores facing the main street 25 feet deep. Make the foyer 12 feet, and provide 24 feet between the first row of seats and rear wall of building. This would leave us space for 27 rows of seats, giving a seating capacity of 567 on the lower floor, which capacity may be increased by reducing the depth of the stores and the width of the foyer. But this amount of seats on the lower floor, and 200 seats in the balcony would make a well balanced house.

The arrangement of the exit on the side street will have to be changed. This exit should be placed nearer to the stage or platform, so place it between the third and fourth store facing the side street. Make the lobby 18 feet wide. This would make the main street stores 22½ x 25 feet

¶ Edwin Sedgwick Chittenden Coppock (Dressing Up Your Theatre and Show) is managing director of the Paramount theatre in Stapleton, Staten Island, New York. He began his career in the theatre as an usher, and now, at a relatively youthful age, directs the operations of what has been, in spite of recent economic conditions, consistently one of the Paramount Publix circuit's most prosperous properties. The Paramount in Staten Island functions, as a matter of fact, somewhat as a training school for young men aspiring to the position of manager in the circuit, and of their instruction Mr. Coppock is in charge. Many have been the innovations conceived by Mr. Coppock, and as they have proved successful, they have been passed on to other theatres. It is noteworthy, in view of Mr. Coppock's success as a manager, that he instructs himself thoroughly in the technics of the motion picture theatre, as a property and as a mechanism of entertainment.

¶ J. T. Knight, Jr. (Maintenance of Theatre Machinery) is a regular contributor to Better Theatres on the poblems and processes of management, operation and maintenance. Supplementing his more comprehensive articles are his Maintenance Tabs, begun with this issue and to be henceforth a regular feature. Mr. Knight is an accredited member of several branches of engineering and has spent many years in the motion picture theatre as supervisor of maintenance and physical operation. In an earlier day he was a theatre manager himself. Latterly he has been in charge of maintenance for Balaban & Katz in Chicago, and Paramount Publix. He is now attached to the home office of the last named circuit.

chairs then in use. The contract was properly recorded in accordance with the law. It provided that the theatre company should pay a specified amount at the time the chairs were delivered and installed in the theatre, and afterwards the balance was to be paid in equal installments.

Several months after the opera chairs were installed in the theatre the building was purchased by a man who believed that when purchasing the theatre building he also was receiving clear title to the opera chairs. However, since the purchaser or theatre operator had failed to pay the installments on the chairs, in accordance with the recorded sales contract, the seller of the chairs filed legal proceedings to remove them from the theatre building.

The new purchaser of the theatre building contended that the seller of the chairs should not be permitted to remove them from the building on the grounds that opera chairs are legal "fixtures," removal of which would leave the theatre building permanently damaged. However, it is interesting to observe that this higher court held opera chairs not legal "fixtures" which resulted in the seller being permitted to remove them from the theatre building.

DECISION

"The defense made to plaintiff's (seller's) claim is that the opera chairs, being securely fastened to the floor of the auditorium, are an essential part of the theatre and indispensable to its use as a place of public entertainment, and as such are legal fixtures that passed with the realty to the intervening defendant (purchaser). . . . The question raised is whether the rights of a conditional vendor (seller) of chattels attached to the realty are superior to those of a purchaser of the premises by deed from a prior mortgagee. The lower court answered the question in the affirmative, and we see no reason to disturb this conclusion."

PAYMENT FOR STORING EQUIPMENT

FREQUENTLY AFTER a theatre building is purchased the new owner discovers that certain chattels in the building, such as equipment or furnishings, are removable and belong to someone else. Sometimes it is necessary that the new purchaser of the building devote a considerable space for storing these chattels. Therefore, it is not uncommon that legal controversy rises over the right of the new owner or purchaser of a theatre building to charge a reasonable amount of storage as compensation for the space occupied by the chattels. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Veazey v. Electrical Research Products (145 So. 319, Monroeville, Ala.).

CASE

The facts of this case are that a seller of a motion picture outfit reclaimed it from a theatre operator but failed to remove the same from the theatre premises. Soon afterward another person purchased the theatre building and devoted a room for the purpose of storing the motion picture outfit. When the owner came to reclaim the equipment the new owner of the building refused to give up possession claiming that he had a lien on it to secure payment for use of the room for storage purposes.

It is important to know that under these circumstances the higher court held the theatre owner was not entitled to a lien, and said:

DECISION

"Appellant's (theatre owner's) theory is that leaving in his building this outfit, so bulky as to virtually occupy the room in which it was installed, and so deprive appellant of the use of such room, and in fact the use of the theatre building, rendered the owner of the chattel liable to him for the value of the use and occupation of the building. . . and that, by virtue of such lien, he has the right to retain possession of the property until such lien is satisfied. . . . The evidence discloses no more than a bailment of the chattel; not an entry upon, possession, and use of real estate for which a lien for use and occupation arises."

LIABILITY OF LANDLORDS

DISCUSSION HAS risen from time to time whether or not a landlord is liable in damages for an injury sustained by a theatre patron, where such injury results from failure of the landlord to repair the premises leased to a theatre operator. Therefore, it is important to know that it is a well settled rule of the law that a landlord is under no legal duty to repair leased premises if he is not so obligated by the terms of the lease contract.

CASE

For example, in the late case of Hunkins v. Amoskeag (169 Atl. 3, Manchester, N. H.), it was disclosed that a patron was injured on the portion of the premises which was being occupied by a tenant under a lease contract. The injured person filed suit against the landlord to recover damages, and attempted to prove that the injury resulted from falling plaster which was weakened by a leak in the roof. This court stated the law, as follows:

DECISION

"The landlord is under a legal duty with respect to the management of those portions of the property which he retains in his own control whether he undertakes the performance of that duty or not. . . . The necessary connection between the injury and the negligence charged is therefore wholly lacking."

Dressing Up Your Theatre and Show

of corn stalks and pumpkins at Halloween time? A miniature rock garden at Easter time? A life size tableau of wax figures from a department store? Model homes borrowed from a real estate agent? Or dozens of other things just as simple, such as modernistic backgrounds of the type used in show windows?

At first thought such things would seem to detract from the screen, but if they are not too brightly lighted and are definitely in the atmosphere of the short subjects or newsreel being presented, they add realism and appropriate atmosphere and a relief to patrons who, week after week, have been staring at your blank stage.

Many theatres formerly having a stage presentation or vaudeville policy are equipped with twelve or more balcony rail spots that are not now in use. The mounting of these spots is usually such that they may be moved about to throw a beam to almost any part of the auditorium. During intermissions, or before the show starts, why not use these balcony rail spots to bring out the architectural treatment or decorations on the side walls of the theatre? Startlingly beautiful effects can be achieved by the use of several of these lamps with different colors.

Should you agree with me that any of these suggestions have merit, I hope you will be as successful in their use as we have been. However, if any effect is used too often, it in itself becomes as monotonous as no effect at all. The reason for the effort that you will have to expend, and the thought behind all of these suggestions, is merely to have constant change of appearance or atmosphere. Patrons may not outwardly indicate their approval of these changes, but no one can deny that they will be quietly appreciative of your efforts to enhance their enjoyment of the program. I will wager next week's salary that all other things being equal, the habitual attendance at any theatre can be increased by a conscientious effort to keep the house itself, and the show, freshened—different from other theatres, in the atmosphere created for the program, in cleanliness, and in the creation of decorative effects to prevent dreaded monotony in the appearance of the theatre.

As the Earth Turns (Warner Bros.)

Romance, Drama, Comedy

The real story of the lives of those who wrest a frugal living from rugged Maine soil is the actuating motif of this picture Told in simple, sincere manner, the dramatic and romantic values are enhanced by comedy that serves to maintain and recreate interest when the heavier fundamentals threaten to become oppressive. Dealing with real persons and actual conditions and telling its story in a manner that reflects careful preparation and definite authenticity in characterization, the show is full of heart appeal. While solemnity marks the telling, understandable, non-theatric realism endows it with a color that should be appealing to metropolitan audiences, and because it so truthfully mirrors every day farm life, with all its hopes and ambitions, desires, disappointments and tragedies, it should prove unusually attractive in the smaller communities

Its time covers the turning of the four seasons. City bred Stan Janowski brings his father and little brothers and sister into rural Maine at the height of a blizzard. The homelife of the Mark Muir family is that of a hardworking fairly prosperous farmer. Presided over by Jen, who manages diplomatically to keep peace between Mark's second wife, Cora, and her daughter, Doris, and Mark's own children, their contented existence is tragically contrasted with the home life of brother George Muir's brood. Lazy, perpetually a victim of the misfortunes that befall the careless, this group is always next door to starvation, a condition which convinces Mil that her only hope for happiness is to desert her husband. Spring and the marriage of Ed and Emily sees romance flowering for Jen and Stan. Summer, hot and dry, sees Stan's crops fail, a discouraging blow to his father and mother. As an interlude, effective in the story's delineation, sequences picture the unsuccessful efforts of love-starved Doris to find happiness with young Ollie. Real romance strengthening between Jen and Stan, the harvest season rolls on; full barns for Mark, empty ones for the Janowskys and George. The hardships of winter force Stan to take his elderly father and mother back to Boston. There as a jazz band violinist he obtains funds with which he can re-embark on his agricultural ambitions. Spring again, and as he returns to Maine, his love path with Jen is severed as Doris lures him into taking her to a country dance. His barns destroyed by fire during his absence at the party, his romance with Jen shattered, Stan is about to take Doris to Boston, the goal of her dreams, when his eyes are opened to a greater love which impels him with the help of Jen to start from scratch, rehabilitate his properties and plant anew the seeds of happiness.

An atmosphere of humanness permeates all the entertainment elements of "As the Earth Turns." Essentially it is family type, but there is plenty of contrast to arouse interest of all classes. The book upon which it is based enjoyed a remarkable sale in large cities, and as the picture authentically preserves the punch and emotional color, the readers should help with word of mouth advertising

Whether farm stories have been successful or not in your theatre, proper handling of the assets in this picture should insure its making the grade. While the cast lacks any outstanding names, the fact of the featuring of several new personalities, particularly Jean Muir and Donald Woods who are fine in their parts as Dorothy Appleby is outstanding in hers, makes it possible to talk about different new players. The advance campaign should ring with homespun sincerity.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Directed by Alfred E. Green. From the famous best-seller by Gladys Hasty Carroll. With Russell Hardie, Emily Lowry, Arthur Hohl, Dorothy Peterson, David Landau, Clara Blandick, and 16 Others. Vitagraph, Inc., Distributors.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 114, No. 8 — February 17, 1934

WHAT IS PROGRAM?

MR. JESSE LASKY, quoted in a St. Valentine's day dispatch from Hollywood to Motion Picture Daily, steps forth with constructive discussion of the subject of that much debated production policy labeled "curtailment," and first set forth in Motion Picture Herald's West Coast correspondence some weeks ago. Mr. Lasky, it appears, is not entirely in disagreement with those of L. B. Mayer-Samuel Goldwyn school of thought in their theories about mass production—but—also however.

"As a student of film and theatre economics," says Mr. Lasky, "I realize that there must be some form of modified quantity production to supply the theatres."

To "supply the theatres" means to supply the public.

The public does not care a merry hoot about whether the pictures come by quantity production, whether they are program pictures or even if they are proconceived masterpieces. The public wants entertainment and it gets a lot of it from pictures which the producer did not know were loaded. The public probably makes more hits than Hollywood does. It is easy to name off hand half a dozen pictures in the current season which proved vastly more important at the box office than their makers anticipated.

It is the painful truth that some of the most ineptly made pictures, some of the most casually made, have hit the mass taste and prospered exceedingly.

Emotional content, the kick, is the test.

And one may pause parenthetically to remark that "kick" is not attained, as too many producers seem to think, by the intensity of the content. The perfect cocktail was never made of raw alcohol, nor yet the perfect drama of raw impulse and primitive motivation.

But, returning to the matter of volume of production, Mr. Lasky knows, and knows so very well through many a year of experience, that there is a reason for and a place for what is all too scornfully called the "program picture."

"Its existence can be made worth while," says Mr. Lasky, "and the quality average raised immeasurably through the tostering of unit or independent production, also by placing the blame for mediocre product not on the producing company, but upon the shoulders of those who make it."

There is nothing revolutionary in this idea of Mr. Lasky's. The motion picture rose to its greatness and prosperity under just such a system, through the days of the glory of what was known as "the Lasky lot," through the days when the "unit producers" were the DeMilles, Ince, Griffith, Sennett and so on.

This industry, from studio to screen, can prosper only with a flow of reasonably competent product, letting the hits come as they may. Every picture can be honestly and competently made. No super men are required for that, but "yes men" can not do it.

RAWER THAN NATURE

REGARDLESS of what the passing gains at the box office may be, the increasing tendency to fabricate and fictionize expeditionary pictures in the studios, to speak gently of what the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt called "nature faking," will confer nothing on the institutional status of the motion picture. Also the process will lose the screen friends in high places.

Nothing so very radical has to be done about it, but it would seem reasonable to ask the makers of pictures in alleged natural settings, pictures of animals and natives, to seek to be at least as authentic as the ordinary Sunday supplement. It is, after all, not true that Eskimos spend their lives trading wives, or that tigers, lions, and other jungle brutes do nothing but fight.

A few years ago the expeditionary picture was one product which could be sold and offered safely to the juvenile and the adolescent and yet hold the adult interest. Today the expedition to anywhere is sure to come back full of gore and more likely than not a lot of titillating Goona-Goonas. Life really is not precisely like that, even in the tropics.

CHARMING MURDER

THE supreme comedy of the season comes this week with the screaming of Mr. John Sloan, president of the Society of Independent Artists in New York, that "art murder" has been committed by the destruction of the unfinished mural with which Mr. Diego Rivera, Mexican propagandist, sullied the walls of the RKO building last year. Since when has billposting under the guise of interior decorative art become so sacred? If those who paid for the picture did not like it, it was theirs to put in the ash can.

FILLING THE SHELF

IN the dear old days of long ago, Mr. William Fox fought a mighty battle with the octopus, the Motion Picture Patents Company, which sought to control the industry by an ownership of the tools. Again Mr. Fox is in the arena of the courts, again fighting a mighty battle, this time in behalf of his Tri-Ergon, a corporation which purports to have possession of the tools of sound.

* * *

The days are long. From the first great war of the patents there remains only a long and dusty shelf of books in lawyers' offices. It would seem that presently they are going to put some more books on the shelf.

EXPLOITATION

Unstinted exploitation, especially of personalities, is the key to box office success of mediocre films, last week in Kansas City, Coast-bound, declared Merlin Hall Aylesworth, Radio chieftain. Also vital is the choice of theatre. A cycle of the "Little Women" type of picture may be expected, he indicated. . . .

SPANISH QUOTA

Despite long standing rumors, it appears to American Consul Cecil Cross in Barcelona that there is much foundation in fact in a current report that the Spanish government plans imposition of a quota system on film imports. The plan: every importer required to produce one film in Spain, costing at least 250,000 pesetas, for every five imported. . . .

UNIVERSAL INDEPENDENCE

Definitely denying reports that some of Universal's releases are to be made by "independents," Carl Laemmle, president, declared: "Universal makes its own pictures and intends to continue to do so." The veteran took to the air Tuesday over WEAF for the second of his special talks on film subjects. . . .

FEDERATION AND IMPPA

Though the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, Hollywood, has decided to retain its own identity, Trem Carr, its president, has wired the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, New York, its intention to work in harmony "both financially and morally."

SCISSORS—AND MORALS

"No scissors has ever made anybody righteous," and no picture has ever been made wholesome by censorship, recently in Fond du Lac, Wis., declared W. L. Ainsworth of the Garrick theatre and secretary of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan at a Better Films Council session. "The intent of the industry is to do the right thing," he said. . . .

TIEUP TEST CASE

Kansas City territory exhibitors, using tieups regularly, are keenly watching the outcome of a test case wherein the United States is prosecuting Rufus H. Limpp, gas station owner at King City, Mo., for giving theatre tickets with the sale of gas and oil, under the NRA fair practice code for the petroleum industry.

MIDNIGHTS BANNED

Definitely surprised and shocked were exhibitors of Gluster, Ohio, last week when informed the city council had passed an ordinance prohibiting midnight shows, particularly on Saturdays. . . .

Chosen by the new association of theatre owners in New Orleans for its name is Gulf States Theatre Owners of America, of which H. S. McLeod is president. A visit of Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, preceded the unit's organization. . . .

CENSOR QUERIED

Legal lights of the MPPDA and the Ohio censors at Columbus will attempt to settle a controversy involving interpretation of the script of Universal's "Midnight." The censors contend certain portions reflect on the district attorney. The MPPDA believes they should raise the status of the D. A. in public opinion. . . .

NEW FILM COUNCIL

As a clearing house for groups in research study of the motion picture, the San Francisco Motion Picture Council has been formed. It promises no attempt at censorship. Invited to join are representatives of parent-teacher organizations, Federated Clubs and the like. . . .

RADIO'S AUDIENCES

Adding his voice to previously recorded objections, Eddie Dowling, stage producer, last week condemned the practice of radio stations which give free tickets to program audiences, contending those audiences belong to the theatre. WEAK IN WRITERS

True also in England, but in even greater measure, is Samuel Goldwyn's recent assertion that Hollywood has a dearth of good writers, declared David Manners, actor, recently returned from a trip to England. "The film writer in England is underpaid in comparison with his American colleague," he said. Growing competition from British studios is keeping Hollywood on its toes, the actor believes. . . .

TRADE GROUPS INVITED TO CODE AUTHORITIES SESSION

Associations Will Participate in Four-Day Gathering at Washington, Starting March 5, on Possible Changes

Approaching decision of the Code Authority and the Administrator on definite selections for the 32 Local Clearance Boards and 32 Local Grievance Boards, due on Friday, and an invitation extended by the NRA to all industry trade groups to be heard at a mass meeting of Code Authorities of all industries, scheduled for March 5 at Washington, were the principal code situations holding attention this week.

The Code Authority had received 7,500 code assents up to press time, besides additional complaints from exhibitors in the field charging competitors with unfair trade practices, and both distributors and exhibitors were awaiting a final decision from the Administrator regarding the 10 per cent cancellation clause, which previously had been ordered retroactive to contracts signed before December 7 on pictures released subsequently. This was expected Friday.

In other quarters, Code Authority members and Allied leaders were priming for the court battle launched by Allied against the Authority and scheduled to start in New York Tuesday.

Previously, it had been generally understood that General Johnson's call to some 200 Code Authorities to meet him for wholesale code conferences in Washington was intended only for the Code Authority of each industry, but word from the Capital this week indicated that each trade association in every industry was invited to send to the meeting its code committee to participate in the discussions.

Local Boards To Be Named Friday

The final appointments to the 32 Local Clearance and 32 Local Grievance Boards are expected to be announced, at least partially, following the Code Authority's meeting in New York Friday, when a sub-committee of the Authority—comprising S. R. Kent, Fox; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York TOCC; George J. Schaefer, Paramount; W. Ray Johnston, Monogram; Nathan Yamins, Allied; Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA—will present for consideration of the Code Authority and of Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, a tentative draft of these boards which the sub-committee has been compiling the last two weeks from the names of some 900 exhibitor and exchange candidates submitted by their colleagues in the field. The names of those on the tentative draft appear on pages 15, 16 and 17.

The Code Authority and/or the Division Administrator may make changes or eliminations from the tentative draft, and it is expected that many of the tentative candidates will ask to be excused. It was learned also that the Code Authority has exercised its privilege of nominating candidates for posts on the boards whose names were not submitted from the field.

Both the Code Authority and its special subcommittee have been digging into the background and history of candidates already tentatively accepted. All nominations must finally be approved by Division Administrator Rosenblatt.

One more step must be taken by the Code Authority and the Administrator before these local boards actually commence operations as the Authority's code machinery in the field, and that is the selection of the 64 "impartial," non-industry members, one of whom is to sit on each of the 64 boards as the direct representative of the Code Authority. There are approximately 200 names up for selection, among them, local leaders of Chambers of Commerce, and local businessmen and executives of local civic organizations. No boards will be announced without simultaneous announcement of the selection of the board's impartial representative.

The call for Code Authorities of all industries to meet with General Johnson, March 5, as well as trade association representatives, does not necessarily mean that immediate revision of any code is in prospect. The conference will last four days.

A total of 278 codes covering approximately 90 per cent of all industry have been approved by the Administration, and another 353 are awaiting formal approval.

In his call, General Johnson outlined the major purposes to include "the consideration in public session of the possibilities of increasing employment; protections against destructive competition and against excessive prices and monopolistic tendencies; the elimination of inequalities and inconsistencies in codes; the position of small enterprises, and the vast problem of code administration and the organization of industry for self-government."

The tentative and preliminary outline of the group conference follows:

PART I

GROUP I. Possibilities of Increasing Employment; wages and hours; comparative situation of capital goods and consumer goods industries.

GROUP II. Trade Practices: Costs and prices; protestations against destructive competition, and against excessive prices and monopolistic tendencies.

GROUP III. Trade Practices: Control of production; limitation of machine hours; restriction of expansion of facilities; ethical practices regulating competitive relationship.

GROUP IV. Code Authority Organization: Code administration, including compliance and enforcement; inequalities, inconsistencies and overlapping in codes; inter-industry and intercode coordination; the financing of code administration; use and control of the code "Eagle."

GROUP V. Operation of Codes in Small Enterprises; position of minorities.

PART II

MARCH 5: Public Meetings; (Constitution Hall, morning). Address by the President, and by the Administrator.

MARCH 5: (Afternoon) and 6th: Public Meetings by Groups for presentation and consideration of the subjects outlined in Part I. Attendance of delegates to be designated and registered in advance by each Code Authority and trade association. (See Note.)

MARCH 7: Group Conferences of Code Authorities and code committees in same groups as outlined in Part I, for consideration with NRA of policies and actions on these subjects.

MARCH 8: General Conference of selected delegates of each Code Authority or trade association code committee with the Administrator for consideration of policies and program of Code Authorities and NRA with reference to matters developed in public meetings and group conferences March 5 to 7. Closing Address by the Administrator.

NOTE: If, in order to permit the presentation of information and suggestions by persons requesting such opportunity, it is necessary to continue these public meetings, they will be continued concurrently with the Scheduled Conference Program, in a consolidated public meeting for such period as may be necessary for that purpose.

The program from official NRA headquarters says that code committees of trade asso-

SUBJECTS FOR CODE MEETING SUGGESTIONS

Any trade association in the motion picture industry may submit suggestions or questions to the NRA for disposal at the Washington meeting of 200 Code Authorities opening March 5. The NRA this week specifically requested that such questions or suggestions be confined to the following points, treatment of which is intended "to improve the policy or procedure of the National Recovery Administration":

(a) The effect of your code upon operations, including employment, in your industry.

(b) The effect of your code on general price trend of products in your industry.

(c) Effect of your code on unethical practices in your industry.

(d) The effects of code provisions, if any, restricting production through limitations of machine hours or plant facilities.

(e) Effect of code upon the smaller concerns in your industry.

(f) Code provisions which, in your judgment should be modified or eliminated.

(g) Code provisions which, in your judgment, should be added.

(h) Specific proposals for eliminating overlapping.

(i) Financing of industry code administration.

BREEN HEADS STUDIO RELATIONS OF MPPDA

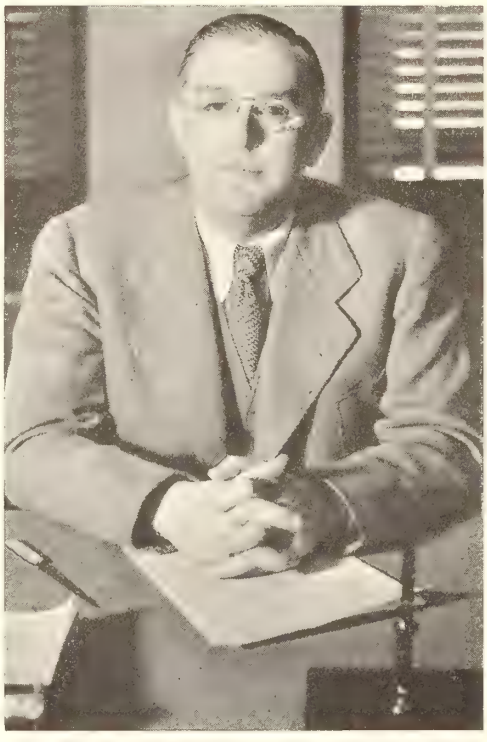
Carries Responsibility of Application of Production and Advertising Codes; Supervising Hollywood Offices of AMPP

Joseph I. Breen, a member of Will H. Hays' considerable staff of assistants in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., has been appointed by Mr. Hays to the post of head of the Studio Relations Department, in Hollywood.

This appointment carries with it responsibility for the application of the production code in the making of motion pictures among members of the association, and application of the advertising code with reference to studio utterances, as well.

Mr. Breen, also assistant to Mr. Hays, will supervise the Hollywood offices of the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

Beetson Heads Casting



The Hollywood announcement conveys other important changes in the office personnel. Fred W. Beetson, formerly executive vice president and now secretary and treasurer of the Producers' association, will assume jurisdiction over all casting activities. James E. Wingate, former head of the New York State board of censorship, and more recently with the Hays organization in Hollywood, is expected to continue his duties as an advisor on censorship, with Geoffrey Shurlock as his assistant and with Douglas MacKinnon giving attention to short subjects.

Motion Picture Daily's Hollywood correspondent ventures the assertion that: "Considered far from remote is the possibility that Breen ultimately will head the Hays office here, retaining his connection with the Hays organization in the East pretty much as an officer can be a director in two corporations at the same time."

Other observers tend to the conviction that this is not only "far from remote" but is substantially the fact as of now and today. The details are merely matters of internal diplomacies.

Long, Important Contacts

Mr. Breen, like so many of the members of the Hays organization, has a background of widely diversified experiences and a career of long, important contacts with the public. He is a graduate of St. Joseph's college in Philadelphia. A large part of his working life has been spent in newspaper work in New York, Chicago and Washington, and with the Associated Press in various European capitals. He had an interlude in the diplomatic service in Porto Rico. He handled the publicity affairs and sundry other concerns of the Eucharistic Congress in Chicago in 1926 and conducted the opening campaign of publicity for the Chicago World's Fair in 1928. He became assistant to Stuyvesant Peabody, president of the Peabody Coal Company in Chicago in 1929, with his responsibilities largely in the field of public relations, and went thence to the Hays organization.

JOSEPH I. BREEN

Mr. Breen has been in Hollywood for about a year, going there first in connection with some of the motion picture's West Coast publicity problems.

Warners Plans 60 for 1934-35

Warner and First National again will set 60 features between them on their 1934-35 program, according to announcements from Harry M. Warner, president, from Chicago early this week.

Mr. Warner indicated also that musicals will play as prominent a part on the new schedule as they have on the current cycle. He expressed the belief that an "essential element in the success of musicals next season will be better stories adaptable to musical treatment."

Mr. Warner stopped off in Chicago en route to New York from Hollywood. He was accompanied by Jake Wilk, Warner story editor.

Suit Against MPPDA Starts

Trial of the Frank Rembusch anti-trust suit against the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America opened Tuesday in United States district court, New York, with the introduction of documentary evidence and brief testimony. Mr. Rembusch, a former Indianapolis exhibitor, charges the MPPDA with conspiracy and seeks damages aggregating $2,000,000.

RKO, Universal Hold Sales Meets

Jules Levy, general sales manager for RKO Radio Pictures, this week called district and eastern branch managers to New York for brief conferences on sales policies and plans for the 1934-35 season.

Those attending from out of town included F. L. McNamee, Philadelphia branch head; C. R. Halligan, Albany; R. C. Cropper, Boston; H. T. Dixon, Buffalo; S. C. Jacques, Cincinnati; F. Greenblatt, Cleveland; N. Levy, Detroit; R. E. Churchill, Indianapolis; B. Pitkin, New Haven; G. M. Lefko, Pittsburgh, and R. C. Folliard, Washington.

Additional RKO meetings have been called as follows: Monday and Tuesday, Chicago; Wednesday and Thursday, Memphis. Cresson Smith will preside at both meetings.

Last weekend Universal held a series of meetings to plan the new season's schedule. Carl Laemmle and Carl Jr., sought the suggestions of exchange managers, their opinions of types of pictures, personalities and stories based on their observations of the past year being specifically requested.

The sessions were presided over by James R. Grainger, general manager of distribution, and were attended, in addition to the Laemmles, by R. H. Cochrane, P. D. Cochrane, Charles B. Paine, E. T. Gomersall, F. J. A. McCarthy, Eddie Bonns, S. Wittman, James Dermody, Boston; Sydney Singerman, "Snake" Richardson of Atlanta, Leo Abrams, of Big U exchange, Paul Gulick, Ben Grimm, Andy Sharick, Eugene Cox, William Kramer and Jack Thall.

MGM Has Net Of $1,164,507

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer showed a net profit after all taxes for the 12 weeks ended November 23, 1933, of $1,164,507, the company's treasurer, David Bernstein, announced this week.

With a gross profit of $2,527,827 the company had a net profit before taxes of $1,361,996. Operating profit amounted to $1,334,288, while miscellaneous income approximated $28,000.

Warner Decision Near On Action in Erpi Case

Warner Brothers, through George Quigley, legal head, indicated Wednesday that the company would decide later in the week its action regarding the Wilmington decision in the case against Erpi whereunder Warners was ordered by the Delaware high court to continue the controversy before a board of arbitration.

Tax Levied on Erpi

Back tax assessments totaling $165,936 on Electrical Research Products, Inc., sound equipment in two Mississippi coast theatres were approved this week by the Harrison County board of supervisors in Gulfport.

MR. THALBERG'S CURRENT TEMPO
GUILDS AND REJUVENATED ACADEMY
'LITTLE MAN' - MARGARET SULLAVAN
LEDERER and THE PRODUCERS' TEARS

HIGHLIGHTING the week's production activities and plans is a wealth of news that augurs well for the spring and early summer entertainment programs. Pictures that embrace full showmanship scope, big ones as well as little, are in work or soon to go there.

Though Irving Thalberg has been back on the MGM lot for six months, he has yet to complete his first production, "Rip-Tide," starring his wife, Norma Shearer. The picture has been in the shooting stages for the past eight weeks with approximately three more yet to go before it reaches the final editing stages. To estimate the cost of this production so far at $500,000 would be conservative.

Obviously the rate of Thalberg production is not at the tempo of the era prior to his European excursion. It would appear that his current status in the Mayerland scene is yet in the process of what might be called adjustment.

Worthy of special notice, particularly in view of the marketing condition confronting short subject producers is Hal's Roach's ambitious experiment. With all the preparation, attention and care given the usual feature length screen-musical, Roach is engaged in filming what he claims will be the most elaborate and ostentatious two-reel musical to come out of Hollywood. So far untitled, it is a burlesque on grand opera and contains the Adohr Creamery Radio Grand Opera Company in the cast along with Lillian Miles, Eddie Borden, Will Stanton and Billy Gilbert, supported by a cast of more than 100 atmospheric extras which also includes a bevy of chorines portraying special dance numbers directed by Bill O'Donnell. Leigh Jason is directing from music and book by Val Burton and Will Jason.

Reported to have already spent $60,000 for research and story preparation for "Cleopatra," Cecil B. DeMille is determined to dig deeper into the history of this character to make the picture an authentic screen document. De Mille claims he has at last found and will film the answer to the riddle of Cleopatra's desertion of the Battle of Actium, which has been a mystery to every historian who has tackled the job to date. . . .

MGM Leads in Story Purchases

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer leads the field currently in story purchases for the screen with no less than ten literary works added to their production schedule within the past fortnight. These include Dickens' "David Copperfield," Kipling's "Kim" and "Captains Courageous"; "Nancy Stair," a novel by Elinor MacCartney; "The Thin Man," a mystery by Dashiell Hammett; "Calm Yourself," a modern novel by Edwin Hope; "What Every Woman Knows," the stage hit by James Barrie: "Ah Wilderness," Eugene O'Neill's latest stage hit; "Declasse" by Zoe Akins, and "All Good Americans," by Laura and S. J. Perleman. . . .

Plans for the last six pictures to be produced by Sol Wurtzel for Fox's 1933-34 program are now definitely scheduled. "Gold Rush of 1934," featuring Claire Trevor and John Boles, started Monday; "Merry Andrew," with Will Rogers, goes into production March 1: "Always Honest" with James Dunn and Sally Eilers, March 5: "They Call it Luck," starring Herbert Mundin, "Charlie Chan's Courage," featuring Walter Connolly, and "On the High Seas," featuring Mtichell and Durant, will all begin shooting on March 15. Dure Leyton is the name Fox has given Freya Leigh, who was in the staged thriller, "The Dark Tower." . . .

Paramount Shooting Six

Paramount has six features in various phases of shooting. "Melody In Spring," a comedy with music, being directed by Norman McLeod, will introduce the radio headliner Lannie Ross. Bing Crosby's "We're Not Dressing" is nearing completion as are the muchly discussed but tentatively titled "The Trumpet Blows," which stars George Raft, and "Come on Marines," a picture that has been on the company's program for several years, with Richard Arlen and Ida Lupino in the lead roles. Another comedy romance, "You're Telling Me," stars W. C. Fields, Joan Marsh, Adrienne Ames and Larry "Buster" Crabbe. "Murder At The Vanities," the Earl Carroll girl-bedecked show, which will mark the American debut of Carl Brisson, noted European actor, tops off the actual shooting picture list.

Soon to hit the stages are "Honor Bright," an original by Jack Kirkland and Melville Baker which Tay Garnett will direct, Mae West's "It Ain't No Sin," B. P. Schulberg's "Thirty Day Princess," starring Sylvia Sidney, "Cleopatra" and a Damon Runyon story titled "Little Miss Marker," another Schulberg picture which will feature Adolphe Menjou and Dorothy Dell. . . .

Having cleared all rights to "Chandu The Magician," radio serial, Sol Lesser is preparing to make a serial from the radio episodes to be produced under the title "Chandu." This will be produced in 9 episodes, and will start immediately after completion of "Peck's Bad Boy," which will be around June 1. . . .

To Brazil for Atmosphere

MGM will shortly dispatch a company to Brazil to make atmospheric background shots for its forthcoming production of "Jungle Red Man" . . . Darryl Zanuck is said to be financially interested in Rufus LeMaire's project of producing three plays on Broadway this summer. Profit in the investment (if any) will be taken out in the rights to the screen. . . . Nat Levine is taking space at the Sennett studio to produce his next serial. . . . While MGM wants William Powell for the title role of "Thin Man" the actor is stubbornly holding out for a flat price of $60,000 for the picture. . . . One major studio already has dropped negotiations for the actor's services when he failed to weaken in this price. . . .

Monogram is starting to build up its own screen personalities with the signing of Dixie Lee, wife of Bing Crosby, to a five picture contract. She will make her bow under the new deal in "Manhattan Love Song" from the story by David Silverstein and Leonard Fields. Heretofore Monogram has limited its player contracts to two picture deals except in the case of western and action stars who have been signed for the entire series. . . . Spencer Tracy will play the part of Arnold Rothstein in Fox's forthcoming screen interpretation of Mrs. Rothstein's book, "Now I'll Tell." . . .

Another Cartoon Record

Further evidence of popular favor toward the fairy tale type of cartoon shorts has been manifested in the local bookings of Ub Iwerks' "Jack and the Bean Stalk." The cartoon already has played three weeks at the Four-Star and was booked into Loew's State last week. It is slated for an indefinite run at the Filmarte, which gives the short an unprecedented record—with the exception of "Three Little Pigs"—of having played three first run theatres in the same town. . . .

With the rejuvenation of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Scientists an established reality, there is some doubt in the minds of many who joined the actors and writers guilds as to just which organization will be the safer for their allegiance. Several notables in both new organizations already have manifested a renewed interest in the influence of the revived Academy. Many who resigned are seeking reinstatement, but are wondering how they can maintain loyalty to both the Academy and their respective guilds. Although no officer of either guild will allow himself to be quoted, it is evident that the Academy's sudden reclamation of power is giving pause for thought. The idea of the Academy again becoming the clearing house for adjudication

SCOTLAND YARD'S SCOTCH ACCENT

One of the Hollywood independent producers became frantic the other day when he was unable to find a character who could play the part of a detective with a Scotch accent. When finally asked why he must have a Scotch accent, the producer explained that the story called for a detective from Scotland Yard.

Clubs Indorse Garbo Film

Initial reports from the Previewing Committee made up of representatives of eight national women's organizations, headed by Mrs. Alice Ames Winter of the Hays office, which viewed the MGM picture, "Queen Christina," starring Garbo, were unanimously favorable and will be forwarded immediatey by official committees to members of the following organizations: General Federation of Women's Clubs, California District; The D. A. R.; National Organization of New England Women; Council of Jewish Women; Los Angeles University Club; California Parent Teachers Association; National Council of Catholic Women; and the California Church Brotherhood.

In addition to these reports, the General Federation of Women's Clubs in New York had this to say, "Fine historical romance of a strange and brilliant queen of the Seventeenth Century impersonated in a really magnificent manner by the inimitable Garbo."

All doubt as to which of the two stories now being prepared would serve to present Margaret Sullavan as a star in her own right for Universal was eliminated with orders received here from Carl Laemmle, Jr., approving the script for "Little Man, What Now?" and ordering it into production February 19. "Elizabeth and Mary," scheduled as Miss Sullavan's next, will be deferred until completion of "Little Man."

The Art Directors division of the Technicians branch of the Academy entertained Robert Edmund Jones, New York stage director, designer and artist who is now wintering at Santa Barbara. Mr. Jones addressed the motion picture art directors on the art of designing and executing stage settings. The meeting took place last Friday night at a local cafe preceding a stag dinner.

Best He Could Do

Fox has asked all members of the publicity department to submit suggestions for a catchline to pin on Alice Faye similar to "the platinum blonde," MGM's tag for Miss Harlow. One of the Fox scribes thought and thought and finally at noon today he gave up with—"Why not call her 'Lily of the Vallee.'"

Last Saturday one of the local theatres booked "Henry VIII" for a Saturday matinee. Just as Anne Boleyn was about to lose her head a small voice from the balcony boomed—"Now Annie doesn't live here anymore."

Since the premier of Francis Lederer at the El Capitan theatre in "Autumn Crocus," producers are weeping bitter tears in their soup. Lederer is under contract to Radio. Paramount wants him for a picture. MGM is said to be anxious to secure him for the lead opposite Joan Crawford in her next picture following "Sadie McKee," and Warners are considering him for the lead in the most talked of literary screen purchase of the year, "Anthony Adverse."

Those Scottie Pups

Alice Brady has tilted her nose at an offer to do a stage play in London because—honest—they will not allow her four Scottie puppies to enter the country.

The current whisperings anent the vast amount of publicity given a major studio on their mysterious and un-interviewed star are very amusing.

If reports are true, it seems that the glamorous one is very friendly with a producer on the lot who whispers (sotto voice) to newspaper people that Miss Mysterious has left town. Next morning the papers are full of an elopement. Next day the producer calls his friends in great alarm saying that Miss M. has just phoned the studio saying that she is in Palm Springs. The story is denied. Next day the producer lets it be known, via secret channels, that the studio has good reason to believe that the person who phoned the studio was not Miss M.—so where is she?—so more publicity—more denials—and more rumors—and maybe more box-office.

Blondes Still Lead

From the 142 girls employed by George White for his production of "Scandals" at Fox, 63 were blondes, 52 brunettes and 27 auburned haired girls, which still gives the preference to blondes both here and in New York.

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell are set to make their long awaited film reunion in "Manhattan Love Song" from the novel by Kathleen Norris.

Reminiscent of the values of "7th Heaven," which first brought them into prominence, the story will project the stars against the background of a big city.

Though Howard Hughes has not yet returned to Hollywood, word has reached his intimate friends here to the effect that he is financing the stage production of "Queer People" shortly to be presented on Broadway. The reaction to this production will be the deciding factor of his much delayed plans for transferring the book to the screen. Hughes already has spent more than $25,000 for the book rights and salaries of writers adapting it to the screen. In the event it is a flop as a play, there is every reason to believe he will abandon the screen production definitely. In that case his first production in his comeback as a producer will be an air story based on an original by John Monk Saunders.

No Foolin'

A real free-for-all was put on at the Columbia studios during the making of "Whirlpool" this week. Four participants went to the studio hospital for repairs and one will be in for a few days. Jack Lowe, a welterweight boxer ten years ago, suffered a seriously sprained neck when struck by a piece of timber swung by another fighter. Jack Holt, star of the picture, was treated for a fractured hand. Bob Wilbur, the third casualty, was hit on the left leg so severely that an x-ray disclosed a fractured shinbone, while Jimmy Dime was kayoed by a stiff right to the chin, requiring four stitches. The scene was a general fight on the circus grounds.

LUBITSCH POINTS OUT THE BIG DIFFERENCE

One of Ernst Lubitsch's fellow directors approached him at a luncheon and asked how he was getting along in the story preparation for "The Merry Widow." Lubitsch replied, "Just fine." Seeing the conversation was not being continued by Lubitsch, the inquiring director nonchalantly drolled, "Well, I guess when the picture is finished you'll have a touch of 'Love Parade,' 'Design for Living,' 'Trouble in Paradise' and 'One Hour With You'." Lubitsch quietly responded, "The difference between you and me is that when I steal, I steal from myself."

Austrian Revolt Closes Theatres

All legitimate theatres and motion picture houses in Vienna and other cities of Austria were automatically closed on Monday and Tuesday when the Socialist rebellion assumed the proportions of a major conflict. Children and women were kept off the street, except during specified hours of the day when the women were allowed to stand in lines at food shops and stores where the sale of supplies was regulated by the government.

Whether or not theatres were destroyed in the heavy artillery fire on Tuesday is not known, but the Karl Marxhof, one of the largest apartment buildings, with a miniature theatre, was badly damaged.

The government of France late last week withdrew all restrictions and censorship on newsreel material being shipped out of the country relative to the Paris riots, newsreel offices in New York were advised.

Universal Newsreel received word that its Paris representatives had taken considerable footage on the rioting, which would be placed on the first boat bound for New York. Additional material is expected from Universal's men in England who had flown across the channel when news of the rioting had arrived. Pathe, Fox Movietone, Hearst Metrotone and Paramount offices had not been advised of the extent of their footage, but it is known many cameramen were on the spot.

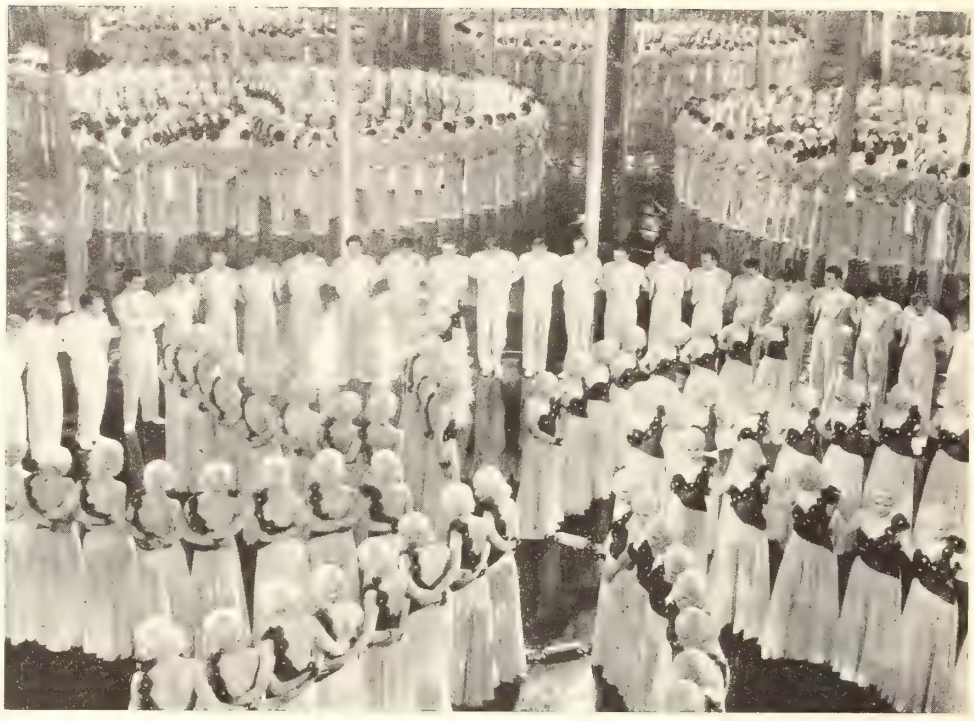
Theatre receipts in Paris were severely curtailed as a result of the riots, it was reported, business being off as much as 50 per cent in many cases.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

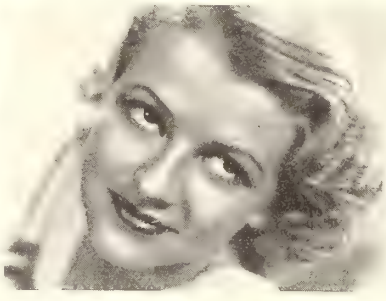
BACK TO NEW YORK. Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia, who has been consulting with Harry Cohn in Hollywood on Columbia production, at the beginning of his transcontinental air journey back to company headquarters.

TO SELL IN FAR EAST. Al Aronson (above) and Max Ehrenreich (below), who will be associated in distribution of Monogram product in Australia, by arrangement with the Ritchey Export Corporation.

VACATIONING. Colleen Moore arriving in New York for a bit of play, following completion of her work in RKO Radio's "Success Story." She is scheduled to return to Hollywood soon for further RKO Radio roles.



WITH SAMMY THE KILLER. The intrepid Clyde Beatty, who mixes his lions and tigers in the same cage with himself, rehearsing the beast that recently killed his mate in a little domestic quarrel. Nevertheless, Bad Boy Sam is appearing with Beatty in Mascot's 12-part serial, "The Lost Jungle."



A MEETING OF EXPERTS. Both in their own respective ways. Representing the so-called game of tennis is Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen who, during a stay in England, thus met up with Glen MacWilliams, Gaumont British ace cameraman then engaged in filming "Evergreen," GB production starring Jessie Matthews.

A WHOPPER. Posing with Halsey Raines and other phenomena of Florida's winter scene. Besides publicizing MGM product, Mr. Raines vacations in Florida. This, however, is his first portrait with these particular specimens.

NEW YORK IN BURBANK. Which should explain why members of Director Robert Florey's staff have so little difficulty leaning against yonder skyscrapers. Here Mr. Florey is shown directing Joan Blondell and Warren William in Warners' "Hit Me Again," which is Miss Blondell's first picture since returning to the studio following an operation for appendicitis.

TENTATIVE LIST OF LOCAL BOARDS

The motion picture Code Authority in New York and Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt are expected on Friday to announce the first definite selections of personnel for the 32 Local Grievance Boards and 32 Local Clearance Boards. The boards will be the Code Authority's medium in the field for administering the code in distribution and exhibition. Their appointment will launch operation of the industry's own code.

Since the deadline for submitting names of candidates to these boards, which was midnight of January 20, a special Code Authority committee— composed of S. R. Kent, Fox; Charles L. O'Reilly, New York TOCC; George J. Schaefer, Paramount; W. Ray Johnston, Monogram; Nathan Yamins, Allied, and Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA — have been meeting in New York almost daily selecting from the 900 names of exhibitor and exchange candidates a tentative draft for each key city board, and, according to Motion Picture Daily, this sub-committee has finally decided on the following tentative draft, which will be submitted to the Code Authority on Friday for final adoption. It was pointed out that there is nothing official or conclusive about these tentative appointments, and it is held likely that the Code Authority or the Division Administrator will make at least a few changes; besides, any of the tentative candidates may withdraw. The sub-committee's tentative draft follows:

CANCELLATION RULING IS REPORTED UPHELD

ciations may, together with the Code Authority, or separately, submit suggestions or questions to be discussed or answered at the March sessions sponsored by the NRA. Such questions or suggestions, as previously outlined, should be submitted to the NRA, Room 3057, Commerce Building, Washington, on or before February 20.

The return of unqualified assents to the motion picture code received to date by the Code Authority total 7,446, it was announced Wednesday. With two weeks still to go, by the deadline (midnight, February 28), it is expected the figure will be well over 8,000.

From the New York territory up to press time only 463 out of 1,119 theatres had sent in unqualified approval.

Authority Receives More Complaints

The Code Authority continued to receive complaints from exhibitors alleging unfair trade practices among other exhibitors. Such protests are said to have indicated doubt as to proper procedure in the filing of complaints before the final appointments of local boards are completed.

The Code Authority will refer the complaints to the Local Grievance Boards as soon as they are established.

Thus far the chief complaint appears to deal with giveaways. Overbuying so far has been the subject of but few protests. An outstanding complaint was made this week by the Roxy theatre in New York, a first run house, by its operating receiver, Howard S. Cullman, who charged the Mayfair, nearby, with distribution of free "courtesy tickets." In a letter to Mr. Rosenblatt, Mr. Cullman said this was a direct violation of Article V, E, Part 3, Section 1, of the code. He also said that the NRA insignia, the Blue Eagle, was printed on the "courtesy tickets," and this he described as a "piece of inexcusable effrontery."

Walter Reade, operator of the Mayfair, said that "as far as Cullman is concerned, he can go fly a kite. I'll run my business the way I want to, and that's that."

Cancellation Rule Reported Upheld

Reports from Washington indicated that Mr. Rosenblatt had made it clear at the last session of the Code Authority that the NRA legal department is upholding the ruling he recently made in the matter of the 10 per cent cancellation ruling on all pictures released after December 7, when the motion picture code became effective. The Code Authority had asked Mr. Rosenblatt for a definite ruling.

Mr. Rosenblatt denied Wednesday that the Code requires independent producers submit scripts or other material to the Hays Coast office for pre-censorship.

Members of the Code Authority on Tuesday notified Allied States Association of their acceptance of service in the Allied-sponsored suit of the Congress theatre, Newark third-run house, against the Code Authority. The official notification was submitted to Judge Knox and injunction proceedings are to come up before Judge Bondy in U. S. district court on Tuesday. No agreement had been reached on unification of the defense.

Ed Kuykendall, Authority member and president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, announced last week his defense will be handled by Edward G. Levy, of New Haven, counsel for the MPTOA and executive secretary of the MPTO of Connecticut.

It was announced from Washington that Abram F. Myers will act as one of the attorneys for the Congress theatre. The other attorney acting for the Allied affiliate will be Norman Samuelson, brother of Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied States Association.

State Aid in Codes Urged

The NRA, faced with an ever increasing enforcement problem under codes governing purely local enterprises, late last week urged the 48 states to enact statutes making local code violations a breach of State laws.

Relatively few states have legislative sessions in the even numbered years and several of the 1934 sessions already have been held.

Close and enthusiastic cooperation with all provisions of the motion picture code was promised this week on behalf of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, by Trem Carr, newly elected head of the organization, in Hollywood.

"The independent producers intend to give the closest of cooperation with all provisions of the motion picture code," Mr. Carr said. "We intend during the coming year to do everything in our power to increase the prestige of independent production, and to remove from this branch of the industry the stigma which certain unscrupulous individuals have made synonymous with the name 'independent'."

Coast Agency Situation

Possibility of a wholesale cancellation of agent-actor contracts unless they are approved by the California State Labor Commission loomed this week as the result of a proposed fact-finding inquiry by the commission.

The state labor laws require that all employee-agent contracts be approved by the commission before becoming valid. It is reported that not more than 10 per cent of the present agent contracts have been thus approved.

The written request made last week by the Code Authority of the Legitimate Theatre to the motion picture Code Authority for cooperation with them in protesting to the Federal Radio Commission against "free" radio presentations is expected to be taken up at this week's session.

Meanwhile, and in addition to his duties as Division Administrator for the amusement industries, Sol A. Rosenblatt early this week plunged into a study of the highly disturbed taxicab situation in New York. Mr. Rosenblatt is an official in charge of transportation for the NRA.

Six Warner Trade Shows To Be Held on March 6

With 16 Warner Brothers-First National pictures completed and awaiting release, Warner this week announced a national trade showing of at least six of their current product, to be held March 6.

These trade showings, which will be held at every one of the Warner branches throughout the United States and Canada, with exhibitors in each locality attending, will include the following features: "Wonder Bar," "As the Earth Turns," "Journal of a Crime," "Harold Teen," "Jimmy the Gent" and "Gambling Lady."

SOUND INDEPENDENTS' MOVEMENT GROWING

95 Companies Asked to Join; Leaders Say Balancing Devices Avoid Any Method Involved in Tri-Ergon Claim

Replies to invitations to join, indicate that a comprehensive organization of independent sound equipment manufacturers soon will be effected. More than 95 independent companies were asked to unite in the movement, which was begun several weeks ago in New York following efforts of Tri-Ergon to excite exhibitors over flywheel patent claims. These manufacturers are to form the Talking Picture Equipment Manufacturers' Division of the Entertainment Apparatus Manufacturers' Association, the name decided upon by the 20 manufacturers' representatives who attended the first meeting.

The announced purpose of the association, at least at the beginning, is to present a united front against any attempt of Tri-Ergon to extend its patent claims to independent equipment. The organization is thus a direct outgrowth of the Scranton, Pa., decision in a federal suit brought by Tri-Ergon against two theatre groups using RCA sound-on-film apparatus. Appeal from this decision, which asserted the balancing device employed to be in infringement of a Tri-Ergon patent, was taken immediately by the plaintiffs, Wilmer & Vincent and Altoona Publix, and is pending before the U. S. court of appeals in Philadelphia.

Charge Ruling Used As Scare

It is declared by those directing organization of the independent manufacturers, that the balancing mediums generally used avoid any method involved in the Tri-Ergon claim, and that Tri-Ergon has been using the decision of a lower court to scare makers of sound apparatus into the payment of royalties. This charge is based on the recent issuance by Tri-Ergon of letters warning exhibitors of the Scranton decision.

Meanwhile, Tri-Ergon's appeal from a decision dismissing its suit against New York exhibitors and distributors is yet to be heard. This was adjourned this week to March 6, in supreme court, appellate division, first judicial district. Louis Nizer of the Film Boards of Trade is counsel for the theatre owners and distributors.

In addition to its purpose to defend independent equipment in case of litigation, the association has announced that it also will conduct "an educational campaign to theatrical exhibitors and other users of our products," and that it will examine "the code so that it will be fair to all independent manufacturers." An initiation fee of $25 is charged, with the size of the membership fee to be decided later.

Open to Other Independents

Not only manufacturers of soundheads and complete sound reproduction equipment may join, but all independent makers of amplifiers, speakers, tubes and other sound accessories are eligible.

The organization committee consists of H. J. Maul of the LeRoy Sound Equipment Corporation, Rochester, N. Y.; E. Oliver of the Oliver Manufacturing Company, Cleveland; James E. Nestell of New York City, representative of the Weber Machine Corporation of Rochester, N. Y.; and J. A. Tanney of the S. O. S. Corporation, New York. Mr. Maul is executive in immediate charge of activities pending incorporation and election of officers. Samuel Edelstein, New York attorney, has been retained as legal counsel.

No further plans beyond those already represented in pending court action are indicated by Tri-Ergon, which is represented in the United States by the American Tri-Ergon Corporation, a subsidiary of Tri-Ergon Holding A. G. of St. Gall, Switzerland, the patents of which are controlled in the United States by William Fox.

Jerome, 74, Dead; Owned Technicolor

William Travers Jerome, New York's famous "raiding" district attorney of 30 years ago and at one time the controlling head of Technicolor, Inc., died Tuesday at his home in New York after a two weeks' siege of pneumonia. He was 74 years of age.

After graduation from Columbia Law School in 1884, Mr. Jerome served his legal apprenticeship with the law firm of Stanley, Clark & Smith and then formed a law partnership with Daniel Nason. In 1888 he was appointed an assistant district attorney. From that time on, he became increasingly famous for his fearless prosecution of criminal cases in the New York courts and for his sharp battle with the forces of Tammany.

As district attorney the raids he conducted on gambling resorts and places of vice in New York City were sensational. With a squad of police he would enter a resort, make his arrests and try and convict his prisoners "on the spot." By no means a "reformer," he did not trust the New York police department to get prisoners into court without first accepting bribes and other forms of graft.

In 1920, Mr. Jerome backed and acquired control of the Technicolor process of making motion pictures in color. For eight years he watched his concern struggle along without profit, but suddenly the development of sound made Technicolor a motion picture asset. In April of 1929, Technicolor, Inc., was rated a $22,000,000 firm.

Although the size of the fortune which he left is not known, he is known to have been an exceedingly wealthy man. Mr. Jerome is survived by his son and an older brother and five grandchildren.

Re-Issues Washington Subject

Vitaphone is re-issuing the short subject, "Washington, the Man and the Capitol," during the week of Washington's Birthday. The subject was made two years ago for the Washington Bi-Centennial celebration.

BOOK REVIEW

ABRIDGED SCIENTIFIC PUBLICATIONS, from the Kodak Research Laboratories, Vol. XV, 1931-32. Rochester: Eastman Kodak Company, 1933. 311 pp. and index. 6½ x 9¼.

This is the latest compendium from this source, of scientific papers on developments, optical, mechanical and chemical, in the world of photography. As a digest of thought and experiment, the volumes issued under this title represent a generous service to the craft on the part of the Eastman organization, with selection of subjects obviously based on only their scientific import. The motion picture, of course, has been getting an increasing amount of attention, and in the present volume ten papers of the 61 are directly concerned with cinematography, while many others, involving such matters as the chemistry of emulsion reaction and development, are naturally closely related.

All the papers have been previously published, and since their original appearance occurred in 1931 and 1932, the compilation does not bring forth any information, heretofore not readily available. Much of the contents, indeed, is from the Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. However, 25 scientific publications have contributed material, and authoritatively abridged as they are, they form a handbook of more or less permanent value for those deeply interested in photographic method, optics and chemistry.

Because its source is such that it may not have come to the attention of American motion picture workers, the title, "Making a Fade-Out by After-Treatment," is specifically pointed out. The process is purely chemical in the development of the edited negative. Photomicrography involving use of ultra-violet rays is discussed in two papers from different sources. In addition to the necessary diagrams and charts, photographs reproduced in halftone are generously employed for illustration.

Lasky Approves Unit Production

Unit production and "different" story treatment are the two most important factors contributing to improving motion picture quality, according to Jesse L. Lasky, who said in Hollywood Tuesday that most unit producers feel that mass production is responsible for "some of the poor pictures now being produced."

Mr. Lasky's remarks were intended as a reply to Samuel Goldwyn's recent declarations against mass production and dearth of story material. Mr. Lasky said Mr. Goldwyn "has brought some truths to light" and that he agrees with him in theory in some of his objections to mass production.

"But," he declared, "as a student of film and theatre economics, I realize that there must be some form of modified quantity production to supply some 20,000-odd theatres in America. Most of us feel that mass production is responsible for some of the poor pictures being produced. Mass production, with its handicaps of company policy, release dates, minimum budgets, set schedules of production and star assignments, gave birth to the program picture.

"Unlike Goldwyn," he concluded, "I believe there are many times 50 good story possibilities hovering around Hollywood."

DON'T SWALLOW ALLEGED RESEARCH, JOHN CASEY, FORMER CENSOR, WARNS

Speakers at National Board of Review Conference Attack Research Council Conclusions; Decry Political Censorship

Charging the Motion Picture Research Council with selecting abnormal, degenerate and institutional children for the basis of its studies published last summer under the title, "Our Movie Made Children," John M. Casey, former license commissioner of Boston, told the Nineteenth Annual Luncheon of the National Board of Review in New York last Friday that he could not "think that the studies made by the eminent authorities for this study have been accurately recorded."

Criticizing the book, the Research Council and Henry James Forman who edited it, Mr. Casey made emphatic protest.

"Institutional and delinquent children are not the majority of children seeking motion pictures," he said. "I do not think the public should swallow such alleged 'researches' hook, line and sinker. It is humanly impossible, I feel, to separate the influences of the motion picture from all of the other influences that are conditioning factors in the lives of young children."

In complete concurrence with Mr. Casey's denunciation, Dr. George Kirchwey, the National Board chairman, said that "it is our 'Home-made' children they ought to write about."

"It is the home, not the school, and still less the motion picture, that is the character-forming agency. This book contains wishful, not scientific, conclusions," Dr. Kirchwey declared.

"I don't believe the films stimulate boys to run away from home. What they do is to satisfy the craving to run away."

Called "Self-Seekers"

Following Dr. Kirchwey, Sol. A. Rosenblatt, NRA Division Administrator for amusements, referred to some censor groups and would-be teachers of "public morals" as "organized drives against the best interests of this industry."

"They are only self-seekers—racketeers would be a more appropriate word," Mr. Rosenblatt asserted.

"The Federal Government, in its NRA program, is not interested in censorship," Mr. Rosenblatt said. "We are interested merely in establishing a liaison between the public and the industry. And the problem of the better screen is one of better public taste."

Bishop William McConnell, resident bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, Dr. Kirchwey, Elmer Rice, playwright, and many others were emphatic in their denunciations of all forms of censorship.

Bishop McConnell, in launching his attack on both organized and unorganized censor groups, expressed a doubt as to whether the nation's previewing groups—those which "select" motion pictures and do not obliterate them with cuts to a point where they virtually are unintelligible—really "understand what service they are rendering to the motion picture industry."

Speakers and guests at the 25th annual meeting of the National Board of Review, held Friday at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, were, left to right: (front row) Terry Ramsaye, editor of Motion Picture Herald; Tullio Carminati, stage and screen actor; Joan Lowell, adventure authoress who just has returned from the wilds of Guatemala where she filmed an adventure picture for RKO Van Beuren; Mrs. Leonard I. Hill, chairman of the woman's committee; Colleen Moore, motion picture actress; Frank Buck, wild animal hunter who has just completed filming his book "Wild Cargo" for RKO Van Beuren in the jungles of Malay; and Leon Franconi, one of the first editors of Pathe News. (Back row) Judge John R. Davies; Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA head for the motion picture industry; Hal Le Roy, dancer; Dr. George W. Kirchwey, chairman; Elmer Rice, playwright; John M. Casey, former censor at Boston; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Dr. A. A. Brill, and Wilton A. Barrett, secretary of the National Board of Review.

"It is easy for us, and other groups, to think that there is more danger in things than there really is," he said. "It is comparatively easy for any one individual to express an opinion; it is more than difficult for a group to give an absolutely unbiased opinion.

"The screen cannot be changed overnight, no matter what we may think of it. The various ingredients which go to make up a screen play cannot be altered—that is certain—but the previewing groups can, by persistent effort, help to rid us of an evil which is embodied in the present form of censorship, and put pictures on a basis of selection by people who have the common good of their communities at heart rather than censorious opinions of a few who are trying to put themselves into the limelight."

Patience Needed, Says Ramsaye

Terry Ramsaye, editor of Motion Picture Herald, who spoke before Mr. Rice, declared that "the motion picture really is much better than it looks."

"The motion picture has been under the attentions of the National Board of Review for twenty-five years, and I have been working on it and in it and about it for twenty years—we have done our best, and now look at the damn thing!

"However, we all need a little patience. We who think we are doing things, both inside and outside the business, are really only personal manifestations of forces that are always at work in every human endeavor. When I compare the progress and the records of the motion picture with other American industries I feel rather better about the screen—and I am not going to make remarks at this time about bankers either.

"The motion picture is really doing rather well, in spite of all that is found to be the matter with it. Let us consider for a moment the fact that we have been printing books for some five hundred years, and yet some few books are even yet slightly short of perfection.

"The technology of pictures is fast changing, and when I was in Hollywood recently I discovered that the production business actually is getting itself into the frame of mind where it is beginning to think about making pictures for the customers again.

"I asked them about this, and they seemed very much interested," he said.

Mr. Ramsaye said that there are about six

'ALMOST TOO GOOD FOR THE SCREEN'

Is the Verdict of Benjamin DeCasseres on "No More Ladies," A. E. Thomas' Play; Noted Essayist and Critic Comments Also on Other Current Broadway Offerings

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

NO MORE LADIES

There dropped out of the skies the most brilliant comedy—and also one of the most brilliantly acted and directed—since the days of Oscar Wilde, in "No More Ladies," hilariously written by A. E. Thomas and beautifully staged by Harry Wagstaff Gribble.

From the rise of the curtain to the last line, when Marcia Warren says to her husband she will tell him on their golden wedding anniversary—which is 50 years away—whether she has been unfaithful to him or not, the audience rocks, roars, chuckles, and between conniptions wreathes its mugs in brain-smiles.

A picture? Almost too good for the screen. It is simpler than "Design for Living" and more completely turns the old darned and re-darned sock of sex inside out.

It's High Ritz, where nothing worries anybody but epigrams, Courvoisier and the triangle—quadrangle in this instance.

Locales: New York and the Southampton, L. I., colony. In the first act Sheridan Warren (the handsome but somewhat static Melvyn Douglas), a high-toned libertine, courts Marcia Townsend in a most original manner—suave, sophisticated, paradoxical.

In the second act, after being married for some months, they both "go off the reservation." The third act is the curious "reconciliation"—slick comedy-drama.

But the high spot is the gorgeous speeches of old lady Townsend, Marcia's grandmother, played by Lucille Watson. This is high comedy at its final peak—an old Victorian gone modern with a bang. Lucille Watson is the Duse of laughter.

Then we have Rex O'Malley as the gay wife-seducer, and Louis Hector, who does a thumpingly funny Earl of Moulton.

The score of facets of this glittering play cannot be described here. The boys out in Hollywood are going to have a treat reading the script.

"No More Ladies" will call for Lubitsch or his equal and a smart cast. My only fear is that these epigrams and this literate dialogue are a little too high for the picture road. I hope I'm wrong.

BY YOUR LEAVE

Following immediately upon the crash hit of "No More Ladies" came another laugh-wallop. "By Your Leave," by Gladys Hurlbut and Emma Wells, is along somewhat similar lines. It is not as verbally brilliant as the Thomas comedy, but contains more straight picture material.

This opus concerns Mr. and Mrs. Smith of the suburbs. Henry Smith (Howard Lindsay—superb) is pretty well house-bored. He has developed a yen for Balzac and sex-books. He is Babbitt with a roving complex. A live, vital creation.

His wife, Ellen (played by Dorothy Gish, still lovely to behold), is satisfied. There is a youngster. She doesn't care about roving.

For good comic stuff we have the domineering type of nurse and servant, with a female culture-hound who lives next door and her Una Merkelese daughter.

In blows a "Scotch explorer" for dinner. Boredom increases—also the laughter of the audience at Henry's grouchy ways.

So—Henry proposes to Ellen that they each take a week off in New York at separate hotels to "freshen up."

Henry at one hotel, after four days of stag parties, gets a girl in a room. But after a stunningly original and comic series of shy sex-manoeuvres he bolts—still faithful to his altar vows.

Ellen, however, meets the Scotchman in her hotel suite, has a real adventure with him—and regrets nothing.

Third act—both at home. Henry tells of his terrible fiasco. And Ellen tells not a word about her affair with the Scotchman—as in the ending of "No More Ladies." Where ignorance is bliss—kiss out.

Moral: husbands are a pretty safe bet; but wives?—well, keep your eye on them!

An amusing picture for the Domestic Problem Circuit.

RATINGS OF PLAYS FOR THE SCREEN

Plays of the New York Stage discussed by Benjamin DeCasseres in this issue have been given the following ratings by him as possible screen material:

"No More Ladies"—80 per cent.
"By Your Leave"—90 per cent.
"And Be My Love"—50 per cent.
"John Brown"—20 per cent.
"The Wooden Slipper"—20 per cent.

AND BE MY LOVE

In this tissue-thin comedy by Lewis Galantiere and John Houseman I can easily visualize Herbert Marshall, Roland Young and two of the swankiest and most vivacious women you can name in the Hollywood colony—say, Genevieve and Glenda.

For that's the kind of play that this is. It's a thread of a domestic comedy woven around the character of an unbelievable Casanova of a fellow, played by the English comedian, Barry Jones, not any too well or convincingly.

It is Lily Cahill—a stunning blonde and a very lark of a woman—who walked off with any bouquets that may have been awarded for this flop—flopped because really nothing naughty happened. And what's a London carriage-trade comedy without something doing?

Lawrence Brooks is a bach. He keeps a journal of his conquests—about 146 in four years. He's now dallying with the wife of his best friend, George Balow, a trusting mid-Victorian husband who doesn't look after the antics of his romantic-sentimental-Junoesquely gorgeous wife (La Cahill) any too closely. This Jane Barlow is a delicious creation.

Then there is Elsa Frost, a nice of Barlow. She's from Texas. The Brooks fellow really falls for her (played very well by Renée Gadd) after a lot of near-ripping piffle.

There is a glowing smart-set dialogue. With a cast such as I have indicated it would make a crepitating little picture for the thirty-cent Intelligentsia.

Picture value, 50 per cent.

JOHN BROWN

I do not recall that old John Brown has ever made his appearance in pictures. It is pobably a difficult subject to handle because of the Southern trade.

"John Brown," by Ronald Gow, with George Abbott playing the hero of Harper's Ferry, lay a-mouldering in its grave after two performances, and whether or not its soul will go marching on to Hollywood is, I thould say, decidedly improbable.

What a tremendous epic the life of John Brown (1800-1859) would make in pictures! And with Walter Huston as Brown!

Picture value (as it stands), 20 per cent.

THE WOODEN SLIPPER

This play of theatrical life with a Cinderella theme woven around it by Sampson Raphaelson—produced by Dwight Deere Wiman—should have been better. It may be considerably better when it is re-cooked into about 525 scenes in Hollywood. It folded on Broadway from thin and mediocre treatment, so to speak.

The celebrated Zigurny family has a young daughter—supposed to be homely, but that's all in the make-up—studying acting in Paris. There's another daughter, too. The plain one is ditched by a banker's son in Budapest. Skips back to Paris, and on the train gets adored by a cook. So the great Zigurny girl goes into the kitchen.

The cook wins out. She is to be cashier in his Parisian café. There are a lot of other characters who might be shined up for laughs. Ross Alexander was good—the one bright spot.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

COINCIDENT with the recent premiere in New York of Sam Goldwyn's "Nana," in which the glamorous Russian Anna Sten is starred, a group of prominent local White Russians—members of the Czarist regime—prevailed upon the faithful at the Russian Cathedral in New York to spend an hour in solemn prayer for the success of Anna in "Nana." It was all quite considerate of them, and the praying got quite some space in the newspapers. But, Miss Sten's picturization of "Nana" the street-walker was hardly one for which prayers for success should be offered.

Anyway, as we understand it, Miss Sten is a subject of the current Communistic regime of Russia. The Communists and the Czaristic White Russians are not what one might call too friendly toward each other.

The Warner studio in California has sent to President Roosevelt a large "telegram" on parchment, measuring some twelve feet by six feet, and signed by every player on the lot in appreciation of the backing the Administration has given the motion picture industry. Just a little of the players' own private appreciation must have been for the President's order of late November which postponed enactment of that clause in the film code pertaining to excessive salary payments to stars and other talent.

APPARENTLY suppressions of undesirable theatricals are not what they used to be. Strong blackthorn shillalahs bouncing off the cracked heads of performers have given way to resolutions of condemnation on paper. In striking contrast to this milder form of protest now being voiced variously in the field, and leveled principally against traveling burlesque shows and socalled "hygienic" sex films, was the somewhat forceful suppression of a play, called "Twin Rivals," back in the days of '76 when the Liberty Boys had a hand in things.

The Chapel Street Theatre in downtown New York was the place, and, so the story goes, "Many inhabitants of this City thought it highly improper that such Entertainments should be exhibited at this Time of Public Distress, when great numbers of poor people can scarce find Means of subsistence. A rumor was spread about town that if the play be given, the Audience will meet with some Disturbance from the Multitude."

The New York Post Boy, important newspaper of the day, reported on its front page of May 8, 1766, that the rumor "prevented the greatest Part of those who intended to have been there, from going; however, many people came, and the Play was begun; but was soon interrupted by the Multitude, who burst open the Doors. A Boy had his skull fractured . . . several others were dangerously Hurt."

The New York Gazette, on the same day, said: "Those were best off who got out first, either by jumping out of the Windows, or making their way through the Doors, as the lights were soon extinguished, and both Inside and Outside were soon torn to pieces."

"The Multitude," continued the Post Boy, "immediately demolished the House and carried the pieces to the Common (now City Hall Park), where they consumed them in a Bonfire."

But the irony of the tale is that some commentators attribute that he-man suppression to the Sons of Liberty, "who, as soon as the lights were out, began picking pockets, stealing watches and crying 'Liberty!' 'Liberty!'"

FRANCO-GERMAN AGREEMENT GIVES AMERICAN PRODUCT COLD SHOULDER

Import Restrictions Are Lifted on Short Product, Silent Films, Newsreels, Advertising Reels and Musicals Under Pact

[By Special Berlin Correspondence]

The German and the French film industry were always eager to create a situation which might satisfy both sides. But the attempts undertaken at several times did not satisfy the needs of one or the other country and led to a state of dissatisfaction.

With the arrival of the new Government in Germany, which fundamentally reorganized the political and economical structure of the film industry, it was clear that the export branch of the industry would be reconsidered. The present calamity of the French film industry, which led to a shifting of the production activity insofar as the majority of films is made by minor film producers in this season, unintentionally has prepared the way for a cooperation with the German film industry.

A film agreement built up strictly upon the principle of reciprocity, therefore, meant nothing else but to make both ends meet. In spite of several agreements, signed in previous years, film exchange between the two countries did not appeal to the demands of both industries.

Americans the Losers

The American film which was sufficiently represented in Germany as well as in France throughout the past seasons did not favor a Franco-German film agreement and the American film at all times has been at the top of the films imported into Germany. After the closing down of the Paramount studios at Joinville-Paris no American made film was shown in Germany in an original German version and the dubbed films reduced the popularity of the American film. But, and this is very important for the development of Franco-German film relations, the cessation of the American film production in France and, at the same time, of the production of German film versions, non-synchronized, paved the way for a Franco-German film understanding. The wonderfully equipped French studios remained empty for months and minor producers came up and filled the place Paramount had left in Paris. The possibility of producing a remarkable number of German versions, shorts, newsreels and so on, which on the basis of a Franco-German film agreement would be absorbed by the German market, would fill the studios again and give work to the unemployed in the French industry.

On the other side it was necessary for Germany, and a vital question for the future of the German film, to renew, especially under the prevailing conditions, film relations with a country which represents four thousand halls and is accustomed to seeing German films.

Under these circumstances both countries had a vital and keen interest to sign a film agreement based on strict reciprocity which, in other words, means a preferential treatment of German films in France and French films in Germany, of course at the expense of the hitherto greatest film exporter to both countries—the United States.

The Official Text

The official text of the film pact runs as follows:

1. Twenty feature films of more than 900 meters each with German dialogue (speech or songs) made in France by a French producing company or in cooperation with a German producer may be imported into Germany free from any restrictions, and may be shown in Germany. They must not be dubbed; picture and sound must have been recorded simultaneously.

2. Twenty German feature films may be exported to France under the same conditions.

3. In addition to these films 15 French pictures of an average length in a post-synchronized German version may be shown in Germany under the condition that the synchronization has been performed in German studios. This decision remains subject to the conditions still in full force regulating the dubbing of foreign films in Germany.

4. Corresponding stipulations are made for post-synchronized German films in France.

5. Shorts superior to 900 meters (2950 feet)—including silent films, news reels, advertising films and musical films—will be free from any import restrictions.

6. Films with German dialogue or song with superimposed French titles will be free from any import restriction, if they are shown in no more than 5 cinemas within the borders of Paris (Department of the Seine) and 10 cinemas in all French departments altogether. Changes in this direction can be approved by the French Government.

7. Films with French dialogue or song with superimposed German titles will be free from any import restriction, if they are exhibited in only a corresponding numbers of cinemas in Germany and if the German Government should think it appropriate to make a similar arrangement for her country.

8. The German films to be shown in France may be made subject to a provision, corresponding to the German law, according to which a foreign film must be exhibited in a public show before its distribution.

9. In consideration of the fact that there is no restriction for the export of money in France and the present film pact is built up on the principle of strict reciprocity, the German Government will undertake suitable steps in this direction in order to provide those companies and distributors with a sufficient number of foreign currency export concessions to put to account with French producers sums which derive from the selling and the distribution of all films which are listed in the above mentioned paragraphs.

10. This agreement will be in force to July 31, 1934. If, however, one of the partners of this pact should upset or overthrow the system of strict reciprocity, the other partner gets the right to withdraw from the pact with a two months' notice.

U. S. Films Out of Consideration

Several days after the signing of the pact by high French diplomatic leaders (President Albert Lebrun, Paul Boncour, minister for foreign affairs, and the ministers for commerce and industry, education, and interior, and on the German side by Mr. Foerster, German ambassador in Paris), the head organization of the French Industry, Chambre Syndicale de la Cinématographie Francaise, held a meeting in Paris and discussed the possibilities of the film pact with Germany. At the end of the conference a petition was sent to the ministries which had taken part in the elaboration of the agreement, protesting against the text of the pact and claiming that it would be inadvisable for French film producers to produce German versions of their films only on account of the signed film pact.

The pact leaves the American film out of consideration and gives a pronounced preferential treatment to the French film in Germany and to the German film in France. The American film is furthermore subject to the existing quota restrictions and to the foreign money embargo prevailing in Germany. The result of the pact will be an increased production of German versions in France and vice versa.

FRENCH PICTURE AIDS FRIENDSHIP

In Paris last week opened a talking film, "From Wilson to Roosevelt," which reviews, for the edification of the French population, Franco-American relations from 1914 to the New Deal and today. It is deliberately designed to promote friendship between the two countries and has received commendation from government officials. Opening with the war period, the film moves to prosperity, Calvin Coolidge and the Lindbergh flight. The economic crisis is pictured sympathetically, with the conclusion showing the NRA flag fading into the American flag.

MARTIN AND OSA JOHNSON, AND BOB MORENO, SOUND ENGINEER, WITH SOME BELGIAN CONGO PYGMIES

JOHNSONS' AIRPLANES AWE SAVAGES IN SOUND FILM TREK TO WILD AFRICA

Film Explorers, in Their First Word to America Since Start a Year Ago, Tell Herald of New Jungle Conquests

A year ago the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, a friend of years and occasional motion picture associate, bade goodby to Martin and Osa Johnson as they were setting off on their fifth African picture expedition.

This time the adventurers had spent their American sojourn learning to fly and were starting back into the blue of the Never Never Land equipped not only with sound pictures devices but also a pair of planes, determined to see Africa as it never had been seen before.

A few weeks later the Johnsons took off from their villa home in the British little city of Nairobi, and went winging over the horizon. The first word that has come to America from them since, is the following letter, in which Mr. Johnson merrily remembers the editor's charge that the explorer always had his eye so full of zebras he couldn't see Africa.—TERRY RAMSAYE.

"Thought you might be interested in knowing what Osa and I are doing on our present African safari. Of course, I know what you think we are doing—that is, photographing the remaining zebras that we missed on the previous trips. But actually we are not. As a matter of fact we have only photographed a few thousand zebra on this trip and it's hard to keep from photographing them because the whole continent is over-run with these striped jackasses that were simply made to be photographed.

"On our previous trips to Africa, Osa and I have wanted to visit many of the far-off lakes and wild sections that it was almost impossible to get to, as it would have meant months and months of cutting through jungle, transporting supplies and overcoming so many difficulties that we could never find the time, energy and money to devote to it. Now with the airplanes we are discovering a wealth of beautiful and interesting places, some of them never visited before by white men.

"We have two of the finest airplanes that it is possible for money to buy—Sikorsky amphibians. My big ship, which we have named "Osa's Ark," is painted with zebra stripes and is the type used by the Pan American Airways in South America where they carry twelve people. We have cut the seating capacity down to seven so that we have more baggage room. We don't need many black boys for airplane safaris as our big plane has two comfortable beds and we carry a small gasoline stove for cooking. So we can decide on a moment's notice that we want to go some place, pack our cameras, guns and provisions and away we go.

"Osa's plane is smaller—built for five passengers with a large baggage allowance. It is painted with giraffe spots and we call it the 'Spirit of Africa.'

Savages Awed by Airplanes

"We have been out here just a year now and have seen more of Africa than in all of the twelve years of previous experience. Much of the interesting country consists of fine, large plains so that landing fields do not bother us very much. Then there are several big rivers that are suitable for landing and up north we have found some lakes which no white person has ever explored. Here we are getting many unusual things for our films—new types of savages, wild and in most cases unfriendly, but their awe of the airplanes makes them safe as long as we don't stay too long among them.

"Now we are finding game pockets where the animals have never been disturbed, and our aerial views are the most beautiful of any scenes we have ever made.

Pygmies, Induced to Take Ride, Become Pride of Their Tribe; Game Pockets Never Before Disturbed Are Photographed

"Just recently we went on a safari into the Belgian Congo. We first sent motor cars with two white men and nine black boys to a point in the Ituri Forest where I knew there were several clearings fit to use in preparing a landing field. One of the white men, my German mechanic, had been there several years ago so we were able to agree on the exact location. The cars were over two weeks reaching the place; then with the help of the forest savages, they cleared a space 700 yards by 40 yards.

Pygmies Go for Rides

When we judged that enough time had elapsed to make a field, we set off in the S-38—Vern Carstens, our pilot, Osa and I. The maps that we have been able to secure out here are extremely inaccurate but with my thirteen years' knowledge of the country combined with the marvelous navigation skill of Vern Carstens, we checked up hour by hour on rivers and lakes and mountains; and then the big thrill came when, after six hours and thirty-five minutes in the air, we found our improvised airport just below us. Our men had a big smudge fire burning, from which Vern got his wind direction, and we came down to a perfect, though somewhat bumpy, landing.

"The natives here had never seen an airplane before and they all rushed out to examine it and ourselves carefully. Hundreds of little pygmies came out of the

BRINGING THEM IN FOR "DEVIL TIGER"

Transporting Jungle to Theatre Front, Radio Tieup With Thousands of Letters From "Kids," and Circusing Brings Records

Behind the two-year period opening day record of the Rialto theatre at the first showing of "Devil Tiger" is a story of circus showmanship that succeeded in penetrating the New York public's motion picture consciousness in myriad ways, a publicity campaign that at least in large part is as adaptable to the lesser situations as it was to New York's Broadway.

The result was attested by the establishment of a Rialto top attendance mark for two years when the production first was shown last Wednesday and by the largest ticket figure since the house reopened under its new policy.

The picture was circused in a big way. Every exploitation and publicity angle was employed to put the picture over; newspapers, radio, huge signs and posters, window-displays and auto-truck banners.

Filmed by Clyde Elliott

Filmed in the Malaysian jungles by Clyde E. Elliott, who also directed "Bring 'Em Back Alive," the new production was given a generous share of pictorial space in newspapers from the start. The thrilling animal fights, highlights of the screen production, were reprinted in most of the New York dailies. One pictorial weekly is devoting an entire page to similar scenes from the picture. All this in addition to publicity stories appearing on the motion picture pages.

Souvenir enlargements of an exceptional still showing the tiger star of the film emerging from the water were sent to all critics and editors.

Thousands of Children's Letters

A radio tieup with Uncle Don over WOR and with four of his seven sponsors netted thousands of letters from children in the New York area. A party was given at the theatre last Saturday, at 9 a.m. for 1500 children who wrote in about the picture.

One of the sponsors, Postum, gave window displays and party souvenirs to the children. The Reid Ice Cream Company, another sponsor, provided its product for the event. Bond Bakeries, also a sponsor of Uncle Don, gave displays on their wagons and in their stores with cards urging attendance at the Rialto. The broadcasts began February 1 and continued nightly till February 12. There was no cost to the theatre and the special showing of "Devil Tiger" for the children did not interfere with the regular performances.

Variegated Displays

Many were the displays used. There was a graphic, colorful 96-sheet on the Rialto Building front. A "Devil Tiger" exhibit in the alleyway adjoining the Rialto consisted of jungle and animal den effects, a 16 mm. reduction of the screen trailer on the picture, and the usual paraphernalia of spears and other weapons. There were photostats of Mr. Elliott's affidavit to the effect that the entire picture was made in the Asiatic jungles. Two hundred stills made in the jungles were displayed on the front of the house. The Elliott affidavit was displayed also in windows obtained through the Uncle Don tieup.

Large-sized colored enlargements of animals in combat were displayed on the top of the marquee and on the hanging sign; these were illuminated and wired for sound effects.

THEATRE FRONT MADE JUNGLE FOR FOX'S "DEVIL TIGER"

Twelve-Page Press Sheet

An elaborate 12-page press sheet was issued by the Fox advertising department. Abundant color was used on the cover and in the inside to add a striking note to the book in consonance with the nature of the production itself. Fifteen scenes recommended by the press book and for which stills are available were "blown up" and used at the theatre.

Other paper used included 24, 6 and 1-sheets which were "sniped" in the New York area.

The displays helped attract throngs which necessitated a queue curled from the Rialto box office up Broadway and around 43rd Street.

The campaign was not strictly a metropolitan ballyhoo; it was fashioned with other situations in mind as well.

Plan Story Awards

The Catholic Press Association of Augusta, Ga., has voted to post three awards of $1,000 each for the best screen stories written during the year. The award is designed to raise the moral tone of motion pictures.

Opens Coast Office

Massce and Company, film forwarders, a New York firm, has opened an office in Hollywood.

Laemmle, On Air, Remembers When

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, spoke over Station WEAF, from New York, Tuesday evening, in the second of a series of informal talks on the motion picture. Celebrating the 50th anniversary of his arrival in the United States from Germany as a boy of 17, Mr. Laemmle devoted part of his talk to a comparison of the New York of 50 years ago with the city today, boasting its mechanical aids and the motion picture.

The Universal executive reviewed briefly the highlights of his entrance into the motion picture business, then just beginning, in Oshkosh, Wis., first, then in Chicago, in 1906. He mentioned some of the since famous personalities he brought to the screen in the early days, including Florence Lawrence, Mary Pickford, Annette Kellerman, Lois Wilson, Wallace Reid, Rudolph Valentino, Mildred Harris, Lon Chaney

Asked by the announcer which of his pictures has given him the greatest satisfaction, Mr. Laemmle replied, "Perhaps 'All Quiet on the Western Front' because of the influence it exerted all over the world against war." Noting that the introduction of sound increased the cost of production, Mr. Laemmle mentioned that "The King of Jazz" cost $1,700,000 and "All Quiet on the Western Front" $1,400,000.

BUILDING OF A NEW PERSONALITY

Samuel Goldwyn's Campaign on Anna Sten Made Russian Star Familiar to Americans Prior to Screen Appearance

ANNA STEN, SAMUEL GOLDWYN'S NEW STAR, IN UNITED ARTISTS' "NANA"

Just how much is in a name, when showmanship attends to the matter, is evidenced in the comprehensive campaign of Samuel Goldwyn which made Anna Sten a familiar name to the entire show-going public of America before she even stepped before the camera.

Two years ago the name Anna Sten never had been heard by anyone in this country except Mr. Goldwyn. Miss Sten, Russian born of a Swedish mother, had made a considerable name for herself locally in Moscow as a film actress and stage player. Later she transferred her activities to Germany and France and it was when she was playing in Germany that Mr. Goldwyn, seeing her picture in the rotogravure section of an American paper, immediately cabled a foreign representative to place her under contract at all costs. Though she spoke German, French and Russian fluently, Miss Sten had not a word of English in her vocabulary. Mr. Goldwyn was apprised of this fact, but it made no difference to him. He would have her learn English under the best teachers Hollywood could provide.

Still Unseen in Small Towns

Miss Sten arrived in America a little less than two years ago unknown and unsung. Today, although she has made but one picture in this country, her name is a byword not only in the large city, but also in the small, where her "fans" still are awaiting release of her first American picture, "Nana."

Reputedly, more than $300,000 went into Miss Sten's training before a camera was turned. Expert instructors spent two hours each morning and two each afternoon teaching her English. She was not taught to mouth words, to recite from memory, to read meaningless lines. Each word had to have a definite meaning for her, together with its proper inflection.

Acquired Americanisms

In addition to the general expense of educating Anna Sten, Mr. Goldwyn paid her a salary variously reported from $100 to $1,000 weekly. No one has been able to verify the exact amount of her weekly stipend, but she was and is under contract to him.

After her regular English lessons there was the business of assimilating American life, manners and colloquialisms. The publicity attendant upon this "course of sprouts" was more than gratifying to Mr. Goldwyn, who had counted upon it. One of the media that reached the "fan" in the home was a four-page interview by Edwin C. Hill, noted radio news commentator, in New Movie magazine.

One of the stock feature stories of the country's trade and daily press was that of Mr. Goldwyn and his pupil. He was criticized by many of his intimates and others not so intimate for the outpouring of money in that endeavor.

These he ignored and went ahead with his schedule. Miss Sten went to see an American motion picture three times weekly. Her studied assimilations of American customs went to such a point that when she wanted to engage a Russian cook to cook Russian foods for her, Mr. Goldwyn insisted upon an American cook and native food.

Mr. Goldwyn felt that in preparing her for the screen, he wanted to know everything about her before she began her first picture. He could not afford to wait until her third or fourth production to learn the secret of how best to photograph her or how to record her voice. Fifty-one tests of Anna Sten had been made before she made "Nana." She probably had more tests for one film than any other Hollywood star —good enough material for almost any feature writer. She was photographed for her eyes, her hair, for street clothes and costumes.

"We'll Begin Again"

In the meantime Mr. Goldwyn was looking over story after story to find one suitable for this new personality. One after another they were rejected, until at last Emile Zola's "Nana" was suggested and the late Willard Mack and Harry Wagstaff Gribble went to work on the story and emerged with a completely modernized version.

Then the "Nana" company went to work. A quarter of a million dollars had been spent on it and the picture was but half finished. Mr. Goldwyn looked at some rushes and decided he didn't care for them.

"It's good," he is reported to have said, "but it's not good enough. Throw it away. We'll begin again."

The supporting cast and the director were fired on the spot and an entirely new company engaged. They began again. The picture was finished, and on January 9, Mr. Goldwyn arrived in New York with Print No. 1 of "Nana."

Mr. Goldwyn had his own ideas on New York booking arrangements for the premiere. He did not want a mere 2,000-seat house like the United Artists Rivoli. He wanted a tremendous—colossal—seating. He held out, against strong inter-organization persuasion, for the Music Hall. He got it.

He wanted to put on an advertising campaign which could be justified only by a big seating capacity. The campaign in newspaper advertising alone took nine days. For the first four days, only the name and the picture of Anna Sten appeared. He wanted to make people "Sten-conscious." After the fourth day of the newspaper campaign, the name of the picture appeared with that of the star.

Since the film's premiere at the Music Hall in Radio City some three yeeks ago, reports on future bookings from the United Artists offices indicate that Mr. Goldwyn will not lose money on "Nana."

If he does lose money on this one, Mr. Goldwyn says that it will be allright, according to Lynn Farnol, his press representative, "for the second picture will make up for it, the market for her second picture being already made."

Monogram Gets Own Exchanges

Monogram franchise holders in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Seattle, Denver, Portland and Salt Lake City, formerly operating under various names, will in the future be known as Monogram Pictures exchanges. Detroit will take similar action in April. The company plans establishment of a star list for its 1934-35 production schedule.

Board's Speakers Decry Censorship

individuals in Hollywood today who are responsible for maintaining the status quo in the industry, and they "want nothing changed except, perhaps, the amount of money they are making."

"Nothing important will happen to the motion picture," he concluded, "until manifest destiny overtakes these men."

"The British Are Coming"

Incidental to his discussion Mr. Ramsaye forecast an increasing importance for British picture production.

"All through the silent picture era it seemed definitely settled that some way the British could never make a picture. But you know it takes the British from fifty to a hundred years to get excited about anything and now it seems that they have decided to really do something about the motion picture.

"It is of course obvious that when sound came along and drove the motion picture indoor to the confines of the stage, it played precisely into the hands of the British dramatists. They have always been component in the business of the stage, and, to be sure, they have always been competent in literature and the business of words. The talking picture has delivered the screen to their province and now I assure you 'The British are coming!'"

Supporting Bishop McConnell's viewpoints on censorship, Elmer Rice declared that this activity suppresses political and social expression to a degree that "violates the principle of free speech." Mr. Rice then regaled the assemblage with excerpts from the New York State Censors' deletions.

Indorse Bill To Drop Censors

On Saturday, closing the three-day session of the board, the assemblage indorsed a pending legislature measure to abolish the Motion Picture Division of the New York State Education Department—the state's official censor body.

Dr. Francis D. Tyson, professor of economics of the University of Pittsburgh, in summing up the findings of the conference said:

"The time has come to free the industry from the twisted leading strings of state censorship. We are glad to aid in the movement.

On Thursday, Wilton A. Barrett, the board's executive secretary, said that the board was formed to "offer protection to the American people from the early blight of political censorship and to evaluate the possibilities of this new art."

"It is time to stop talking about the 'morals of the movies,'" Mr. Barrett concluded, "for morals change and movies change. The morals of yesterday do not fit in with the moral viewpoint of today. We will change again and the movies also will change and we must bring this great medium into adjustment to our lives and our lives into adjustment with it."

In his introductory address on Thursday, Leroy E. Bowman, field director of the Child Study Association of America and presiding officer at the opening session, declared the greatest hope for improvement lay in the encouragement of films for visual education.

forest to see the plane and dance around it; we even induced some of them to take a ride in it and they came down delighted with their experience and after that they were the pride of their tribe. We spent nine days in the Congo and got some excellent pictures.

Animal Life From the Air

"Then we returned to Nairobi by a different route—over the Victoria Nile where we saw elephants galore in big and small herds; hippo ducking into the water, crocodiles sliding into the river from the banks where they had been sleeping. We flew several times over the beautiful Murchison Falls, and then on to Nairobi.

"On Christmas morning we took off again for a short trip—this time down to the Serengetti Plains in Tanganyika. We were six hours in the air, and saw tens of thousands of wildebeeste and zebra, giraffe in a score of herds, and lions all over the plains—one bunch of forty. We circled the plains several times, then without landing flew back to Nairobi.

"We have been unusually successful in getting leopard pictures and I think they are going to be just about the most exciting and thrilling of anything that has ever been made in the way of animal pictures.

Sincerely yours,
MARTIN JOHNSON"

Mr. Johnson's last African production was "Congorilla," distributed by Fox. It was his first effort in sound. The Fox concern is interested in the current expedition and presumably the new picture will be a Fox release.

Joan Lowell, Bourke-White Films To Be Radio Releases

Joan Lowell, well known girl author, arrives in New York this week from Central America with film she took during an exploration of the Mayan jungles. The resulting picture will be a Van Beuren product, released through RKO Radio about April 1. Miss Lowell sailed in a small schooner last April for a world cruise, but accident after accident befell the voyagers and the plan was abandoned.

Margaret Bourke-White, art photographer, who has spent some time with her cameras in Russia, will make two short subjects for Van Beuren on Soviet life. Miss Bourke-White will supervise compilation, editing and recording from her own negatives, and will supply explanatory dialogue.

Jolson, Gable at ITOA Ball

Al Jolson and Clark Gable are to be guests of the Independent Theatre Owners' Association, New York, at its annual Movie Ball, at the Waldorf Astoria February 21. Billy Brandt is chairman of the ball committee.

Press Greets Simmonds

Ray Simmonds, head of the publicity department of the Fox British organization, was greeted by New York trade paper representatives at the New York Athletic Club late last week.

THE CUTTING ROOM

MELODY IN SPRING

Paramount

The title pretty well conveys the idea of this picture. It's a musical, motivated by light, lilting comedy. In line with the Paramount new personality policy, Lanny Ross, star of the Showboat radio program, is cast in the lead role with every anticipation that he will develop into a new feminine heartthrob. Appearance, voice and personality are all in his favor. The story is an original by Frank Leon Smith, the screen play by Benn Levy and direction by Norman McLeod. Ann Sothern, who was Harriet Lake on the stage, before Columbia created the new cognomen for her appearance in "Let's Fall in Love," has the lead opposite Ross. Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland, effective as a comedy team in the current "Six of a Kind," share top honors with the juvenile neophytes. George Meeker, Wilfred Hari (a newcomer), Wade Boteler, Herman Bing, Helen Lynd, Thomas Jackson and Norma Mitchell are the others most prominent in the picture.

Two main locales are established. In the first, a small American city, characters and the initial romantic twist are identified, with catchy musical numbers coloring the comedy set-up. Ruggles is presented as an insatiable souvenir hunter with a penchant for collecting all kinds of bells and Ross is in love with his daughter, Ann Sothern. Moving into the Swiss mountain country, Ruggles sets his heart on garnering the bell worn by the leader of a herd of sacred cows, a matter that leads to international complications, from which he is rescued by Ross.

The title, which is expressive of the picture's tone, is of unusual showmanship value in connection with Ross' introduction to motion picture theatre audiences. The growing popularity of Charlie Ruggles should be a real asset, particularly if "Six of a Kind" has been played and the light musical comedy atmosphere of the picture, which skips the mass spectacle idea in sticking to logical theme development, affords easy opportunities to stress different entertainment novelty.

COUNTESS OF MONTE CRISTO

Universal

Contrary to the classical and romantic title tone, this story is an up-to-date and fast-moving situation comedy with a catchy Hollywood star making ballyhoo background. The original story was written by Walter Fleisch; the screen play is by Karen de Wolf with dialogue by Gladys Unger and is being directed by Karl Freund, whose "The Mummy," "Moonlight and Pretzels" and "Madame Spy" furnish adequate proof of his versatility.

The cast is headed by Fay Wray, recently in "King Kong," "The Bowery," "Below the Sea," "Ann Carver's Profession" and "Madame Spy," and by Paul Lucas, whose parts in "Little Women" and "Candlelight" have given him a new prestige. Well known names in supporting roles are Patsy Kelly, playing in Roach comedies with Thelma Todd and also appearing in MGM's "Hollywood Party;" Reginald Owen, noted stage star, now in Garbo's "Queen Christina," "Nana" and with Arliss in "Rothschild." Carmel Myers, one of the silent screen's greatest notables, returns to pictures after a two or three-year absence, and others who will be seen are Paul Page, John Sheehan, Robert McWade, Richard Tucker, Matt Betz and Dewey Robinson.

Premised on intriguing plot, burning under the strain of unrequitted love, Fay Wray, bit player, drives high-powered car out of the picture-making scene. Landing at a swanky hotel, with her maid, Patsy Kelly, she is mistaken for the real Countess of Monte Cristo. Attracted to Lucas, she becomes involved with a band of international crooks in remarkably well covered up sequences and as she is about to be arrested as a jewel thief, Lucas and the Baron confess that they are crooks. Publicity regarding the missing starlet has been kept hot by Page and the story of her return to the studio and her experiences is a front-page wonder that lands her a big starring contract, and of course love blooms for Fay and Page.

The story has novelty, action, plenty of thrill and excitement as well as love interest and comedy. Semi-mystery added to inside satirical realism of Hollywood hullabaloo gives it color and sparkle in line with present day trends.

MODERN HERO

Warner - First National

An original drama by Louis Bromfield with screen play by Kathryn Scola and Gene Markey, this is the first directorial effort for G. W. Pabst, German director responsible for many Continental successes. Richard Barthelmess is starred and Jean Muir, who made an impressive screen debut in "The Earth Turns," has the feminine lead. Well known screen names, including Dorothy Burgess, Marjorie Rambeau, Florence Eldridge, Theodore Newton, William Janney, Verree Teasdale, J. M. Kerrigan and Arthur Hohl, constitute the principal supporting cast.

The picture, covering a period of years, majors in three sequences. Barthelmess, circus performer, falls in love with Jean Muir, but is not permitted to marry her even though he is father of her child. Then Barthelmess becomes an industrial genius, counterpart of the Henry Ford career from bicycle manufacturer to automobile building czar in partnership with Jean's father, Arthur Hohl and Hobart Cavanaugh. Then as a munitions manufacturer he is sponsor of his own child now grown to young manhood. With power, wealth and prestige his, Barthelmess makes unfortunate stock market investments and is financially ruined as the boy is killed. The path to future blank, Barthelmess consults the mother, Marjorie Rambeau, now a fortune teller, who advises him that he will find happiness in his true niche, a circus performer.

THE MAN WHO BROKE HIS HEART

Paramount

For the debut of Dorothy Dell, Paramount has chosen a dramatic romance which has its locale in San Francisco's famous Barbary Coast of other days. The yarn is an original by Frederick Schlick, the screen play by Sam Hoffenstein, remembered for his work on "American Tragedy," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Love Me Tonight," and by Frank Partos, who did "Cradle Song" and "Guilty as Hell." William Cameron Menzies and George Somnes, who worked on "Torch Singer," are co-directing. Added dialogue is by Stephen Morehouse Avery.

In the picture, Miss Dell, erstwhile Follies headliner and Broadway singing sensation, will be supported by Preston Foster, recently in "Hoopla," and Victor McLaglen, whose performance in the current "Lost Patrol" is sure to create a new patron interest in him. Well known names comprise the remainder of the supporting cast, with Alison Skipworth, now in "Six of a Kind"; David Laudau, featured in "The Earth Turns"; John Rogers, Mischa Auer, Frank Sheridan, Ivan Linow and others.

While music is a subordinate feature, numbers for which Ralph Ranger prepared the music and Leo Robin the lyrics, will be sung by Miss Dell.

General Theatres Hearing Delayed

The hearing on a proposed compromise agreement of a $20,000,000 claim filed in Wilmington, Del., against General Theatres Equipment by the Chase National Bank of New York in connection with a plan of reorganization for General Theatres was postponed on Tuesday due to the illness of Chief Justice Daniel J. Layton. The case has been postponed indefinitely.

Chase National had filed claims against General Theatres in its receivership aggregating more than $20,000,000 and the compromise agreement proposes the scaling down of these claims by approximately $5,000,000, in consideration for which General Theatres consents to allowance of the reduced amount aggregating $15,310,832. Also under the agreement General Theatres will release Chase and its affiliates from any claims it may have against them.

Allowance of the reduced claim is intended to secure a $9,700,000 loan made to General Theatres by Chase, which formerly was secured by the preferred stock of Film Securities Corporation. This stock, however, became worthless in December with the sale of 660,000 shares of Loew's, Inc., which constituted the sole assets of Film Securities.

Under the agreement Chase also consents to participate in a reorganization plan for General Theatres by financing the reorganized company and turning over to it its secured claims and the collateral securing them in exchange for common stock in the reorganized company. Chase also is to receive a one-year option to purchase 325,000 shares of Class A common of Fox Film at $15 per share under the agreement.

Meanwhile, at Kansas City, while somewhat delayed by differences over disposition of film contracts held for the houses, the deal whereby Fox Midwest takes over the Paramount theatres in Joplin and Springfield, Mo., will shortly be completed, according to Ed Grubel, one of the landlords.

This week brought another delay in the Fox Rocky Mountain and Midland Theatre reorganization plan, which had been looked for about February 15, because of failure of a settlement of the Shanberg-Woolf federal court actions. It is expected settlement of the litigation and the reorganization will be announced some time in March.

In Milwaukee a permanent injunction preventing the Fox Wisconsin Company and Wisconsin Amusement Euterprises, Inc., from disposing of any assets pending disposition of the Statewide Theatres bankruptcy case was ordered Saturday by Federal Judge F. A. Geiger.

In Los Angeles a ruling in the Fox West Coast hearing on arbitration of trustees' fees was put off until Wednesday by Referee S. W. McNabb. Reorganization of Fox West Coast is expected by April 1, it was indicated this week. Spyros Skouras left New York hurriedly for the Coast to await completion of the plan.

Meighan and Talmadge Star

Thomas Meighan and Norma Talmadge will co-star in "Somehow Good," for British and Dominions in England. United Artists will distribute the film in the United States.

Administration In Favor of 32-Hour Week for Labor

Indications from NRA headquarters in Washington this week that the Administration is inclined to favor the proposal to all industry of a 32-hour maximum working week, and announcement also from the nation's capital that Senator Robert F. Wagner has prepared a bill for Congress to make the National Labor Board a permanent Government agency with unquestionable authority for the settlement of all labor disputes, were the two events highlighting the week's motion picture labor situation.

It was indicated at Washington Wednesday that the motion picture industry has lost interest in the Administrator's plan for a 32-hour week as a means of increasing jobs.

As regards the possibility of a 32-hour working week for industry, General Hugh S. Johnson, national NRA Administrator, indicated this week that he would be ready to put forward an expanded industrial reemployment program by March 5. Immediate explanation was given, however, by General Johnson that there would be no flat demand for all industries to assume a 32-hour week. In fact, he said, no hour reduction actually would be forced. Nevertheless, he gave intimation that a suggestion would be advanced for a considerable shortening below the general 40-hour level wherever possible.

Some industries, he conceded, have "eaten up so much of their reserves that they would have no means to finance larger payrolls necessitated by shorter hours."

Later it was indicated in Washington that suggestions that a 32-hour week be applied to all productive industries may be laid before the general meeting of all industrial code authorities March 5 by General Johnson to gauge their reactions.

Regulations requiring employers operating under codes to post the labor provisions of their codes conspicuously in their places of business were issued Tuesday by General Johnson. Failure to comply will be punishable by a fine of $500 or imprisonment up to six months, or both.

Meanwhile in New York the Building Service Employee's Union, Local 118, through its secretary, Charles C. Levey, threatened to call a strike of its members, comprising all unskilled theatre workers, unless circuit operators and independent theatre owners met their demands for higher wages and shorter working hours.

However, the threatened strike will be thrown into the hands of the New York Regional Labor Board for decision. Mr. Levey was to appear before this body this week to present the union's side of the question and also to submit affidavits of alleged violations of the motion picture code, all of them concerning the actions of theatre operators who threatened dismissal of unskilled employees unless they withdrew from the BSEU.

On Tuesday the Regional Labor Board recommended to Paramount theatre executives the recognition of members of Local 118. The BSEU's complaint was based on charges of coercion of employees at a Paramount house on Long Island.

ARKANSAS INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS BACK CODE

New Organization, Meeting at Little Rock, Decides to Drop Two-for-Ones at Once; Discuss Higher Admission Prices

The Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas celebrated a growth from a charter membership of 17 independent exhibitors to a total of 54 members with all dues paid, at their second meeting, held Sunday and Monday at the Marion Hotel, Little Rock.

This organization is for independent exhibitors only and they make it exclusively that. Social activities are conspicuously absent, the meetings along strictly business lines. The officers are leaders in independent circles of Arkansas. T. W. Sharp, the president, Ray Morrow, vice-president, and J. F. Norman, secretary and treasurer, have been active in exhibitor organizations for years in Arkansas.

This meeting was called principally for discussions of the Code and the convention unanimously voted to uphold the Code in every possible way. All two-for-ones will be discarded at once. There was some talk of raising admission prices in Arkansas.

With members of the Code Authority too busy to permit of representation at the meeting (Ed. Kuykendall, MPTOA president, was detained in the East), association members requested Harry E. Nichols, field representative of the HERALD, who is at present in Tennessee, to come down and quote the answers to Code questions raised by exhibitors as he had heard them answered by Code Authority representatives at various conventions throughout the South.

Members of the Arkansas Independents' organization are:

J. F. Norman, Best Theatre, England, Ark.
W. L. Landers, Landers, Batesville.
J. L. Woods, Crossett, Crossett.
W. E. Blume, Rialto, Searcy.
S. R. Gillett, Community, Russellville.
Cecil Cuff, Royal, Arkadelphia.
W. R. Kauffman, Imp, Benton.
T. W. Sharp, New-Prospect-Roxy, Little Rock.
C. F. Bonner, Community, Pine Bluff.
V. E. Bonner, Community, Pine Bluff.
L. F. Haven, Imperial, Forest City.
G. Carey, Strand, Paris.
Hoyt Kirkpatrick, Hoyts, Ft. Smith.
Ray Morrow, Liberty, Malvern.
R. I. Bonner, Strand, Conway.
L. G. Hobgood, Amuseu, Fordyce.
Pete Wiggins, New, Sheridan.
Lyle Richmond, Missouri, Senath, Mo.
J. Hohrstadt, Missouri, Hayti, Mo.
Horace Stanley, Radio, Beebe, Ark.
D. E. Fitton, Lyric, Harrison.
R. V. McGinnis, New, Russellville.
Ray A. Wilson, New, DeWitt.

O. H. Miller, Grand, Conway.
Chas. A. Marshall, Victory, Rogers.
C. P. Washmon, Rio, Van Buren.
W. D. Mitchell, Gem, Dumas.
W. M. Reeves, Highland, Little Rock.

Directors are L. F. Haven, Cecil Cupp, W. E. Blume, W. L. Landers, Wallace Kauffman, J. M. Ensor, L. B. Clark. The sergeant-at-arms is R. V. McGinnis.

Bank Protesting Paramount Policy

Voicing its objections to a proposed Paramount Publix bankruptcy policy, the Commercial National Bank of New York, a Paramount creditor, on Tuesday declared its opposition to any policy of rebuilding large real estate holdings by the purchase of claims against its bankrupt subsidiaries out of distribution revenue. The bank made its formal objection before Referee Henry K. Davis.

Paramount trustees had requested the referee's authorization to acquire bonds outstanding against Tennessee Enterprises, a bankrupt theatre subsidiary, with funds of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation. The outstanding bond issue amounts to $435,000, and the plan for which approval was sought Tuesday contemplated buying up as many of these as possible at a maximum rate of $33 for each $100 bond. Bonds in the amount of $205,900 already are available for purchase on that basis, A. A. Laporte of counsel for the trustees said Tuesday.

Mr. Laporte explained that the principal reasons for acquisition of the Tennessee Enterprises bonds was to further the reorganization plans for that bankrupt and to retain for Paramount the Tivoli, at Chattanooga, which he termed the "biggest asset" of the bankrupt subsidiary.

Mr. Davis approved the plan with the sanction of a majority of the creditors present, but counsel for the Commercial National Bank declared that while they would approve the plan in this particular instance, they would, in the future, oppose similar plans for any policy of "expending cash accumulated by the distribution department to salvage Paramount's great real estate empire."

20th Century To Produce on Stage

The presentation of stage plays in New York and other key cities will be undertaken by 20th Century Pictures, Inc., as an extension of its production activities for 1934, according to an announcement in Hollywood this week by Joseph M. Schenck, president, and Darryl F. Zanuck, production chief.

Whether the company will finance the stage productions through intermediary Broadway producers, or whether it will set up its own production organization to present plays directly in New York, was not made public. However, pending the completion of these details, Franklyn Underwood, eastern scenario editor of 20th Century, has already begun a search for unproduced play manuscripts.

Wonder Bar

(Warner-First National)

Comedy Drama

"Wonder Bar," worthy successor to "42nd Street," "Footlight Parade" and "Gold Diggers," is chock full of entertainment elements and eye and ear production values pleasing to both exhibitors and patrons. In many ways, it tops any one of its predecessors. The cast, with Al Jolson heading it, is virtually an all-star affair. The motivating story differs vividly from those utilized in the previous pictures. While the lavish, original spectacle sequences are the natural outstanding features, romance, drama, thrill, human interest, comedy, suspense and tragedy run the full range of emotional entertainment. Effective story telling technique, reminiscent of the "Grand Hotel" style, gives the experiences of the entire cast. Yet the various episodes are so blended and portrayed that coherence is maintained and climax logically developed.

Produced on an elaborate scale that accentuates bigness of atmosphere, "Wonder Bar" is both special group and whole-family entertainment. It has all the bigness necessary for a deluxe theatre attraction, at the same time being unusual material for the smaller houses. There are so many different interest creating possibilities available that the only trouble exhibitors should have is in choosing the one capable of exerting the maximum influence in his community while not losing sight of the other values. It is full of unusual assets with which to stimulate interest of men and women and children.

The locale is Al Wonder's internationally famous London night club. With Jolson in the type of role that made him famous—an entertainer—he is completely apart from, yet at the same time, the chief focal point of interest. In that club all the action takes place. Ynez, the featured dancer, is fiercely in love with her partner Harry, only to be the object of his hateful scorn. The wealthy Liane, magnetized by the suave Harry, gives him her fabulously valuable jewels. Al is in love with Ynez, Tommy's in love with her, too. Both are stymied. Simpson and Pratt, a pair of West Schenectady Babbits, have a yen for Mitzi and Claire, a pair of gold-digging hostesses, both ironically watched by their wives who get a supercilious thrill out of a gigolo's advances. Captain Von Ferring has his last glamourous night. Ynez stabs Harry, when she realizes that he'll desert her. Al recovers the jewels, saving Liane from disgrace and shame. The love story of Tommy and Ynez ends with Al sacrificing his hopes that the youngsters may be happy.

That's the story; unusual entertainment in itself made sensational by the musical score, Dick Powell's singing, Jolson's singing and gagging, Cortez and Dolores Del Rio's dancing which make way for several spectacles, two of them sensational. "Why Do I Dream Those Dreams," the first, is grandeur and magnificence, a triumph of mechanical ingenuity and girl-boy grouping that creates the impression that thousands are singing and dancing. But that is outdone as to the tune of blackface Al's singing of "Going To Heaven On A Mule," the audience is carried into the darky's idea of heaven.

From every viewpoint, "Wonder Bar" is solid gold entertainment that holds plenty of interest for every type of patron. On top of that, it is over-running with original and different showmanship selling ideas from name to production values.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Based on the play by Geza Herczeg, Karl Farkas and Robert Katscher. Adaptation and screen play by Earl Baldwin. Music and lyrics by Harry Warren and Al Dubin. Photography, Sol Polito. Art director, Jack Okey. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Film editor, George Amy. Assistant director, Bill Cannon. Men in White

(MGM-Cosmopolitan)

Romantic Drama

Because of the manner in which it is presented and acted this hospital story abounds in values. Although Jean Hersholt steals the show, Clarke Gable presents an exhibition of heretofore unrevealed acting ability. Elizabeth Allen and Myrna Loy turn in capital performances and the others of the cast more than hold their own. While the yarn is located within the walls of a hospital, the story is deeply human and emotion stirring. The life drama, romance, comedy, ambition, tragedy, hope and fear of men and women, rather than institutional atmosphere, is the main point of interest. Tuned to a serious note, powerfully different production tactics have been adapted to create vivid human interest. Yet intelligent direction has seen to it that relevant, natural, comedy sequences offset a too somber color.

"Men in White" is radically different from any of the recent series of hospital pictures. As the realism of life predominates, its romance, drama, subdued thrill are coherently woven together by finely handled suspense. No smash action or theatrical suspense builds the climaxes; rather, audiences should respond, as did the preview crowd, to the humanness that makes the picture so moving. It has the values, in names and production, for luring the masses and at the same time should be unusually attractive to those who understand and appreciate seriousness.

Ferguson, young interne, protege of the celebrated Dr. Hochberg, hopes to follow in his mentor's footsteps. Loved by Laura, who wants early marriage and the happiness of youth, the pleadings of both create mental turmoil. Hospital duties, wherein he saves a child's life, prevent him keeping an engagement with Laura. Spurned by her, he becomes part of a clandestine love affair with student nurse Barbara. He is ready to marry the girl, but she becomes critically ill. Laura, understanding what has happened, asks him why he did not come to her, knowing as he did that she did not stand on ceremony. Barbara, dying, exerts a tremendous influence on Ferguson. After Dr. Hockberg talks to Laura, she releases Ferguson from his promises, urges him to remain under Hochberg's tutelage, hoping that she will meet him some other day.

Pictures like "Men in White" don't come along every day. While the standard merchandising plans for Doctor pictures are in order, this show should be given more thoughtful consideration. The title, being hardly expressive of the theme, cast and story values, should be played up rather than hospital atmosphere. A campaign that convinces patrons they are going to witness something out of the ordinary should insure large first performance attendances with word-of-mouth advertising to follow.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

I Believed in You

(Fox-Wurtzel)

Comedy Drama

A new theme idea manifest in this picture suggests unusual and new methods in its selling. Basically a novel romantic story, it is also a study of a social science experiment. As such, it has a definite love interest that takes on a human tone, is dramatic at times and has more than the expected amount of comedy. The picture also serves as the debut for Rosemary Ames, but whether the public will accept her as potential star material is largely dependent upon how the producers endeavor to sell her in the press book, plus the individual efforts of exhibitors who see in a new personality the opportunity to create interest in her as well as in the picture.

A description of the story may suggest the method of localized selling more effectively than a highlight essay. Opening to the tune of stirring action, Jim Crowl, labor agitator, flees from a group of aroused workmen and finds refuge in True Merrill's home. The lone girl, dedicated to socialistic ideas, is amenable to Crowl's parlor pink ideas, as well as his romantic proclivities. Accompanying him to Greenwich Village, she thrills to the vacuous mouthings of the pseudo artists, writers, dancers. As they are evicted from their common flat, wealthy philanthropic Harrison is attracted to True, derides her friends, is slapped and the girl is jailed. As she is freed, Harrison searches for her and as she espouses the never-had-a-chance doctrine of her new found friends, he agrees to finance them in their efforts for six months. Grateful to True for the godsent opportunity, the nutty collection, turning their financial windfall to earthly rather that spiritually artistic matters, fall down on the girl. Even Crowl, whom True loves, takes up with another woman. At the expiration of the six months period, disillusioned True, whom Harrison has given the opportunity of meeting real literary, artistic and musical giants, confesses the failure of her dream. In the meantime, she has been writing a book which publishers accept. Going to Harrison with the idea of offering him her royalty check as first payment on the debt, she finds him pleading love, a condition she will not accept until she has gone further up the ladder of success on her own efforts, holding out for Harrison the hope that she can again meet him on equal ground and not as the beneficiary of his wealth and influence.

As this picture experiments in a new idea, it is far from being perfect. Nevertheless it is entertaining and certainly affords plenty of opportunity for those who like to approach their picture offerings from different angles to demonstrate their theories. The title lends itself readily to such a procedure—it has just enough of a provocative sound to permit varying departure from standard methods. Boles, naturally, is the outstanding name for marquee and lobby poster purposes and the remainder of the cast, save Miss Ames, is composed of familiar names. In connection with Miss Ames, there is ample chance for special exploitation and ballyhoo, a showmanship asset that is also applicable to the picture's atmosphere and plot that opens the way for intriguing ideas and displays to make the most of the Greenwich Village sequences. The more personal attention given this picture, with the idea of applying special original ideas, the better.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Bolero

(Paramount)

Romantic Drama

There's plenty of showmanship material in "Bolero" for alert exhibitors. Realistic drama predominating, an element that makes possible a series of failing romances, this story of a man's unquenchable faith in himself and his ambitions, paralleling the career of Maurice, the famous dancer, continuously centers attention on the leading player. As action and dialogue are effectively counterbalanced, the musical score is a distinct asset in interpreting the story mood. Production settings and grouping in the second half of the picture are lavish and striking. These are helpful in consolidating the interest created in the opening identifying sequences.

One already highly publicized personality, Sally Rand, the fan dancer, and two newcomers, Frances Drake and William Frawley, make impressive picture debuts which hold much promise. Miss Rand's fan dance scene is one of the features of the picture, more than worthy of ballyhoo as a box office asset.

Raft's role, fitting him to a T and in line with his own experiences, has him convinced that he is destined to be the world's greatest dancer. There is a semi-comic amateur night opening when he is practically hooked off the stage. Then with a succession of partners, whom he loves as a medium of furthering his ambitions, discarding them when they fail to be helpful, Raft is a beer garden attraction with Gloria Shea. In gaudy pre-war Paris, Frances Drake is the loving partner. Then comes Carole Lombard with whom he really does fall in love. She wants the job as a means of landing a rich husband. Comes London with Lombard, and fan-dancing Sally Rand is the next one lured into Raft's attractive web. Then back to Paris, the sensational Bolero in Raft's own night club and a tinge of war. Back later and wounded, Raft would start all over again with Sally Rand, but she has gone the way of all flesh and with failure threatening the gala opening, Miss Lombard, among the guests, again teams up with Raft, and as they plan a greater career, Raft barely gets through the dance to die with his "I'm too good for this joint" on his lips.

The picture has lots of novelty in both story and presentation. It should be sold with the picture of a man who ruthlessly used women as rungs in the ladder of his climb to success, a plan that makes easy the introduction of all the romance and human heart interest necessary and capitalizing on name values to the utmost.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Carnival Lady

(Hollywood—State Rights)

Drama

A rather melodramataic drama of the midway and the small town carnival, this independent production by Ken Goldsmith has a few entertainment values.

As the "Carnival Lady" is young Boots Mallory, former Wampas Baby Star but recently seen in very few pictures, and none of any outstanding note. She contrives to be fairly attractive and reasonably capable. Supporting her are Allen Vincent, Donald Kerr, Rollo Lloyd and Jason Robards, none of them particularly valuable names from the standpoint of the theatre's marquee. Consequently the exhibitor is in the position of having to make the most out of the story and locale.

The carnival setting should give the exhibitor an opportunity to dress his lobby and the front of his house in appropriate style, and perhaps he may want to go out into the street with some similar ballyhoo. The high dive into a small tank of water from the tall tower, which is a feature of the film's action, may present another angle of exciting patron interest, but that would necessarily be contingent upon the state of the weather and the proximity of public swimming pools.

Vincent, a supposedly wealthy young man, is suddenly apprised of the fact that he has been made penniless as a radio announcement brings the news of an absconding bank president. He quits his apartment, and the party there, and hits the road, finally landing at the carnival, where he meets two other down-and-outers, Kerr, former boxer, and Lloyd, whose itching fingers are at the same time extremely light. The three escape an indignant hot-dog vender, and are befriended for the moment by Miss Mallory, a dancer with the show, who is being annoyed by Robards, high diver and ace act of the carnival. Robards, diving, is hurt, and Vincent gets the job. Kerr is hired as his barker and Lloyd goes to work in the kitchen.

Arriving at Vincent's home town, Vincent takes Miss Mallory to a cafe, and they are discovered by some of his former friends. She is further disturbed when one friend, at the carnival that night, offers Vincent a good job in the city. He refuses, in order to stay with Miss Mallory, but she will not marry him, fearing she will not make the grade with his friends. Attempting to do the right thing by his future, she pretends to have gone back to Robards, who has returned, and Kerr, coming upon them, hits Robards. He goes down, strikes his head, and dies. A ruse, engineered by the three, makes it appear that he was killed diving into the tank. Vincent is told the reason for Miss Mallory's coldness, and that is that.

Concentrate on the locale and the carnival atmosphere. The names of Miss Mallory and Vincent are probable the only two which will be familiar to the patronage, and these should be used to best advantage.—Aaronson, New York.

Devil Tiger

(Fox)

Jungle Drama

Once again the cameras go into the jungle, this time on the Malayan Peninsula, and under the able direction of Clyde E. Elliott is fashioned a story of a wild and man-eating tiger who is pursued to the death, to the accompaniment of a drama of the triangle variety and several interludes in the nature of a jungle travel feature. The inevitable battles for the supremacy of the jungle and the survival of the fittest are carefully caught by the cameras, often with considerable effect, if occasionally gruesome.

There is every reason to suppose that the jungle setting and the fights of the inhabitants are authentic motion picture. Certainly they make for entertainment, however much that same type of material may have filled the motion picture screen before. The exhibitor has an excellent opportunity for ballyhoo, in the lobby, by reason of the locale, on the street and on the marquee, though that last phase of exploitation this time will not be in the cast personalities direction, but rather through the use of papier-mache animals, perhaps engaged in mortal combat. The display, in the lobby, of various stills of the embattled animals, should prove effective in drawing pedestrian attention.

Seen in closeup are a lion and a tiger having it out, with the lion coming off best; a bear and a cowardly hyena; an amusing scene of a monkey in a curiosity-impelled engagement with two giant crabs, and most unusual of all, a strange and rather harrowing scene in which a giant python drops from a tree around the neck of a powerful water buffalo. Despite frantic, desperate efforts to shake off its tormentor, the horned beast slowly is strangled to death.

The four players of the cast are of little marquee value. They are Marion Burns, Kane Richmond, Harry Woods and a native boy, Ah Lee, who is a natural and engaging little performer before the cameras.

Richmond, at loose ends, meets Woods, about to start into the interior in search of Remow Satan, the devil tiger, and is invited to join the expedition. He accepts, and with their numerous native attendants they strike out for the rubber plantation and Miss Burns, whose father has been killed by the man-eater. She persuades them to permit her to accompany them, and they start, moving slowly through the jungle as the cameras pick up here and there the activities of the animal inhabitants. At the same time, Woods begins to make advances to Miss Burns, who repulses them, and casts increasingly affectionate glances in Richmond's direction. Richmond is oblivious, but when she saves him from the coils of a snake, his interest is awakened. Sight of the devil tiger frightens away all their attendants but the small Ah Lee.

When Woods becomes annoying, Richmond fights him. They are interrupted by stampeding elephants, and Woods is trampled to death. The three others, lost, make their tortuous way through the jungle toward safety, and just as they come upon a native village, meet and kill the devil tiger.

It is interesting and occasionally exciting material, open to attractive exploitation despite its absence of cast names.—AARONSON, New York.

Murder on the Campus

(Chesterfield)

Mystery

A spark from the ever-grinding wheel of murder mystery pictures is this adaptation of Whitman Chambers' novel, "The Campanile Murders," a picture with strength of denouement, in a solution that should be a complete surprise because of the slightness of allusion to it, but with practically all development through dialogue. Besides the paucity of action there is little or no effort at comedy. At the same time, the director and principals have achieved a sincerity of performance that carries along, with the possible exception of the fadeout, which has the reporter-hero gassed, jumping off an ambulance stretcher at the hospital to go and call on his girl. Then, too, with the theatreman, particularly in small communities, open to challenge by the patrons as to plausibility of plot sequence, he can expect questioning as to why the criminal criminologist did not finish off the reporter in a hurry after confessing three slayings to him, though the sequence has the merit of something of the spectacular, with its background of test tubes and myriad other laboratory paraphernalia, familiar as they may be.

Charles Starrett, star reporter, is beginning to find himself much in love with Shirley Grey, student, but cannot understand why she calls Maurice Black, gambling proprietor, one of her best friends. Starrett drives Miss Grey over to the campus entrance at 9 o'clock. At 9:15 the chimes in the campanile tower ring, are heard, there is the sound of a shot, and the student chimes-ringer is found slain. In Miss Grey's room, the assistant to detective chief J. Farrell MacDonald finds a pistol, one .32 bullet discharged, and it was a .32 that killed the chimes ringer. The trail also has led to the apartment of Ruth Hall, student, who seems to be withholding information, as is Miss Grey. Miss Hall had had several dates with the chimes ringer, but at the time the chimes and shot were heard, she had been motoring with Edward Van Sloan, chemistry professor and criminologist. Next, one of two shady law partners is found dead, and finally the other partner calls on the criminologist, there is a pistol report, and Van Sloan calls the police to announce the attorney has killed himself in his office. Barrett asks Van Sloan to lend a hand in the case. Barrett also captures Black, but he escapes from the detective assistant, only to walk in later and surrender to MacDonald, announcing that he is Miss Hall's father. Miss Grey had been shielding Miss Hall, who was married secretly to the first victim. It is all explained when Barrett charges Van Loan with having amplified an electrical transcription of a pistol shot and having set it to sound forth at 9:15 while he was with Miss Hall for alibi purposes. Van Loan adds that he put away the law partners because they were framing him.

For marquee purposes there are the names Shirley Grey, Charles Starrett and J. Farrell MacDonald, with MacDonald probably best known.

It is adult material.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

The Big Shakedown

(First National)

Drama

There is plenty of drama, more or less of the melodramatic variety, and plenty of opportunity for effective selling and exploitation in this exposé type of story of racketeer activity. Something of an innovation among these stories, this picture deals with the illicit operations of drugstore racketeers, not of the habit-forming variety, but rather the best-selling concoctions of the manufacturers of nationally advertised brands of toothpaste, cosmetics and the like. Therein may well lie an excellent opportunity for store tieups.

The racketeer-gangster implication in the title may make it necessary to subordinate the title in selling, but the individual exhibitor will know best how to handle that situation, based on his knowledge of his own patronage. The cast is definitely of value, with five good marquee names, including Charles Farrell, Bette Davis, Ricardo Cortez, Glenda Farrell and Allen Jenkins.

There are selling angles in the story itself, revolving about the manner in which a poor, struggling young druggist, who is also an expert chemist, is forced into the cheap preparation of standard articles, which are sold by the racketeers under the forged labels of the originals, and by typical gangster methods. The repercussion which almost causes the death of his wife and does cause the death of his child, and the legalization of beer which forces the gang to turn from one field to a new racket, offer copy ideas for selling purposes.

Farrell is the druggist, a neighborhood institution, but nonetheless highly unsuccessful. Miss Davis is his wife. Cortez, gang leader and big shot racketeer, is menacingly effective. Miss Farrell is the girl of whom he has become very tired, and Jenkins is his right-hand roughneck.

Cortez finds himself licked in the beer racket, and accidentally hits on Farrell and his ability to manufacture standard preparations at low cost. He pays Farrell merely to supervise production, and carries through his illicit selling, a highly lucrative new racket. Miss Davis' objections are of no use, but when Farrell attempts to get out of the racket, he is treated to a dose of the blackjack and succumbs. When a particular antiseptic is manufactured, the originators of that product face bankruptcy. Farrell proves his innocence of any criminal intent, but he is powerless. The jealous Miss Farrell gives the game away to the district attorney and is shot down by the gang. O'Neill, president of the antiseptic company, beaten, goes gunning for Cortez at the same time Farrell does. Farrell's wife lost her child at birth through use of the faulty antiseptic sold to the hospital. O'Neill beats Farrell to the shot, and Cortez falls into a tank of acid, a harrowing detail which may just as well be overlooked. Farrell returns to his drug store, a sadder but a better man, satisfied with his neighborhood business.

It is active and salable story material, with good cast names and a ready potential store tieup. The picture is rather adult fare.—AARONSON, New York.

A First National Production. Distributed by Warner Bros. Directed by John Francis Dillon. Screen play by Niven Busch and Rian James. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Release date, January 6, 1934. Running time, 64 minutes.

Saint Anthony of Padua

(Integrity Film)

Religious Study

Through the medium of the motion picture, here is offered as an importation from Italy a biography, in effect, of one of the best known saints of the Catholic Church, Saint Anthony, whose kindness and humanitarianism are stressed at every turn in this version of his life's story, virtually from birth to death. Pictured through the wizardry of the camera are the several miracles.

Technically the film is excellent, having been produced, by Sacras of Rome, with obvious care and attention to detail. It is wholly and exclusively a religious theme, definitely emphasized as such. The appropriate musical score is done in highly effective fashion and is chiefly, of course, of the religious order. The film is done in silent form, with subtitles in both Italian and English, and was "executed under the supervision of the Ecclesiastical authority of the Vatican, Rome, and under the patronage of the general of the Franciscan Order."

It is definitely a religious theme and so is the treatment, in story and subtitles. Those exhibitors with a patronage predominantly Catholic have an opportunity for introduction of the picture at perhaps a special showing, and for arrangements with the Catholic church or school of the community.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by Sacras, Rome, Italy. Distributed by Integrity Film Corporation. Directed by Conte Giulio Antamoro. Scenario by Reverend P. Vittorino Facchinetti. Photographed by G. Gengarli. Release date, February 8, 1934. Running time, 90 minutes.

No More Women

(Paramount-Rogers)

Dramatic Romance

With Lowe and McLaglen teamed together again in their familiar roles, this robust, rough and ready dramatic romance, naturally comedy tinged, has plenty to recommend it as regular every day entertainment. Action is fast and at times thrilling. Dialogue is along the same line and both create and preserve interest for the adventure lovers as well as for those who respond to a different kind of romance, which has the hard guys rivals for the affections of a shop girl, Sally Blane, who has inherited a deep sea salvage tug.

The salvage tug is the principal locale, although much of the excitement that permits one of those wild Lowe-McLaglen man to man battles appears as their car plunges madly through the dips and dives of a roller coaster. The big thrill is an undersea effect where, as Lowe attempts the salvage of a sunken liner's treasure, murder is attempted and the disgraced McLaglen almost loses his own life bringing Lowe back to the girl who loves him.

While the adventure atmosphere and the Lowe-McLaglen combination might suggest that "No More Women" is essentially a man's picture, the romantic angle develops unusual interest for women. In order to create feminine curiosity, considerable attention should be devoted to pointing out the romantic values. Similarly the comedy phases should be played up, and as the Lowe-McLaglen relation is strongly established, novelty of setting should be utilized to the utmost with a view to broadcasting the impression that their antics occur against a different background.

It's the kind of feature which should serve as a pleasing contrast to the current picture vogue, as here is no pretense to the elaborate but emphasis on realism of story and picture.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

A Paramount release. Produced by Charles R. Rogers. Directed by Albert Rogell. Story by Delmer Daves and Grant Leenhouts. Screen play by Delmer Daves and Lou Breslow. Based on "Underseas," by John Mikale Strong. Sound by Harry Lindgren. Photographed by Theodor Sparkuhl and Harry Fischbeck. Art director, Dave Garber. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, Feb. 23, 1934.

(Majestic)

Mystery

This murder mystery story, impeded by too persistent attempts to inject humor into its execution, has a reasonably salable cast doing its best to make the story convincing.

The idea of the matinee idol pursued by numerous women but murdered at his impromptu birthday party on the theatre's stage, with numerous folk possibly guilty, gives the exhibitor something to work with in selling the film. For the marquee there are Paul Cavanagh, Dorothy Mackaill, Natalie Moorhead and particularly, C. Audrey Smith, as the elderly, kindly detective, who with his shrewd sleuthing discovers the murderer but quietly closes his eyes to a completely justifiable homicide. Throughout, Cavanagh, the actor and victim, arouses no audience sympathy, the reaction on the whole being that he received his just desserts.

Sam Hardy, as the expected hard-skulled and brainless detective, who arrests everyone in sight and immediately thereafter has the case "in the bag," works hard with Russell Hopton, reporter, in developing the humor, but considerable of it misses fire. The exhibitor must overcome the studio's apparent lack of a logical, concentrated drive toward a conclusion, the story shooting off at seemingly unnecessary tangents at frequent intervals, and in the dialogue the frequent explosive "hells" might bring objections from patrons here and there.

When Cavanagh is shot, the deed might have been done by Richard Tucker or Jack Mullhall, father and sweetheart respectively of Ruthelma Stevens, planning to go to New York as his new leading lady; Miss Moorhead, undivorced wife, posing as his secretary; Miss Mackaill, whose young sister commits suicide when she learns what type of man Cavanagh is, or the trained chimpanzee, used in the play, which has the faculty of getting out of its cage at will and finds its trainer's revolver in one of its expeditions of exploration.

Smith, working in his own deliberate, thoughtful manner, discovers the missing gun high in the prop scenery, but no plausible explanation is given of how it could have gotten there undiscovered. He finally discovers that Miss Mackaill committed the murder for revenge, but also discovers at the same time that the chimp has killed its trainer. He permits the blame for Cavanagh's murder to rest with the helpless chimpanzee, appreciating the strength of the motive. He also effects a reconciliation of Miss Stevens and Mulhall, while Hardy takes credit for the solution of the mystery, and "knew it all the time."

The picture is perhaps best set in the midweek position.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Majestic. Executive producer, Phil Goldstone. From the story of Octavus Roy Cohen. Screen play by Edward T. Lowe. Directed by E. Mason Hopper. Photographed by Ira Morgan. Film editor, Earl Crain. Art director, Ralph Oberg. Release date, October 1, 1933. Running time, 74 minutes.

Flying Bodies

(Paramount)

Interesting

The popular and expert Grantland Rice of the sport world, in this number of the Sportlight series, discourses in interesting fashion on the balance and timing which make possible the perfection of the high jumper, the pole vaulter, the diver, the surf-board rider, the ski expert and the champion tumbler. The human examples go through their paces to the accompaniment of Mr. Rice's explanatory comment. It is of general interest, and definitely entertaining.—Running time, 10 minutes.

In the Devil Dog House

(RKO Radio)

Some Laughs

The occasionally amusing team of Clark and McCullough herein turn detectives, who are at the same time clock repairers, etc., and contrive to be nonsensically amusing with Clark carrying the burden of the comedy and McCullough a willing foil. They become involved with Dorothy Granger and her Marine sergeant husband, the novelty company head with whom she is carrying on a flirtation and his blonde secretary. They work their way out of the difficulty eventually, with fairly amusing complications.—Running time, 21 minutes.

What Does 1934 Hold

Novel

There is a certain amount of novelty in this subject, in which Wynn, noted astrologer, forecasts the potentialities of 1934, in general terms. He makes reference to national and international conditions, and advises, and warns people what may and what may not happen in the new year, in accordance with the period of their birthdays. Though it is done only in the manner of a lecturer addressing a dinner gathering, it is worth billing attention for the many people who have a profound faith in astrology.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Broadway Varieties

(Universal)

Entertaining

For audiences liking a vaudeville melange in twenty minutes there is a range of entertainment in the Mentone Productions, from juggling and comedy to midget singing. There are the acrobatic Jim Wong troupe, Slim Timblin and Warren Boyde in blackface, Murray Wood, midget tenor, the Mosconi Brothers and Dorothy Van Alst in fast dancing, and finally Adelaide Hall, Negro singer. Miss Hall's excellent singing is impaired by the closeups.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Pet Shop

(United Artists)

Good

A good Mickey Mouse cartoon subject, which finds Mickey taking a job as assistant in a pet shop. Things get out of hand while he is dancing with Minnie, when the ape fancies himself King Kong and mounts a pile of boxes with Minnie in his paw, a la the Empire State Building sequence. The birds and other animals come to the rescue of Minnie, and the two escape before the boss returns. Good, and amusing.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Little Red Hen

(Principal)

Entertaining

One of the Ub Iwerks cartoons, done in Cinecolor, and quite effectively, this animated number recounts, with appropriate musical score, the yarn of the little red hen, who can find no cooperation in sowing her grain, and making her bread, but plenty of barnyard assistance in the eating thereof. It is an entertaining cartoon, especially for the youngsters.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Where's Elmer?

(Universal)

Action Comedy

Here is a comedy full of gangsters and whatnot that oversteps itself. Despite novelty of development, it's a question whether there's much comedy left after the gang opens a hospital and provides its own patients by a wholesale campaign of twisting legs into compound fractures, ramming autos with a streetcar rail for a bumper, and trying to keep an NRA work balance between arm and leg fracture cases and skull crushings. Barnett became gang chief when the boss "took it on the lam," and his is the hospital idea. The "Where's Elmer" is confusing, as Barnett is the comedy and Frank Miles as Elmer, has little to do.—Running time, 20 minutes.

In the Orient

(Columbia)

Fair

Mr. Medbury of the Laughing with Medbury travel series is occasionally amusing in his accompanying monologue, but often enough he works almost painfully to extract a laugh in dialogue from a pictorial situation. The camera work in this subject, which finds him hopping here and there in the Far East, is excellent, and the material is interesting. It might be even better if Mr. Medbury permitted a few scenes to pass without an attempt at humor.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Private Lessons

(Vitaphone)

Good

There is enjoyable entertainment in this subject, with Hal LeRoy, of the miraculous tapping feet, drawing rhythm from his shoes, and four tuneful song numbers add their bit to the proceedings. Dawn O'Day, attractive little brunette, makes an admirable combination, especially in the tap dance, with LeRoy. The boy gets a job in Miss O'Day's dance school, giving private lessons, which angers her young boss. At a garden party Miss O'Day turns him down when the girls boast of flirtations at the private lessons, but it straightens itself in the end. A highly entertaining subject.—Running time, 22 minutes.

The Exploitation Special

Given plenty of time for planning—the formula is practical when applied by experienced and intelligent man-power.

Here it is: the right kind of a story—a story with "built-in" exploitation, a story in which entertainment is the first consideration.

No rush in production—which means no waste.

Concentration in selling—which means wide circulation, because any exhibitor will be eager to book a single big picture.

pictures released this year.

PETE SMITH SHORTS—M-G-M

DE-CODING THE FILM CODE

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

I. PREAMBLE — LABOR, EMPLOYEES AND TALENT IN PRODUCTION

In this fifth of Motion Picture Herald's series of articles translating the motion picture's NRA code from its complex legal phraseology into a clear and comprehensive working language for the industry, the subjects treated are: (1) compulsory minimum wage scales and maximum working hours for labor and employees in production; and (2) provisions governing the relations between producer and studio employers and their employees in the persons of skilled and unskilled workers, mechanics or labor, professional talent and executives who are employees.

Distribution and exhibition clauses of the code previously were translated, in three articles, appearing in Motion Picture Herald issues of December 23rd, January 6th and January 20th.

The first article on production was published on February 3. It pertained to the administration of the code in production and the method of such administration through the medium of the Code Authority and various special and standing committees.

The effective date of the code was December 7, and any producer, studio, film laboratory, company, firm, corporation or partnership in production, or contracted to engage in production, which has not placed into effect all of the compulsory labor and employee clauses which are applicable to production, stands in violation of the code, and if the violation is proven to be wilful, such wilful violator is liable to a fine of $500 per day for each day of such wilful violation.

Basic Labor Requirements Applicable to Production

While the labor and employee provisions of the motion picture code in their application to the production of films contain a rather comprehensive schedule of specific wage scales and working hours with which the production employer must abide, the code stipulates certain basic provisions which are generalized as follows:

(a) The compliance by all employers in production with the maximum working hours stipulated for certain mechanics, labor and employees, with minimum wage schedules, and with other conditions of employment which are specified. Maximum working hours are not applicable to the so-called executive classes of employees, which includes advisory, managerial or supervisory personnel; nor are they applicable to persons employed in emergency or maintenance or repair work; nor to professionals, such as actors (excluding extras), producers, directors, writers and the like; nor to persons whose work on continuous processes would hinder, reduce or delay production; nor to employees engaged directly in production work whose working time must necessarily follow that of a production unit; nor to persons on location work; nor to employees engaged in newsreel or cartoon production. Classes involved in these divisions are specified in the code, and will be enumerated later in this article.

Minimum wage scales are provided for studio mechanics, embracing some 40 crafts; and for 16 classes of laboratory workers; and 16 types of low-paid clerical, office and service employees; and for extra and free-lance players.

(b) No producer employer shall deny the right of any and all employees to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, without any interference whatsoever from any company, employer or company union.

(c) No employee, or person seeking employment, shall be compelled by any employer to join any company union, or to refrain from joining, organizing or assisting any labor or employee organization of his own choosing, as a requirement for employment in such company.

(d) Employees shall have a vote on the governing Code Authority when any question affecting such class or classes is to be considered by the Code Authority. Such vote shall be by a single representative selected by such employee class involved in the question.

(e) Special or standing committees shall be created for establishing new trade practices governing the relations between producer employers and creative talent.

The code does establish minimum salaries, but does not mention any maximum salaries to be paid any class of labor, worker or creative talent, but there is a clause—which has been suspended pending investigation—which would attempt to control the payment of socalled "excessive" salaries to executives and talent. It is not the intention of the NRA that salaries or wages be reduced to the minimum which is allowed under the code for any particular class, and, although the code is silent on this matter, it is generally understood that the NRA will take action to discourage any such reductions to minimums allowed.

Minimum Wage in Production Is Set at 40 Cents Per Hour

This article translating the production labor and employee provisions pertains only to actual clauses mentioned in the code. As a result of a recent investigation made in Hollywood by Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt with regards working conditions in the studios, additional clauses may be inserted in the code, or present clauses changed to improve the relations between producers and workers. In both cases, however, notice must be given and a hearing held.

In production, no person under sixteen years of age shall be employed, provided, however, where a state law provides a higher minimum age, and then such higher minimum age shall prevail in that state; and provided further that where a part is to be filled by a child in a motion picture, such child under sixteen may be employed for such part but the producer must comply with the provisions of the state law pertaining to such appearances by children under 16.

Minimum wages in production shall be those specified, and enumerated later in this article, and no person in production shall be paid less than forty cents an hour, or $16 for a maximum work week of forty hours. Classes of labor or studio mechanics, laboratory workers, certain office, clerical and service employees and others

CODE AUTHORITY AND STUDIO COMMITTEES

The motion picture industry's Code Authority is the administrative and interpretative governing board of the code in the industry, and, in addition, is charged with effecting compliance of all those in the industry with the code's provisions.

It has no police powers, but shall report wilful violations of the code's labor violations to the NRA and the NRA will then attempt to end the violations, and, in case it is unsuccessful in this connection, the NRA has the power to bring the matter to the courts to settle.

In order to administer the code provisions governing relations between producers and creative talent employees, such as writers, directors, technicians, contract players, extras and free-lance players, the code creates special or standing ccommittees for each of these classes, and each class shall have equal representation on such committee. The structure and modus operandi of these committees were the subjects of the first article on the translation of production provisions of the code, appearing in Motion Picture Herald issue February 3.

Generally, the mechanical classes of labor and workers at studios shall work only 36 hours per week, except in certain emergency cases, or when they are on location.

Office, clerical and certain service workers shall be employed no more than 40 hours per week, except in emergencies.

The minimum wage scales and the maximum schedules of working hours do not apply to any professional workers, such as stars, directors, writers, cameramen, assistants, production executives, managers or supervisors; nor do they apply to workers in newsreel or cartoon work.

The motion picture code, like all others written under the NRA, is basically an employers' document, in which the employers are pledged to create fair competition, eliminate unfair trade practices and establish maximum hours of employment and minimum wage scales as stipulated, and to which provisions each employer is legally bound. And, all of the socalled "burdens" of compliance are placed on the shoulders of the employers, and labor as a class has no responsibilities.

However, the executive or supervisory type of employee has a very definite responsibility under the code, and while they are not affected themselves by the wage and working hour requirements, they shall not, in their executive or supervisory position, wilfully violate any of the provisions of the code. And, if they do violate any of the code's provisions while carrying out their executive duties, and if such violation is proven to be wilful, they are liable to a fine of $500 for each day of violation. Skilled or unskilled mechanics or workers have no such responsibilities of compliance; nor have the professional people any such responsibility of compliance. Again, such compliance rests with the employing producer or studio and the executive officers, or supervisory officials.

This is the second article of the series translating the PRODUCTION sections of the motion picture code from the legal phraseology of the law into a working language of the business. Treated are the labor and employee provisions that are applicable to production, such as various schedules of minimum wages and maximum working hours and other conditions of employment.

In the third article of this Production series, trade practices will be translated. The first Production article, which appeared in the February 3 issue, treated the manner of administering the Production sections of the code through the medium of the Code Authority and various committees.

Method of Administering Labor Provisions

Unlike the labor provisions of exhibition, there is no specific method mentioned for the arbitration of disputes between producer or studio employers and those classes of skilled or unskilled studio and laboratory mechanics, workers or clerical employees whose wages and hours are stipulated in the code. And this because the producer or employer must abide by such hour and wage conditions or else stand in violation of the code. If the producer or employer does not adopt such hour or wage conditions, then the class of mechanic or worker involved shall have the right to present the grievance either to the local NRA Labor Board, or to the local NRA Compliance Board, or to the NRA headquarters at Washington. Or, the grievance may be presented to the film Code Authority, which, if unsuccessful in effecting compliance, shall refer to matter to the NRA.

However, relations between producers or studios and extra players or free-lance players shall be governed by special standing committees which are created in the code. And, whenever the necessity arises for creating a set of regulations governing the relations between the producers and employees of the creative classes, specifically actors, contract talent, directors, technicians and writers, then the code gives the Code Authority and the Administrator full authority together to appoint special committees for whichever class is involved, which committee shall recommend such necessary regulations to govern the relations between the producer employers and the class of professional involved.

In addition, the code specifically mentions certain trade practices which shall govern the relations between the producer employer and professionals or creative talent.

The code is not intended to apply to production companies in the 9mm or 16mm fields or to non-theatrical or television companies, where such companies are not operating in competition to a regular motion picture theatre.

Additional wage payments are provided for overtime or distant location work for the 40 different classes of studio mechanics and the 16 different classes of laboratory workers whose minimum wages are established in the code.

Where any employment agreement or contract existed on December 7th between the producer or studio and any of the 40 classes of studio mechanics or 16 classes of laboratory workers stipulated as of August 23, 1933, a higher minimum wage scale or a lower schedule of working hours, then such higher minimum wage scale or lower schedule of working hours shall prevail. This means, then, that the wage scales and working schedules for any of the 40 classes of studio mechanics and 16 classes of laboratory workers as established in the code shall not prevail if on December 7th, the effective date of the code, any of these classes shall have had a contract with a producer or studio in which contract a higher minimum of wages or lower working hour schedules existed as of August 23, 1933; and if such a contract did exist between the employer and workers and did provide as of August 23, 1933, higher minimum wages and fewer working hours than are stipulated in the code, then such higher minimum wages and such fewer hours shall prevail over the requirements set forth in the code for such class of workers.

IMPORTANT: In Sub-sections 5 and 6 of this article, captioned "Hours of Employment" and "Wage Scales," there are enumerated specifically and in detail the names of classes or groups of all kinds of employees in production whose salaries and working hour schedules are established under the code; also details pertaining to conditions under which exceptions are allowable; also details pertaining to those groups of employees whose salaries and/or working hour schedules are not established under the code.

2. DEFINITIONS

In order that each member of the production branch of the motion picture industry shall have a more thorough knowledge of the application of the labor provisions of the code, a study of the following definitions that are applicable to production should be made:

1. "MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY" shall be deemed to include, without limitation, the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures and all activities related thereto, except as specifically excepted from the operation of the code as in the cases on uncompetitive non-theatrical and 9mm or 16mm companies or television.

2. "PRODUCER" shall include, without limitation, any person, partnership, association, firm, company and/or corporation or studio which shall engage in the production of motion pictures or contract to engage in production.

3. "EMPLOYEE" shall be deemed to refer to and include every person employed by any producer, studio, laboratory, partnership or company engaged in production.

4. "LABOR," although not described specifically in the code, shall be used for purposes of this translation to include those 40 classes of studio mechanics and 16 classes of laboratory workers whose wage scales and working hour schedules are established under the code.

5. "PROFESSIONALS" or "CREATIVE TALENT," although not described specifically in the code, shall be intended for purposes of this translation to include stars and players (except extras and free-lance players earning less than $150 weekly), directors, writers, authors, scenarists, contract talent other than those mentioned herein, and certain of the higher grades of technicians, cameramen and the like.

6. "EXECUTIVES WHO ARE EMPLOYEES," although not described specifically in the code, shall be intended for purposes of this translation to include executive employees, managers, department heads, supervisors, business managers, producers and the like.

7. "EXTRAS" shall be deemed to include extra players, atmosphere people, crowd players and the like, all of whom do not speak any dialogue in their parts, and when such players do speak some dialogue, regardless of how little, they shall be known as "BIT PLAYERS."

8. "FREE-LANCE" PLAYERS shall be deemed to include players who are not included in the extra class as described in the paragraph next above, and who are not classified as contract talent and who receive less than $150 per week.

9. "ADMINISTRATOR" shall be deemed to mean the National Recovery Administrator (General Hugh S. Johnson).

3. EMPLOYEES, LABOR AND THE TRADE PRACTICES

Those classes of production employees in position of a clerical or service nature or the skilled or unskilled mechanics of studios and film laboratories to which groups the code's maximum hours and minimum wage scales are applicable, and none of which groups belong to any of the executive-managerial-supervisory classes, have absolutely no responsibilities under any of the clauses or provisions of fair competition and trade practices in the code.

However, the executive employees, department heads, supervisory officials and such have a very definite responsibility under the code, and while they themselves are not affected by the requirements for wage scales and working hours for producers' employees, such executive employees, department heads, and supervisory officials shall not wilfully violate any of the provisions of the code. And, if they do violate any of the code's provisions while performing their regular duties, and if such violation is proven to be wilful, they are liable to a fine of $500 for each day of violation.

In addition, the production section of the code specifically regulates such executive employees, producer employees, department heads, managers, supervisory officials and the like with regards their interest in any agent or agency for creative talent, and says that no such executives shall hold such an interest in an agency without meeting certain requirements. These will be explained in the third production translation article, which will analyze all trade practices. This article will appear in a subsequent issue.

WORKERS AND THE CODE AUTHORITY

It is definite, then, that no producer's employee who is an executive, department head or supervisory official, shall, during the performance of his duties, or otherwise, violate any of the production clauses of the code.

In addition to providing for the creation of special or permanent committees to govern the relations between producer or studio employers and professionals, or socalled "creative talent," such as stars and players (other than extras or free-lance players receiving less than $150 weekly), directors, writers, technicians and the like, the code also creates similar committees for extras and free-lance players for similar purposes.

Some clauses in the trade practice division of the production section of the code specifically mention certain things which professionals shall do and shall not do, and these trade practices will be detailed in the third production translation article, to appear in a subsequent issue.

Obviously, when a producer employer or studio employer or film laboratory employer is solely responsible for the wilful violation of any code provision, such employer's executive employee, department head, supervisory official or manager is in no way liable.

4. CODE AUTHORITY AND EMPLOYEES AND LABOR

Because the motion picture Code Authority is intended to be the general administrative agency of the code to effect compliance of the industry with the code, and to interpret the code law, relations between producer employers or studios with their employees may come under the scrutiny of the Code Authority, either directly, or indirectly through committees appointed by the Code Authority in conjunction with the Administrator, or otherwise.

It appears that relations between producers or studio employers and employees will be governed for the most part by such committees.

The Administrator in all probability will create some additional committees or boards in Hollywood, following his recent investigation of production conditions.

In the second translation article on production—appearing in the February 3 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, starting on page 54—full details were given of the structure, purposes, procedure, judisdiction and duties of special or standing committees intended to govern the relations between producer or studio employers and stars and players, directors, extra and free-lance players, writers, scenarists, contract talent and technicians.

Also described in detail in the February 3rd article was the relation of the Code Authority to production employees, workers, professionals and executives.

The Code Authority shall turn over to the NRA Labor Board or to the NRA Compliance Board or to the National Recovery Administration at Washington, any violations by producer or studio employers of the labor provisions of the code, and the NRA or its boards shall attempt to end the violation, and, if not successful, shall take steps to prosecute the violator.

The Code Authority, not having any "police" powers, must place labor violations in the hands of the NRA boards for adjustment or prosecution, if the Code Authority itself cannot induce the violator to cease and desist from such violation.

However, the Code Authority may decide on important questions governing the relations between labor or employees and their producer or studio employers, and, for this purpose, the code decrees that, as and when any question directly or indirectly affecting any class of production employee is to be considered by the Code Authority, one representative of such employee class, selected by the Administrator from nominations made by such employee class in such manner as may be prescribed by the Administrator, shall sit with and become for such purposes only a member of the Code Authority with the right to vote on the question. Such membership on the Code Authority of such representative of the class of employees involved in the question, shall terminate automatically upon the settlement of the question by the Code Authority.

In addition, Marie Dressler and Eddie Cantor are permanent non-voting representatives of production workers and talent on the Code Authority. Both Miss Dressler and Mr. Cantor are supposed to participate in Code Authority meetings and activities only when questions or matters arise pertaining to the production classes which they are intended to represent.

The Code Authority and/or any of its committees or boards and/or the Administrator and/or the Division Administrator (Sol A. Rosenblatt) may recommend changes in any part of the code, including parts pertaining to production employees, workers and talent; or either one may recommend additions to those provisions already in the code, and, after a hearing, such changes or additions, when approved by the Administrator, shall become a part of the code and a violation of such approved changes or additions shall constitute a violation of the code.

It is expected that, as a result of the recent investigation in Hollywood made by Division Administrator Rosenblatt, some changes or additions to the production part of the code will be recommended.

The full significance of the Code Authority, its relation to the code and to the industry, and its purposes, personnel, procedure, jurisdiction, duties and all other information pertaining to it, was discussed at length in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, issue of December 23, pages 24 to 26.

LABOR PROVISIONS ARE COMPULSORY

The labor provisions in the production section of the code must be adopted by producers, film laboratories and all others in production, regardless of whether they sign the code acceptance blank on or before February 28, the deadline for filing code acceptance blanks with the Code Authority in New York.

Failure to abide by the labor and employee provisions makes a producer or studio or film laboratory liable to a fine of $500 for each day's violation.

5. HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT IN PRODUCTION

If any class, group, craft, union or association of production workers or employees had in force a contract or agreement of employment with producer or studio employers on the date when the code became effective (December 7th), and if such employment contract or agreement of working hours shall be less than the number of hours per week as provided for in the code with respect to any of such workers or employees, such schedule of fewer working hours in the localities where such fewer hours of labor were enforced shall be the maximum number of hours that any such workers or employees shall work in any one week in such localities. In short, where an employment agreement in force on December 7th provided for a shorter work week as of August 23, 1933, than that provided for any class under the code, then such shorter work week shall prevail.

Although the code provides a general maximum work week of forty hours for employees not otherwise provided for (See Sub-Division A, below); and a forty-hour maximum for 24 different groups of clerical, office and service workers (See Sub-Division B, below); and a thirty-six hour maximum for some 60 groups of studio and film laboratory skilled and unskilled mechanics and labor (See Sub-Division C, below), such maximum hours shall not apply to any of these employees in the three divisions mentioned in the foregoing when such employees or workers are engaged in any emergency, maintenance or repair work; nor to cases where restriction of hours of SKILLED WORKERS on continuous processes would hinder, reduce, or delay production; nor to any class of workers on location.

However, in most cases, the code does specify overtime wage payments and certain other conditions (all discussed later in this article), whenever such workers or employees are compelled to work beyond the maximum number of hours allowable under ordinary circumstances.

A—GENERAL MAXIMUM FOR UNCLASSIFIED WORKERS

No employee who is not otherwise provided for in the hereinafter sub-divisions of this subsection 5 shall work more than forty hours in any one week.

D—FORTY-FOUR HOUR MAXIMUM FOR CERTAIN CARTOON WORKERS

No tracers or opaquers employed by producers of animated motion picture cartoons shall work more than forty-four hours in any one week, subject to the exceptions in cases of emergency or while on location or where such restriction of hours would hinder, reduce or delay production.

E—MAXIMUM HOURS FOR NEWSREEL CAMERAMEN AND SOUNDMEN

The working hours of news-reel cameramen and soundmen shall be limited to 320 hours in any eight-week period, to be computed from the time such employees leave their base of operation with their equipment until the time of their return to their base of operation, or are required to remain in a designated place.

Every newsreel cameraman or soundman shall be given one day off with pay for every four cumulative days (24 hours per day) that he is away from his base of operations, except if on roving or "gypsy" assignments, and in such cases they are not entitled to such day off with pay.

Contacting and planning shall not be computed as working hours; nor shall the limitation of 320 working hours in any eight-week period apply to newsreel cameramen or soundmen who make special trips of a semi-vacational nature on trains, ships, etc., or who shall be assigned to duty at a summer or winter resort for an extended period of time; nor shall the limitation of 320 working hours in any eight-week period apply to newsreel cameramen or soundmen on roving or "gypsy" assignments, and, as stated in the foregoing, such cameramen or soundmen on roving or "gypsy" assignments shall not be entitled to one day off with pay.

F—EXCEPTIONS AND EXEMPTIONS TO MAXIMUM HOURS; OTHER STIPULATIONS ON HOURS

The maximum number of weekly working hours which are fixed in the foregoing Sub-division A (general unclassified workers); Sub-division B (clerical, office and service workers); Sub-division C (studio and film laboratory mechanics and labor); and Sub-division D (certain cartoon workers), shall not apply in the following cases:

1. EMERGENCIES, DELAYS

Such maximum hours fixed in the sub-divisions described above shall not apply to such workers or employees included in such sub-divisions, when such workers or employees are engaged on emergency or maintenance and repair work; nor shall such maximum hours apply to cases where such restriction of hours of any skilled workers in the above classes employed on continuous processes would hinder, reduce or delay production. (See: "WAGES," to follow, for overtime payments.)

2. LOCATION

Maximum hours do not apply in any form to employees assigned on location, regardless of the classification of such employees. (See: "WAGES," to follow, for special wage scales for location work.)

No schedule of maximum working hours shall apply to the following classes in production:

1. EXECUTIVES, PROFESSIONALS

The code does not establish maximum working hour schedules of any nature for employees in executive, managerial, official or professional capacities, such as

*Actors
Attorneys
Attorney's Assistants
Business Managers
Department Heads
Dept. Head's Assistants
Directors
Doctors Executives
Executives' Assistants

(*)Excepting extra players, "atmosphere" people, and free-lance players receiving less than $150 weekly. These classes are governed by certain wage and hour conditions, which are discussed later in this article.

2. CERTAIN SKILLED WORKERS

No schedule of maximum working hours shall apply during the making of any single production to employees engaged directly in production work whose working time must necessarily follow that of a production unit, such as

Any of the aforementioned employees who are employed on a hourly or on a daily basis with overtime compensation shall at the conclusion of any single production be given a full day off without pay for each six hours of work in excess of a thirty-six hour weekly average during the production. However, any such employees who are employed on a weekly basis, whether by agreement in writing, or otherwise, shall not be governed by the aforementioned stipulation.

The following groups are those which are employed on an hourly or on a daily basis and are the crafts which shall be given a day off without pay for each six hours of work in excess of a thirty-six hour weekly average during a single production (except when such employees are employed on a weekly basis):

Executives	Sub-Editors
Executives' Assistants	Supervisory Offic'ls
	Typesetters

(*) The working hours of newsreel cameramen and soundmen shall, as previously stated in this article, be limited to 320 hours in any eight-week period, to be computed from the time such employees leave their base of operation with their equipment until the time of their return to their base of operation, or are required to remain in a designated place. Every newsreel cameraman or soundman shall be given one day off with pay for every four cumulative days (24 hours each per day) that he is away from his base of operations, except if on roving or "gypsy" assignments, and in such cases they are not entitled to such a day off with pay. (Other conditions governing the working hours of newsreel cameramen and soundmen appear in this article, under Subdivision E, in preceding columns.)

No schedule of maximum worikng hours shall apply to

CARTOON WORKERS

Employees of producers of animated motion picture cartoons in the following classifications shall not be governed by any schedule of maximum working hours:

Animators	*Opaquers
Assist'nt Animators	Story Dept. Employees
Cartoon Photog'hers	*Tracers
Music Dept. Employees

(*) No tracers or opaquers employed by producers of animated motion cartoons shall work, however, more than forty-four hours in any one week, subject, of course, to the exceptions in cases of emergency or while on location or where such restriction of hours would hinder, reduce or delay production.

6. WAGE SCALES FOR PRODUCTION WOKRERS

If any class, group, craft, union or association of production workers or employees whose minimum wages are established in the code, had in force a contract or agreement of employment with producer or studio employers on the date when the code became effective (December 7th), and if such employment contract or agreement specified as of August 23, 1933 that the minimum wages per week shall be more than the minimum wages per week as provided for in the code with respect to any such workers or employees, then such schedule of higher minimum wages in the localities where such higher minimum wages were enforced, shall be deemed to be and shall be the minimum wages that such workers or employees shall be paid in such localities. In short, where an employment agreement in force on December 7th provided for higher minimum wages as of August 23, 1933, than the minimum wages provided under the code then such higher minimum wages shall prevail.

Minimum wage scales established in the code for production workers are as follows:

MINIMUM WAGES MAXIMUM HOURS

Enumerated in this article on labor and employee provisions of the code in production are the wage scales for some forty different crafts of studio mechanics and skilled and unskilled studio workers; and the wage scales for twenty classes of film laboratory mechanics and skilled and unskilled laboratory workers; and the wage scales for extra players, atmosphere people, bit players, free-lance players receiving less than $150 weekly, and others.

Maximum working hours are also recorded for these various classes; also mentioned are certain conditions governing the enforcement of maximum working hour schedules.

A—GENERAL MINIMUM FOR UNCLASSIFIED WORKERS

No production employee or worker of any class whose wages are not otherwise provided for specifically in the code shall be paid less than forty cents per hour.

B—MINIMUM WAGES FOR CLERICAL, OFFICE AND CERTAIN SERVICE WORKERS

No employee of any of the following three classes: (1) Clerical; (2) Office; (3) Service, shall be paid less than fifty cents an hour:

1. CLERICAL WORKERS

Clerks	File Clerks
Garage Clerks

2. OFFICE WORKERS

Accountants	Readers

When any of the aforementioned film laboratory mechanics or skilled or unskilled labor classes work more than thirty-six hours in any one week (1) on emergency or maintenance or repair work, or (2) to avoid hindering, reducing or delaying production, he shall be compensated at straight time for all overtime in excess of thirty-six cumulative hours worked in any one week.

With respect to the twenty classes of film laboratory mechanics and skilled or unskilled labor which are mentioned above in this Subdivision (D), the foregoing wage scales mentioned for such twenty classes above shall prevail on location work except that the following wage scales may be substituted on distant location work, if so stipulated before such distant location employment commences and all such employees' expenses are paid. Rates that may be substituted for distant location work when employed subject to "call at any time":

Studio hourly rate	Distant location, daily rate when less than 1 week	Distant location, weekly rate
$2.25	$27.25	$161.75

.83⅓	8.50	51.75
.75	8.00	46.75
.60	6.50	37.75

However, when the distant location daily rate above is used, the total wage for any one week while on distant location shall not exceed the distant location weekly wage which is also stipulated in the above chart.

E—EXCEPTIONS & EXEMPTIONS TO MINIMUM WAGE PROVISIONS

The motion picture code does not establish minimum wage scales for any groups or classes of studio or production or film laboratory workers other than those mentioned above in Subdivisions (A), (B), (C) and (D). However, minimum wages are established for extras, atmosphere players, crowd players and free-lance players receiving less than $150 weekly. Working conditions for these groups of players are described below.

Socalled "excessive" salaries would be controlled by another section of the code, which section has been temporarily suspended, pending investigation by the Administrator.

7. WORKING CONDITIONS FOR EXTRA PLAYERS

For purposes of governing working conditions and wages of extra players, atmosphere people and crowd players, the code creates a Standing Committee for Extra Players. Specific purposes of this committee, together with the personnel, procedure, jurisdiction, duties and general comment regarding this committee follows:

A. PURPOSES

For the drafting and administration of rules and regulations to be adopted by casting agencies and producers with respect to their treatment of and with respect to their relations with extra players; to investigate conditions of employment for extras with a view to making recommendations to the Administrator; to effectuate the code provisions which pertain to extras and their relations with producers and casting agencies; to supervise and to interpret the terms of any provisions made for extras, and to receive and pass on any complaints and grievances made by extras against casting agencies and producers or studios; and to cause a reclassification of extras and extra talent.

B. PERSONNEL

The Code Authority or Administrator shall appoint a committee of a permanent nature, and to be representative of producers (employers), extra players and the public, and such standing committee shall be empowered to appoint subcommittees for any purpose. Members of the standing committee appointed by Division Administrator Rosenblatt are: Chairman, Mrs. Mabel Kinney, California Industrial Welfare Commissioner; Representing Producers: Fred Pelton, B. B. Kahane, M. H. Hoffman, Pat Casey and J. P. Normanly; Representing Casting Directors: Phil Friedman and Dave Werner; Representing Actors Equity: Charles Miller; Representing Extra Players: Allan Garcia, Larry Steers, Lee Phelps, J. B. Russell, Una Hopkins and Fred Burns.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION—DUTIES

The production section of the code has a special division intended to regulate conditions of employment for extras. It says that a standing committee shall be appointed to provide for rules and regulations to be adopted by all casting agencies, and producers, and such standing committee shall effectuate the purposes of the provisions pertaining to extras, and shall interpret the terms of any provisions made for extras and shall supervise the same, including those provisions already incorporated in the code, and shall receive and pass on any complaints or grievances involving extra players, especially those pertaining to conditions of their employment, and shall otherwise aid in effectuating the extra provisions of the code, subject to review by the Administrator. All activities of the standing committee, or of any sub-committees appointed by it, shall be subject to review by the Administrator.

Such standing committee under the supervision of the Code Authority or the Administrator shall cause a reclassification of extra players and extra talent, to be undertaken, based upon the following qualifications for such extras:

(a) Extra players shall be those who by experience and/or ability are known to be competent to play group and individual business parts and to otherwise appear in a motion picture in other than atmospheric or crowd work.

(b) Atmosphere people who are not to be classified as dependent on motion pictures for a livelihood, but who may be recorded, listed, and called upon for occasional special qualifications not possible of being filled from the regular registered extra players.

(c) Crowds not classified, including racial groups, location crowds where transportation is unpractical and crowd assemblies of a public nature.

Among other conditions specified in the extras part of the code to come under the direct supervision of the standing committee for extras is a minimum pay scale for extra players, atmosphere people and crowds, such minimum pay being as follows:

(1) Extra players shall be paid a minimum of $7.50 per day, with this minimum to be graded upward according to the character and importance of the work, the performance and the personal wardrobe required.

The minimum salary for Class A "dress" people is to be $15 per day, provided, however, that if an extra player who is employed as an extra, is required to play a part or bit with essential story dialogue, such extra player shall not be deemed to be an extra player for that part, and shall become a bit player, and his compensation for such part or bit shall be fixed by agreement between such player and the producer for whom the part or the bit is undertaken, but the minimum compensation to such part player or bit player shall not be less than $25 for such part or bit. This means that whenever any extra player speaks any dialogue, regardless of how little, such player automatically becomes a bit player for purposes of that particular performance, and the performance of such bit by an extra player shall not cause the extra player to lose his registered standing as an extra player.

(2) Atmosphere people shall be paid a minimum of $5 per day, and any extra player who is registered may accept atmospheric work without losing or jeopardizing his registration as an extra player.

(3) Crowd players shall be paid a minimum of $5 per day, provided that this minimum shall not prevent the employment of large crowds under special circumstances at a rate lower than the minimum. In other words, the minimum of $5 per day each for crowds may be lowered if such reduction will permit of the employment of larger groups.

(4) Transportation to and from locations shall be paid to extra players by the producer. There shall also be paid to extra players for interviews and fittings the payments provided for in Order 16-A of the Industrial Welfare Commission of the State of California; except that in the event that any interview extends beyond one and one-half hours, the extra player, even though he is not engaged, shall receive not less than one-fourth of a day's pay —or $1.88—and, if any interview shall extend beyond two hours the extra player shall receive an additional one-fourth of a day's pay for every additional two hours or fraction thereof.

In addition to any other conditions which it deems necessary, the standing committee for extra players shall provide for specific working conditions, and shall supervise such working conditions, as follows:

(a) In casting bureaus and casting agencies, casting and employment by interviews of women and children shall be done by women casting officials and men by men.

(b) No person shall be employed as an extra player or atmosphere worker who is a dependent member of the immediate family of any regular employee of a motion picture company, or any person who is not obliged to depend upon extra work as a means of livelihood, unless the exigencies of production, reasonably construed, require an exception to be made. And further, no one shall be employed as an extra player or atmosphere worker on account of personal favoritism.

The purpose of this clause is to spread the work for extras, and it was made known in Hollywood last week that a special sub-committee, to be appointed by the standing committee for extras, will supervise the regulation of this clause, and make thorough investigations of the extras' employment situation with a view to making recommendations for changes, even if changes in the code are found to be necessary or advisable.

(c) A day's work for an extra in any state shall be eight hours, with overtime as provided by the existing requirements of the California State Industrial Welfare Commission.

(d) No person coming under the classifications of extra player or atmosphere worker (excepting crowds) shall be permitted to work in more than one picture for the same day's pay, including overtime.

(e) Rotation of work for all registered extras shall be established by the standing committee for extras to such reasonable degree as may be possible and practicable.

(f) No person who is not a registered extra player shall be requested by a studio casting office from any outside casting agency, and each registered extra player shall be provided with a card for identification; suitable regulations for carrying out this provision shall be adopted by the standing committee for extras.

D. GENERAL

The standing committee for extra players, as described in detail in the foregoing, made its first report, the other day, to Division Administrator Rosenblatt, in Hollywood, and on the basis of this report Mr. Rosenblatt recommended the appointment by the standing committee of various sub-committees to look into problems affecting extras. Mr. Rosenblatt added that should this procedure fail to correct the situation pertaining to extra players, then changes would be made in the code to effect such remedial measures. It was the opinion at the meeting of the standing committee for extras that provisions in the code pertaining to such players were adopted before conditions could be properly analyzed, and that now such investigations as are necessary will be made. The sub-committees started work immediately.

(b) and (c) The straight wage scale for each class above shall apply on all location work, except when on distant location, and then a higher wage scale may be paid; such higher scales are those appearing above under the columns (c): "Distant Location, Daily Rate When Less Than One Week" and "Distant Location, Weekly Rate."

CONDITIONS FOR FREE-LANCE PLAYERS

8. WORKING CONDITIONS FOR THE FREE-LANCE PLAYERS

For purposes of governing working conditions for free-lance players receiving less than $150 weekly, the code creates a Standing Committee for Free-Lance Players. Specific purposes of this committee, together with the method of selecting its personnel, jurisdiction, duties and general comment regarding this committee follows:

A. PURPOSES

For the drafting and administering of rules and regulations governing working conditions, minimum adequate compensation and the relations between producers or studios and casting agencies with so-called free-lance players receiving compensation of $150 or less per week; to investigate conditions of employment for free-lance players with a view to making recommendations to the Administrator; to effectuate the code provisions pertaining to free-lance players and their relations with producers and casting agencies; to supervise and to interpret the terms of any provisions made for free-lance players, and to receive and pass on any complaints and grievances made by free-lance players against casting agencies and producers or studios.

B. PERSONNEL

The Code Authority or the Administrator shall appoint a standing committee for free-lance players, to be representative of the producers (employers), the public and free-lance players. The committee may appoint sub-committees.

C. PROCEDURE—JURISDICTION —DUTIES

The committee and/or the Code Authority, after investigating present conditions pertaining to free-lance players, shall undertake and provide for rules and regulations to be binding upon all producers with respect to free-lance players who are not of the extra classifications, but who do receive compensation of less than $150 per week, and this standing committee of producers-public and free-lance players shall effectuate any provisions of the code pertaining to free-lance players and shall interpret the terms of any provisions made for free-lance players, and shall supervise these provisions and shall receive and pass on any complaints and grievances made by free-lance players against producers or studios, and shall otherwise aid in effectuating the free-lance provisions, subject to review by the Administrator. All activities of this standing committee for free-lance players, or of any sub-committees appointed by it, may be subject to review by the Administrator.

Such standing committee for free-lance players, under the supervision of the Code Authority and/or the Administrator, shall make full investigation with respect to all working conditions of such free-lance players, and shall undertake and provide for, by the rules and regulations hereinabove provided for, with respect to hours of employment, rotation and distribution of work to such reasonable degree as may be possible and practicable, and minimum adequate compensation for such free-lance players.

New York State Plans New Taxes

New York film circles were greatly disturbed late last week at news from Albany that the state legislature was at work on a sales tax of two per cent for introduction perhaps within a week.

The measure, which seems to be designed to balance municipal budgets within the next 18 months or two years, would apply to both distribution revenue and theatre receipts. It is estimated the measure would cost the exhibitors and exchanges of New York state several million dollars. Exhibitors throughout the state began at once to marshal their forces in opposition to the proposed legislation, contending that such a tax would force hundreds of theatres out of business.

The bill, being drafted in committee, provides that the tax may not be passed on to the public. The measure will exempt wages only, it is understood, and will be designed as a temporary law. Drafting of the legislation was begun immediately following submission of the report of the state commissioner for the revision of tax laws. The report recommends the two per cent sales tax instead of the present one per cent despite Governor Herbert Lehman's recent recommendation for the abolition of the sales tax in its entirety.

Markum Candidate for Mayor

Louis R. Markum, owner of the Rex and operator of Paramount theatres in Indianapolis, has announced his candidacy for the mayoralty as a Republican in the primaries to be held in May. He is only 34 and has been a state representative.

Cohen With Powers

Harry Cohen, former assistant European general manager for Warner, has been named eastern representative by P. A. Powers for the units producing Ub Iwerks' "Willie the Whopper" and "Flip the Frog" cartoon series for MGM release.

Darmour Forms New Firm

Larry Darmour has formed a new producing company on the Coast, Globe Pictures, in association with H. C. Hopper, managing director of the Cinema Mercantile Corporation.

Johnston Succeeds Reeve

John LeRoy Johnston has been named chairman of the studio publicity directors' committee on the Coast of the MPPDA, succeeding Arch Reeve.

Academy Board Reduces Dues

The executive committee of the technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences this week recommended to the board of governors substantial reductions in its members' dues. The reason for the proposed reductions, it was said, was primarily a recognition of the service given both the industry and the Academy by this branch through their active participation in the Research Council program, and also to place Academy membership more within the means of the type of technician qualified for membership in this particular branch.

At the same time the Society of Motion Picture Engineers announced, in New York, similar reductions in membership dues. For some time the SMPE and the Academy's technical branches have regarded each other as definite competitors.

The Academy's reductions are retroactive to January 1 of the current year, with new dues for active membership in the branch being set at $15 annually and for associate members $10, with initiation fees for new members set at a sum equal to one year's dues.

In addition to its reductions of dues, the SMPE also announced new membership grades and rates, which, in accordance with the provisions of By-Law VII, Sec. 2, proposed at the 1933 convention in Chicago, and approved by letter ballots of the active membership on January 15, 1934, established three grades of membership to take the place of the previously existing two grades.

In the society's official announcement the members are urged to cooperate with the Membership Committee and to call to the attention of their fellow engineers, and others interested in motion picture engineering, the advantages to be derived from both the reductions in dues and from the establishment of the new membership classification.

The three grades of membership thus established are as follows:

References	Admission Fee	Annual Dues
3 Fellows	$10	$20
3 Fellows or Active	$ 5	$10
1 Fellow or Active	—	$ 6

DEAR HERALD:

Do any of you exhibitors know where Twist is? Well, we didn't know either until yesterday when we received a nice, long letter from Mr. and Mrs. Frank Airey, who operate the Twist theatre at Twist, Washington. We don't know how large a town it is—it may be a fair sized city and it may only have a post office and filling station, we don't know. Anyhow it has a couple of theatre folks who take rank with the best there are in the business.

Two years ago we were on the Okanogan river and at a town listed as Omak, which we understand is about 36 miles from Twist, but at that time we didn't know there was such a town as Twist. Twist is not very far from the Canadian line and not far from the center of the state east and west and is located in the Metho valley, and this valley is surrounded by snow-capped mountains the year around, and the valley is noted for its fruit, alfalfa, wheat and stock. And this is the valley where they grow the largest potatoes in the world.

If anyone should ask us whether we'd sooner live in Twist or on Broadway we'd say, listen Abner, don't be foolish, we'd sooner live in Twist. Out there there are no traffic cops; no policemen who can't talk United States; no tall buildings to shut out the light; plenty of Northern Spys, Greenings, Baldwins and Bellflower apples; grapes, peaches, cider, not to mention rainbow trout and mountain sheep and deer. Out there a man feels like a man and it don't make any difference whether he's from Arkansaw or Florida. Even a Nebraskan feels like something out there.

A Real Place to Live

The Okanogan river is a branch of the Columbia and rises in Canada—we are told—and flows into the Columbia about 60 miles north of Wenatchee. This river is a favorite of the salmon. We were told that when the salmon run is on, one can wade out in the river with a pitchfork and fork out enough salmon in a short time to fill a dray, weighing from 12 to 30 pounds. And this is no "fish story" either. What a place to live.

Just imagine living in a valley where the fruit trees are in bloom and the scent of apple, cherry and peach blossoms fills the air, while all around the mountain tops are covered with snow and the rippling trout streams urge you to go forth in quest of the speckled beauties. Then for your wife to tell you that you hadn't any trout for dinner and that you had better get your rod and reel and get busy. Oh boy, Oh boy.

They have lots of snow out there in the winter, and it gets cold at times, too, but what does that matter. The neighbors gather in when it is too cold to work and play bridge or penny ante until bedtime, and that beats a "night club" a thousand ways. You ought to try it.

Mr. and Mrs. Airey want us to come out there and pay them a visit and make their home our stopping place while in the city. Thanks friends, that's as fine an invitation as we ever received, and we hope to do it sometime.

It is mighty nice to receive letters from acquaintances, and it is also mighty nice to receive letters from friends you have never seen, which makes one wonder if this isn't a fine world after all.

The radio today announced that in New York they had seven inches of snow and that the mercury was down to 15 degrees below zero. Out here there is no snow and the mercury is 45 degrees above zero, which proves what we have always contended, that for a summer resort you can't beat Nebraska in the winter, in spite of the crooners and jazz orchestras.

Henry Friedel, branch manager for MGM at Denver, writes us and wants us to hurry and come out there again. Henry used to ship us service out of Omaha when he was working under Sam McIntyre, manager for Metro. That was some years ago. Henry has a large family consisting of one wife, two Angora cats, one Skyoodle pup and a model T.

Henry is the boy who put the Rocky Mountain district on the map. He was raised in Nebraska, and that's what made Nebraska so famous. Thanks Henry, we will try to do it.

Up in La Crosse, Wisconsin, is where John Gund used to make beer that was so famous the world over. La Crosse can also brag of another thing. It is the home of Wm. Freise, manager of the Rivoli theatre. When we were there last summer he and Mrs. Freise took us out to their golf course and she trimmed both of us up like nobody's business. Wm. tells us if we will come back next summer Mrs. Freise promises to be more considerate of our feelings. But then her dinner more than made up for all that. It's a delightful place to go. We hope to go there again. He also enclosed a check to renew his subscription to the HERALD, saying that he couldn't get along without it. Thanks, old timer, none of 'em can.

Call to Enemies—If Any

We are not receiving as many letters from you exhibitors and stars as we would like to receive. If our friends don't want to write us, then you enemies get busy and help us edit this colyum. We are sending out an S.O.S. because of our physical condition.

If you are looking for a lucrative business in which to invest your money don't fix your eyes on the $1,000,000 palaces that were built by sucker money to tickle the vanity of some producing company.

We would sooner have the net receipts from a 500-seat house in a good community than the average net receipts from any "palace" ever built. People don't pay their money to see the beautiful decorations and gorgeous furnishings. Pa and Ma and little Susie go to see what's on the screen. We invested in an oil well some time back and the water we got out of it wasn't fit for a Missouri mule to drink. If you are bound to throw your money away do it in a strong wind, and then you know it won't come back and you will quit worrying about it.

Barbara Stanwyck, Otto Kruger and Ralph Bellamy did some very fine work in "Ever In My Heart." It is a semi-war story with the rough stuff cut out. It won't "panic 'em" but we doubt if anyone who sees it will want to shoot the manager. We liked it because it had three excellent stars who did good work, although Ralph didn't have much to do.

Those Star Broadcasts

If we were operating a theatre and the principal star in it was broadcasting on the radio in opposition to our show we'd refuse to play the picture. Maybe we are a little bullheaded, in fact, we will admit it, and that will save you from bringing the accusation. Anyhow, that's the way we feel about it.

We went down to the show the other night and we have been confined to the house ever since, which isn't so good.

San Francisco Change Switches Theatre Policy

Changes in the theatre situation in San Francisco find the Warner, which has been dark for several weeks, after having been dropped by Fox West Coast, reopening on a double feature, second run policy.

The St. Francis, formerly playing subsequent runs, resumes its earlier policy of first run pictures, the first to be "Eskimo." The changes were announced by A. M. Bowles, division manager for Fox West Coast.

Drive for Grosses Set By St. Louis Amusement

The St. Louis Amusement Company will stage a month's campaign for bigger grosses, under the supervision of Leto Hill, zone manager. The campaign will be managed by Al Zimbalist, advertising director.

A complete magazine carrying all details of the drive has been given to all company managers, who will confine their efforts to cooperative tieups, heralds, ballyhoo, carefully arranged revivals and unusual bookings.

International Group Plans League of National Films

At a recent meeting of the International Committee on Intellectual Cooperation, in Paris, it was decided to arrange for the production of educational films dealing with the League of Nations. The committee recommended that the efforts now being made by the various national groups should be encouraged. It was further recommended that the International Education Cinematographic Institute cooperate actively in preparation for the Educational Cinematographic Congress to be held in April.

Pastor Attacks "Filth" Of Times Square District

The Reverend Joseph A. McCaffrey, New York police department chaplain, last Sunday launched a campaign of protest against nudity and immorality in the Broadway theatrical district. His pulpit was that of the Holy Cross Roman Catholic Church, one of the few churches located immediately in the Times Square sector. The pastor attacked news stands, taxi dance halls, a nudist cult headquarters and night clubs, "by which Times Square rapidly is becoming the filth center of the world."

New Columbia Comedy

Columbia has started production on "Love Detective," two-reel comedy of the Broadway Comedies series of musical shorts. Archie Gottler is directing.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Wilson—A dandy picture which the entire family enjoys and builds patronage in the small town. Runnng time, 68 minues. Played Feb. 3.—E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis. Small town and country patronage.

BELOW THE SEA: Fay Wray, Ralph Bellamy—Good action picture. Not worth what we paid for it. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Jan. 24-25.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BRIEF MOMENT: Carole Lombard, Gene Raymond, Donald Cook—A good picture of the kind. Well acted but did not draw and gave poor satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DANGEROUS CROSSROADS: Chic Sale—A very good entertainment. Story good and Chic certainly is the prize rube and always pleases. The picture gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FOG: Mary Brian, Donald Cook—If you like to hear the melodic strains of a fog horn, play this one. The photography is so dark that the picture will make very little difference. The story jumps from one character to another until you hardly know just who is doing what. There is a slight chance that it will go over on a one day performance. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 25-26.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOG: Mary Brian, Donald Cook—Good murder mystery. Well acted throughout the play. It will keep your patrons interested throughout the show. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Jan. 2-3.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

HOLD THE PRESS: Tim McCoy—Good picture but someone else could have done as well in McCoy's part and they want Tim with his horse high-tailing over the plains and fighting as only he can fight. Played Jan. 26-27.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

KING OF WILD HORSES: Wm. Janney, Dorothy Appleby—A very fine action picture. Horses great and the actors fine. Played on a double bill Saturday and they all went out satisfied, saying it was great.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson, Warren William—I will say this picture has everything and is one of the best pictures of the year yet. I did not do what I expected. It's not the picture's fault. Running time, 100 minutes. Jan. 19-20.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Loretta Young, Spencer Tracy—Excellent play. It is one of the best plays that we have shown. Spencer Tracy was the main one who put this play over. Loretta Young was good. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Jan. 13-14.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MASTER OF MEN: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—Here is a picture that is sure to please every person that sees it. Jack Holt in the usual he-man type of picture that made him popular. This is good entertainment and much better than many of the so-called specials. Play it any day of the week and you will please your patrons. We received many comments on this one and did a good business for one day showing. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MY WOMAN: Helen Twelvetrees—This picture a good surprise. The advertising accessories lead you to expect something different. It is very entertaining. Well liked. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 6-7.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

MY WOMAN: Helen Twelvetrees, Wallace Ford—This is a very fine picture. Should please anywhere.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MY WOMAN: Helen Twelvetrees—Just another of Twelvetrees' features. Same story and same morbid actions. Perhaps she would do better in a musical with her voice. She means nothing as is. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Jan. 19-20.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN: Fay Wray—This was sent to me in place of "Above the Clouds." It is an excellent picture. I had no time to build up anything on it, even to put out my advertising, so consequently it did nothing. Play it midweek and get behind it. It will please. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—A good action picture. Played this on a Saturday double bill with "False Faces" (World Wide).—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RUSTY RIDES ALONE: Tim McCoy—This is a good western picture that is full of action and thrills. Silver King, the Dog, adds considerably to the entertainment in this one and it especially pleased the kids. Columbia has certainly made good westerns this season and the other producers will have a hard time to come up to their standard. Come on, Columbia, here's wishing you continued success. Business very good. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Feb. 3.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SHADOWS OF SING SING: Bruce Cabot, Mary Brian—Excellent gangster play. It will suit the kids and please most of the adults. It is unique in the way the trial is carried on and the way the defendant's attorney clears the defendant, Bruce Cabot, at the finish and finds the guilty person. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Jan. 16-17.—Grand Theatre, Dnkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—Here is a very good western picture that is slightly different from the usual western picture. There is plenty of action, shooting and fast riding in it and should please all of the western fans. Jones has always been a good drawing card here and if Columbia continues to give him good stories he will continue a success. Business good for Saturday. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 20.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

First National

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Bette Davis, Lewis Stone, Glenda Farrell—The customers all went out smiling on this one. Drew above average and it has everything a good program picture should have. Get behind it with everything you have. Give us more like this one. It's good any day in the week. Played Jan. 13-14.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Guy Kibbee, Mary Astor—This is a good picture and excellent entertainment for both young and old. Nothing big about this but a wonderful program picture that will appeal to all and should go over good in the small towns as well as in the large ones. Plenty of stars in this one and it is sure to please everyone who sees it. Played two days to good business. Played Jan. 22-23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Adolphe Menjou—Very good picture. Patrons emphasized their satisfaction with the picture. Played Jan. 14-16.—S. J. Backer, Roxy Theatre, Browns Valley, Minn. General patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell—This was one of the most entertaining, sophisticated comedies we have had. Convention goes to Atlantic City, and the boys all have a good time. Advertise it as the show you don't want your wife to see, and then they'll both enjoy it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor—Delightful comedy. Pleased without exception. Excellent trailer brought them in and the picture did the rest. Don't overlook this one. Played Jan. 12-13.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

CONVENTION CITY: Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Adolphe Menjou, Mary Astor—One of the best comedies we ever played. Seldom a comedy gives general satisfaction, but this one did in a big way. People laughed at this that had not grinned in years. And it gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Played Jan. 28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GOODBYE AGAIN: Warren William, Joan Blondell—This is good entertainment of a sophisticated nature and people liked it. Joan Blondell is becoming a star, and running this one after "Footlight Parade" was smart.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondell, Lyle Talbot, Glenda Farrell—This is a good little picture; just a program picture. It is comedy from start to finish and rather smutty in places, but my audience liked it, and that is all that counts with the exhibitor. The Warner trailer sold the picture in advance and as a result we did the best business on Friday for many weeks. A few kicks on this one, but as a whole it was well liked. Business very good. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Feb. 2.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SON OF A SAILOR: Joe E. Brown—Here is a production that registered 100 per cent satisfaction with our patrons. Believe it is considerably better than former releases. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 2.—S. J. Backer, Roxy Theatre, Browns Valley, Minn. General patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Frankie Darro, Dorothy Coonan—While the story is about a year too late, it drew a little above average business with few kicks from the customers. Darro is a very likable fellow. The picture is so true to life that the C.C.C. boys have no use for it, so don't try to get them in. The one scene where the girl was attacked in the box-car don't add any value to the general run of theatre patrons. Played Jan. 20-21.—Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Frankie Darro, Dorothy Coonan—This is a very fine picture and it will please everyone in general. Play it and it will do business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Jan. 10-11.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—This is one of the really worthwhile pictures of the year and yet does not appeal to the people who should see it. I was faulty in selling method. Make the thing a family show. It will be appreciated more as such. And don't fail to cut out the first two minutes of the eighth reel and look at it just once yourself to find out how little someone in Hollywood knows about entertainment. Mary Astor is still a beautiful star in my community, but she wouldn't be if that death scene had gone onto my screen.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WORLD CHANGES, THE: Paul Muni—A truly great production with such drama that you will not forget it in a long time. Perfect acting by Muni. You can advertise it big.—Leon C. Boldus, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Everybody pleased 100 per cent. New Orleans exchange sent me the worst print on this I've had on a picture in months. Running time, seven reels. Played Feb. 2-3.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter, Helen Vinson—This went over just so-so. Some liked it; others said they wished they had saved their money. This picture will probably go over good in the cities, but the small towns, like ours, will starve. Played Jan. 22-23.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George S. C. Small town patronage.

AS HUSBANDS GO: Warner Baxter—Just a fair picture. Baxter deserved a better story, as he is very well liked, and stories like this will hurt him.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Fox

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—Very good "Chan" picture that pleased and did a nice business. "Thank you so much," Mr. Chan. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Jan. 26-27.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

DEVIL'S IN LOVE, THE: Victor Jory, Loretta

Young—I was somewhat doubtful of this, as some reports were quite unfavorable. However, it was an intensely interesting picture and had almost everything in it to make audience appeal. Played Feb. 3.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—Will Rogers always good, and they sure liked this one. You can't go wrong on this one.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

F. P. 1: Conrad Veidt—Have seen more bad reports than I have good, but I am going to say it is a very interesting picture. Wonderful shots of the floating aerodrome at sea even if they were not actually what the plot called for. Talking very plain for an English production. Played Jan. 26.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

F. P. 1: Conrad Veidt, Leslie Fenton—Doubled this one and business was fair. The picture as a whole is fair. If you play it, double it or play it one day. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FRONTIER MARSHAL: George O'Brien, Irene Bentley, Irene Gillette—I will have to hand it to Fox on this one. It is one of the best that we have ever run. A good, logical story, not overdrawn, and this gal, Gillette, out-Wests Mae West. She struts her stuff and is she glamorous. A swell looking blonde that can wear the clothes. You should have heard the raves of the women about her. She was the talk of the town. Some producer could take this lady and make a picture of the Mae West type and clean up. That is my guess. We have never had a character actress that has caused so much comment as did her work in "Frontier Marshal," and that is unusual to say the least.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GOOD COMPANIONS, THE: Jessie Matthews—Very, very poor. A British production that we wish we had never seen. Pass it by. It will do you more harm than good to run it. However, the crudeness of it did amuse some of our patrons. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Jan. 24-25.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—"The Barker", brought back with a new title. Clara still pulls them, but the picture isn't so much. The men liked it; the women didn't. So there you are. Add good short subjects to your program and it should go over okay. Running time, nine reels. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

I AM SUZANNE!: Lilian Harvey—Here is a very fine production and perfect entertainment. The puppet show is very unusual, and the puppets do most of the work. Very good family entertainment. Very fine acting by Miss Harvey and Gene Raymond.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—One of the best westerns or out-of-door pictures we have had in a long time. Not one of the lowdown, wild and woolly kind, but all dressed up. Even the "bad man" and his fellows were good to look at. George O'Brien is always good and El Brendel made comedy. More comedy, more brightness is what the public wants. This picture pleased everyone and did a nice business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Jan. 19-20.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—An excellent western. This not only brought in the western fans, but the more sophisticated audience as well on account of the Zane Grey story. Business good and everyone satisfied. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Jan. 27.—Ed. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—Fine western feature. Children like O'Brien. Best western star of the lot. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Jan. 24-25.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MAN WHO DARED, THE: Preston Foster—Played this one two days with "Wild Boys of the Road." Did very good business. It was because "Wild Boys of the Road" did the drawing, although "Man Who Dared" is a fine picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 10-11.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers—Not as good as previous Rogers. They've got to give him better stories for his style of humor or he will be a has-been. Zasu Pitts helps, as does Florence Desmond with her impersonations of various stars. But, after all, "Skitch" got the business though they are complaining louder that he is slipping. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 25, 26, 27.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

MR. SKITCH: Will Rogers—Very good family entertainment. Clean and wholesome.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lew Ayres, Lilian Harvey—Good. A light and happy bit of entertainment that should please anywhere. We had the bad luck to have the coldest weather in years. But for this, am sure the picture would have done satisfactory business. Lew Ayres was fine, so was Lilian Harvey. She is one of the few "newcomers" that will take well with the public. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 29-30.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

READ THEIR REPORTS IN THIS ISSUE

Marching along together with the many exhibitor contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" come this week four "recruits," recruits in reporting but veterans of showmanship for the most part.

Read the reports of the following, two from Illinois, one from Minnesota and another from Pennsylvania:

S. J. Backer, Roxy theatre, Browns Valley, Minn.; Verne Coffman, Lyric theatre, Moweaqua, Ill.; Robert Hornick, Strand theatre, Johnstown, Pa., and W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena theatre at Lena, Ill.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Opened with new sound equipment. Pleased our patrons extremely well. This picture and new sound equipment drew the best attendance for the past eight months. Very good picture with good audience reaction. Played Jan. 13.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crossman, Marian Nixon—A good picture of its kind. Too heavy, too depressing and too sad. The photography throughout was dark and there were too many dark scenes. This made the picture more depressing. For the past two years we all have had trouble enough. We don't want it on the screen. Did poor business. Running time, 95 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crosman—A very good picture. After reading several exhibitors' reports on this picture panning it, I was afraid of it. But I played it. It is above the average picture. Don't be afraid to play it.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—Begins and ends with a funeral. The first "narratage" picture and I hope the last. Title sounds too heavy, theme too heavy and business the lightest ever. One night a-plenty. We can't get enough "specials" with action, light romance and music with plenty of comedy, and that's what they want. It takes a big star to put over the "heavy stuff" nowadays. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Jan. 24.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

SHANGHAI MADNESS: Spencer Tracy—Fine cast, terrible story. Didn't mean a thing. Many patrons were disappointed in Tracy. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 21-23.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Mascot

LAUGHING AT LIFE: Victor McLaglen—This picture is fairly good. Something on order of "Cock-eyed World." It drew fairly well, so we have no kicks. Played Jan. 12-13.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MGM

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Madge Evans, Otto Kruger—Hard to sell but liked by few that saw it. First time we had the new Otto Kruger and we liked him very much. Played Jan. 27.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Eddie Quillan, Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Played at the various theatres in this territory at a very good business. No top business, but it was acclaimed by all the fellow theatre managers and exhibitors as one of the finest pictures to come from Hollywood. Alice Brady, Eddie Quillan and Frank Morgan had the picture and everyone to whom I talk agrees that Quillan did a fine piece of work in this picture. Quillan, of course, did draw a lot of patrons to the box-office and they were all glad to see him once again. Too bad that he has been kept idle for such a long time. I am sure when Quillan makes some more pictures it will be a blessing for a lot of sad box offices.—Robert Hornick, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

DANCING LADY: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable—This is a very good musical romance with plenty of music, marvelous settings and perfect acting. It is more of a back stage story with romance that completes the entertainment with an elaborate musical finale. This is one of the best pictures of the season and played to practically a capacity business for two days. Play it and watch your box office swell out. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 94 minutes. Played Jan. 29-30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy, Dennis King, Thelma Todd—This is only a fair comedy with music. It seems to be more like an entire show than just a picture. It is a feature and then a two-reel comedy combined in one. The locale is Italy in the 19th century and the characters appear in costumes. Practically the entire picture is filmed in the same spot and our audience did not like it. This is rather old and if you have not played it, then don't. Running time, 92 minutes. Played Jan. 25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DINNER AT EIGHT: Marie Dressler, Lionel and John Barrymore, Jean Harlow—A splendid production. Each star acts their part perfectly. Seemed to please everyone.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITEHOUSE: Walter Huston—This picture should be listed near the top of the ten best. It is too great to be box office, but will please 100 per cent of those who see it. We struck a bad break which prevented us from doing a normal business, but even at that this picture is worthwhile even if you lose money. You will have people in your house that seldom come. The picture conveys a message right up to the minute of our present day, and Walter Huston is the only star who could do justice to the part he takes. My advice to every exhibitor is to get this picture, no matter how old it is, and run it. We gave the old folks of the town a free matinee and they went home and sent the children in the evening. The first night's business was 'way off, but the second and third it built up, and any picture that will draw bigger the third day than the first is a great picture. Metro should be congratulated for producing it and your patrons will thank you for running it.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GOING HOLLYWOOD: Bing Crosby, Marion Davies—Here is another mighty fine musical from Metro. No dough spared in producing this, as in most Davies productions. The orchestral accompaniment in this is outstanding and music entrancing. Davies very, very good. Boost this, for it will stand it. Played Jan. 23-24.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

HER SWEETHEART (CHRISTOPHER BEAN): Marie Dressler, Lionel Barrymore—A good picture that failed to gross as it should because it was first given a poor name and then retitled by a much worse one. This is another example of the witless titling current which I suspect comes from the wives of the head men. Dressler pictures should have a comedy base.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante—A hokum comedy feature that pleased a few. Poorest business since last summer.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez—This is only a fair picture. It is a dramatic romance with a touch of the familiar gangster slant, which is very unpopular in our town. Franchot Tone as the hero puts in a good bit of acting and practically puts the picture over. It is an old picture but will get by on a one day showing. Here's hoping all of the producers will leave off the gangster stories next season. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Feb. 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—Played this a little late. A good show is a good show no matter when you play it, if your patrons have not seen it. This is delightful entertainment with above average drawing power.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SONS OF THE DESERT: Laurel and Hardy—This is certainly a very funny picture and a great cast of comedians. Gave good satisfaction. One of the best comedies we have yet played. Played Jan. 21.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady—Fair picture with no draw. Brady isn't liked by our patrons. She and Florence Lake would make a swell combination, entitled "An All Talker." Running time, 87 minutes. Played Jan. 28-30.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Monogram

BROKEN DREAMS: Randolph Scott, Martha Sleeper—Good enough to be played anywhere at any time. Clean entertainment for the whole family. Children liked the pets. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI, THE: Mary Carlisle, Buster Crabbe—Excellent. A good holiday picture for the young people. Don't pass it by. Played Dec. 25-26.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI, THE: Mary Carlisle, Buster Crabbe—This is a swell picture. Something any major company could be proud of.

Treat this as a special and watch them come in. Played Jan. 5-6.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—Splendidly produced picture from the old fairy tale. Drew and pleased. Rather surprised us on a Friday and Saturday. Played Jan. 26-27.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND: Charlotte Henry—A flop, made so by having the wrong direction. Great names behind masks is waste. If the money for cast had been put into spectacle and some English pantomimists with the sense of fantasy imported, it would have been okay.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

BIG EXECUTIVE, THE: Ricardo Cortez, Richard Bennett, Elizabeth Young—This is a very good, clean program picture, but failed to click at the box-office. A story of a modern financial wizard and the stock market crash of 1929. It is only fair entertainment. Richard Bennett practically steals the picture by his splendid performance. Play this one day and let it go at that. Paramount started good at the beginning of the season, but is falling down now. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Jan. 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—Beautiful picture that drew and pleased even though this is not a strong Catholic community. It's good anywhere. Played Jan. 14-15.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—Just tell 'em to keep it in the can. It will hurt your business to show it. No good excuse for it ever to have been made. Don't play it if you want to keep your business.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—This is a beautiful thing and must be handled as something extra. Sold as just another, it will prove less than usual, but tie up with any woman's organization and show it to them, before they sell tickets, and they will click. It is a real entertainment. A little heavy, but every one is pleased at the ending and that is what counts most.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins, Gary Cooper—A fine picture that many did not like, with a terrible name for the sticks that caused it to be a dud at the box office. New York will never learn the lesson that its public is neither the stage or book public, but a much wider one that don't want Greenwich Village names.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

DESIGN FOR LIVING: Fredric March, Miriam Hopkins—Here is a different story from what we usually see in movies. Spicy, brilliant dialogue and masterful direction. Splendid cast.—Leon B. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

DISGRACED: Helen Twelvetrees—This one, while well executed by every one connected with it, the thing only registers fair entertainment. I would suggest if you must play it to build up your program with several shorts as the running time is less than an hour.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. Small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Not as many laughs as former releases. Due to a terrible storm it failed to click at the box office. Will please the average movie patron. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 7-9.—S. J. Backer, Roxy Theatre, Browns Valley, Minn. General patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Pretty good comedy that seemed to please and drew a little extra. "Duck Soup" checked too short. Required four reels of shorts to fill out to good length—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Bros.—Good entertainment, but lots of disappointed people. Lots of noise and some songs, but the usual music furnished by the harp and the piano was missed. Another example of how dumb smart people may be. Would any exhibitor have made a picture with the Marx Brothers in it and kept the harp and the piano out?—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—They are slipping fast. They haven't the draw any more.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

EIGHT GIRLS IN A BOAT: Kay Johnson, Dorothy Wilson, Douglas Montgomery—A woman's picture. Will not draw of itself because of no stars, but will please much better than many of these oversold specials with big cast and no story. This has a good story and real entertainment. A good show and handled in a way that will not offend. One of the girls is going to have a baby. The story is in a girls' school. All members of the cast do well. Beautiful lake scenery. Sound, photography, etc., perfect.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Charles Farrell, Marguerite Churchill—A little hot in spots, but okay. A fair comedy romance with lots of laughs. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 25-27.—S. J. Backer, Roxy Theatre, Browns Valley, Minn. General patronage.

> "I believe your magazine is doing a greater service to the exhibitors all over the country, large and small, than any other agency. You are not only serving the exhibitors, but you are serving the theatregoers as well.
> "Since you commenced printing 'What the Picture Did for Me' in your columns, I have been guided largely by these comments in selecting programs. If all exhibitors read these comments and contributed their comments to your paper, the theatregoers of America would eventually get pictures they want, not what Hollywood wanted to give us. I would like to have you print the following comments of pictures played here recently. In every case my experience has coincided with the comments of other exhibitors.
> "Thanking you again for this service to the exhibitors as well as to the general public."—H. O. EKERN, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Charles Farrell. Charles Ruggles—No one could be as dumb as Charles Farrell in this picture. He doesn't do one thing to cause any sympathy for him. Charles Ruggles is the whole show and keeps the audience good natured in spite of Farrell. Farrell is a good star and capable of doing good work, but if he continues as in this, then nothing can be done about it. The picture is fair. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

GIRL WITHOUT A ROOM: Marguerite Churchill, Charles Farrell, Charles Ruggles—The people seemed satisfied with this play. It made a hit here. Charles Farrell and Charles Ruggles were great. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Jan. 9-10.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris—Gave good satisfaction. It will please in rural communities. Play it.—Verne Coffman, Lyrac Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris—This isn't a farming community, but the picture went over okay despite that. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Jan. 12-13.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Not as good as "She Done Him Wrong," but did more business for a small town. Three days too long for this community on this type of show, but "Little Women" held up for four days. There you are. Running time, 87 minutes. Jan. 21-22-23.—M. P. Foster, New Granada, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—They all want to see Mae. And this sure is a good one. 95 per cent pleased and want more of her pictures. It's a natural.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe—Very fine. This fellow Crabbe has it over Weissmuller like a tent. Pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 19-20.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—Good western. A picture that the kids like. We had many older people that liked this play. You will make a hit with the kids by booking this play. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Dec. 30-31.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

LONE COWBOY: Jackie Cooper—A dandy little picture for young and old. Jackie took his part splendidly.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck—This picture is hard to get them in on, but it will please. The kids are great. A little draggy in places and inconsistent in direction. Don't spot a "Gang" comedy with this, for "Spanky" is in it. (I did not know.) Has special appeal to women and pleased generally. Played Jan. 25.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

MISS FANE'S BABY IS STOLEN: Dorothea Wieck—This is the most gripping picture we have played in many a day. It holds the audience in the most tense suspense until the very end, and when the baby is finally restored to its mother, there was the most unusual and spontaneous outburst of joy I have ever witnessed in any picture. "Spanky" McFarland and Baby Leroy steal the honors. We did only average business, but that was our fault. Give this extra publicity and it will more than make good all you can say for it. The selection of Dorothea Wieck as the mother of the stolen baby was a mistake. Her German accent at times makes it hard for a rustic audience to follow her. For instance, she tells the police that her baby has "plew ice" for blue eyes, but don't let that keep you from playing one of the most satisfactory pictures we have played this year. Played Jan. 25-26-27.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper—Nothing to rave about, will not please 40 per cent.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—You'll make money by giving this play a date at your theatre. Give us more plays like this, Paramount, and we will beat the old depression. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Jan. 6-7.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers, Jack Haley—Starts slow, turns into average comedy of song writers demonstrating their stuff at singing and love making until the last reel. Then some clever ensemble dancing with the usual overhead shots. Oakie and Haley are the song writers with Ginger Rogers demonstrating their efforts. National Screen Service trailer is better than the picture itself and sells the show, but they expect more revue and spectacular stuff than the picture gives. "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking?" is the big and only number to feature. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 28-29.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—If your patrons are not fed up on musicals this should please them. Several better than average musical numbers and the fan ballet is just about as good as anything yet produced. Average business. Played Jan. 24-25.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—The best western shown in this theatre for some time. Packed full of entertainment. Has a box office draw that is a honey. You will be safe in booking this for extra days. Last three days of week to extra business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. Small town patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: June Knight, James Dunn—This is one of the 10 best pictures of my year's program, and I am willing to go on record right now without seeing the next 11 months. Every one who saw it liked it without exception, and I believe you will find it has a more universal appeal than other musical comedy shows. It is a very close reproduction of the stage attraction, and you should guarantee a five-dollar show, as that is what your folks are going to get from this picture.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight, Lillian Roth, Lillian Bond—Good musical comedy that brings back an old favorite in Cliff Edwards' ukelele. This picture drags a little in some of the sequences. But easily the high spot of the show was Cliff Edwards in "I'm a Night Owl." In fact, if you ask the audience, it was Edwards' show. He has a very pleasing voice and he is well liked by our audiences. In fact, you can hear a ripple of satisfaction when he comes on to the screen. Why he does not get more to do I don't know. He is a good comedian plus a very good voice and his ukelele. To us he has always been a draw and we so feature him always when he is in the cast. James Dunn is better in this one than he has been in the Fox pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—This was my big disappointment of the month and I can't help you with it. The picture is great and they liked it, but they didn't care to see it. I believe that the starring of the extremes in ages was what hurt and that one should put more emphasis on the young couple parents of Baby LeRoy, and play Alison and Fields as "support" and think that will help box office.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth —Listen, brethren, I don't care where your old show is located, but don't rest a moment until you show your congregation this picture. It's a knockout, a rare gem among comedy dramas. About the best ever. It is the talk of this village. It's a wow. Grab it. You will not be sorry. It's a program, but should be a special.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth—A good comedy drama. Nothing big. But it seemed to please.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—Gave wonderful satisfaction. Pleased 100 per cent.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Dvorak—This was very good light entertainment and pleased, though did not do the business I expected. Certainly missed Sylvia Sidney or some one to balance Maurice. Ann didn't carry the load.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

WHITE WOMAN: Carole Lombard, Charles Laughton—This is one of the worst pictures we have ever put before the public. Paramount should be ashamed to put such trash off on the poor exhibitors and make them pay for it. No story, no entertainment and terrible recording. Pay for it, but don't play it. Business and picture bad. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Jan. 31.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—This is a better box office picture than I thought. I myself am tired of hearing the airplane scream, but the picture does draw and it does please, so I am pleased.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—Just a fair picture. If you haven't it bought, pass it up.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

AGGIE APPLEBY, MAKER OF MEN: Charles Farrell, Wynne Gibson—Very good picture. Held up good here. Charles Farrell in a different type role. Wynne Gibson very good, our patrons thought. Played Jan. 3-4.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

AGGIE APPLEBY, MAKER OF MEN: Wynne Gibson, Charles Farrel—A good program picture that gave general satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne—The kind of a picture that the women fare forth and see. Personally, it did not appeal to me.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne, Walter Huston, Conrad Nagel—Story of a social worker who loves but never marries. A well acted play but poison in the small town. It's funny how producers persist in giving us stuff that is killing the business. Running time, 72 minutes.—E. E. Warner, Opera House, Augusta, Wis. Small town and country patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunn—Will not go over in rural community. It lacks something. Pass it up. —Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne—Enjoyed by about 95 per cent of adults. Irene Dunne renders an excellent performance. Average business. Played Jan. 14-15.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

CHEYENNE KID, THE: Tom Keene—Here is another good western featuring Tom Keene with plenty of action, thrills, fighting and fast moving. Roscoe Ates supplies the comedy with his stuttering that has made him famous. This one has everything that the average western fan will like and should please all who see it. We played this one day to capacity business and pleased all of our patrons. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Jan. 27.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—A good picture that did not draw film rental. A good story and fine acting, but just did not get them in to see it. The few that did come were satisfied.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd—A good audience picture that will do fairly good business if advertised. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1.—W. J. Carter, Maxine Theatre, Croswell, Mich. Small town patronage.

EMERGENCY CALL: Bill Boyd—Contrary to several reports on this picture, it turned out to be a good action film. I call it very fair entertainment for the general run of patrons. I would say it is both entertaining and appealing for the average picture patron. Played Jan. 20.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn, Paul Lukas—You can't go wrong on this one. It broke our all-time house record. Double your advertising cost, and watch them come in. We had people that had never been in a theatre before, and will never be here again. Step on this one. It will hold its own anywhere. Running time, 12 reels. Played Jan. 29-30.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—Will go over anywhere. It's a box office miracle. And such a sweet picture. Don't pass this one up. Play it sure.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

MEANEST GAL IN TOWN, THE: Zasu Pitts, James Gleason—This is one swell show and when run with my Race Nite, it proved the best Saturday night show I have had for months.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness —Excellent. Good for any nights, any theatre, anywhere. Clean and clear all the way from beginning to end. Why can't the producers make more such type pictures? Pleased 100 per cent and did the best Friday and Saturday business in over a year. Radio should be praised for making this picture. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Jan. 12-13.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot—A very entertaining picture with an excellent Annapolis background. Average business. Played Jan. 22.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Small town patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—Good entertainment for the women fans. Will not please the men so well. Miss Hepburn talked them to boredom. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—A picture which gave universal satisfaction from young and old. Play it.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—Patrons thought this the best Lionel Barrymore picture they had ever seen. Played Jan. 1-2.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Pretty fair comedy drama. Played Jan. 19-20.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—A mighty fine program picture. Interesting story and well produced and these stars are very popular in this town. Good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RIGHT TO ROMANCE, THE: Ann Harding—A very well liked picture. Splendid acting and a very entertaining story.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris, Vivienne Osborne—Played on double bill with "Strawberry Roan," Universal on Saturday and gave great satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

United Artists

BITTER SWEET: Anne Neagle—If this picture had been produced in this country, it would have been a marvelous play, but being a British film spoiled it altogether. Miss Naegle's acting made my patrons giggle when they should have been serious.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: George Raft, Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—This is in a class by itself. The crowd liked it a lot. Every one was made better by seeing it. It had enough rough stuff in it to appeal to the rough bunch and Jackie made the nice people like it. 100 per cent real show.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: George Raft, Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Very fine, with splendid cast. Has good drawing power. Hope to get more like this from the new "20th Century" company. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Jan. 21-23.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman—A very good show to very nice business. People liked it and boosted for it. Really fine in story, cast and direction.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman—A very like this one of Ronald Colman and neither did my patrons because I lost money and no one praised the picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 12-13. —Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks— Was agreeably surprised at the business that this played to and seems to please them, too. I liked it myself, and the kids will eat it up.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RAIN: Joan Crawford—This is strong enough that you will lose some friends among the religious people, and if I had it to do over I would not run it at all. If you use it, and it will draw business, be sure and advertise it in such a way that the church people will know that it is better than the play and better than the book, but admittedly much worse than life. —Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SAMARANG: Native Cast—A fair native picture with beautiful underwater scenes. There is a fight between a shark and an octopus that is very exciting. Also a number of shots of shellfish of different kinds. The picture is not to be compared with "Congorilla," "Africa Speaks" or any of the Martin Johnson pictures, but is not sold as a special and should be run with a double bill wherever booked. Personally, I enjoyed it. Some of my patrons did not. Not a box office attraction in itself, but will satisfy on a double bill. Played Jan. 26-27.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SAMARANG: Native Cast—If you want to wear a shirt on your back leave this one go. If I were to play it again I wouldn't accept it gratis. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Jan. 15-16.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

Universal

BELOVED: John Boles, Gloria Stuart—This picture lacked something. Will not go over in rural communities.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe—Fairly good melodrama with foreign locale. Similar shots of this picture appear in "Perils of Pauline." Played Jan. 27.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

BOMBAY MAIL: Edmund Lowe—This is a fine picture of the "who killed Jones" type. Unusual and unique settings add to the picture. Played Jan. 29-30.— Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas— Fair program, although our people are fed up on these Continental romances with their more or less twisted morals, etc. Played Jan. 28-29.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas— Very good. Pleased about 75 per cent.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

BY CANDLELIGHT: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—A splendid picture. One that should bring satisfaction to every one who sees it. The direction is wonderful. The cast is superfine, but we did better than average business.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. Small town patronage.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW: John Barrymore—A very tiresome picture. Will not interest 50 per cent. Not a small town, neither a big town picture. People demand some kind of a story, at least something in the way of entertainment. This has nothing to recommend, only John Barrymore, and just plenty of the new ones can act rings around him. So thinks I. Almost as bad flop as "Grand Hotel."—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts —A good Summerville-Pitts subject that has a better title than the others. Slim Summerville is always a hit here. The scene of Slim destroying his mother-in-law's dishes very funny.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

HORSEPLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine, Leila Hyams—Did all right with this on strength of the other Pitts-Summerville pictures, but direction and lines were poor. The acting was uniformly terrible and the whole thing is made for nickelodeons, still a lot of dough was wasted on this.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HORSEPLAY: Slim Summerville, Andy Devine—A very funny picture. Starts out good, but after Slim and Andy arrive in England in pursuit of Slim's Gal, it drags. This team promises to be good and let's have more from them. This picture should net the exhibitor a little revenue.—W. F. Deistelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart—This is a swell show. Bad weather killed us, but we still think it is plenty good. Give this one a boost, and you won't be sorry. Follow the press book. Played Jan. 26-27.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—It looks as if these stars are given material that kills their drawing power. Business on this was below average and the picture did not deserve any better attendance than we got.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MIDNIGHT: O. P. Heggie, Sidney Fox—This was substituted in place of "Daughters of the Sea." I have shown pictures since the first ones fluttered on the sheet, but this is positively the worst yet. Universal has sure tore their rompers with me. If you must play "Midnight," take it out in the barn and play it at midnight.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Leo Carrillo, Mary Brian—A very good picture, but not worth any more money than the average program scale. Had Universal gotten some real stars in it, they really would have had something. Business first day good, second day way off. Running time, 84 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8. —Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carillo—A good musical comedy. Don't pass this one up. Play it. It is plenty good.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

MYRT AND MARGE: Myrtle Dale, Donna Damerell, Ed Foy—Some said fine. Others did not like it. I call it a pretty good musical, although there seems to be something missing. Eddie Foy is fine. Running time, seven reels. Played Jan. 26-27.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: Margaret Sullavan, John Boles—This picture got a lot of praise and there is no question but that it was well done and worthy of consideration. Here are the flaws as I see them. It need not have been a tragedy. One moment you see the heroine in perfect health and the next, without any preparation showing that she had heart trouble, you see her on her death bed. The story could easily have been a happy ending, seeing that a separation is indicated with his wife, a reunion with the heroine and the boy could easily have been arranged and it would have been perfect from an audience standpoint. Because "Back Street" was semi-tragic, it follows that "Only Yesterday" must be made tragic. But only in very rare instances do tragic endings prove popular. In the entire history of motion pictures you can count on the fingers of one hand the pictures that made money which ended unhappily. Drawing power at this theatre just about average, very slightly above. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

ONLY YESTERDAY: Margaret Sullavan, John Boles—Truly a great picture with a wonderful story. Personally I thought it very good. I advertised it big, but the list of stars did not mean much to my public and I lost money.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

ONLY YESTERDAY: John Boles, Margaret Sullavan—One of the very best pictures this year. You can't go wrong on this one. It is a 100 per cent picture.—Verne Coffman, Lyric Theatre, Moweaqua, Ill. Small town patronage.

RUSTLER'S ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—Our people thought this the best of the Mix pictures. Comments from patrons going out: "Can't beat Tom Mix" and "He's good for many more, sorry he's leaving." Personally we are sorry, too. Played Dec. 15-16.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—Good production full of action. Enough variety to hold the interest of our patrons all the way through, with a good football game at the end. Played Jan. 27.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small country patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—One of the best football pictures I have seen since "The Spirit of Notre Dame." Do not play this picture in a small town where the public is not football minded like I did. No box office for me.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young Leila Hyams—This is indeed a very good football picture. It's something different from the others. It's entertaining and interesting. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Jan. 17-18.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

S. O. S. ICEBERG: Rod La Rocque, Gibson Gowland—Very beautiful and different. Will get added business. The cutting was crude and quite a little fake photography that could have been much better with a little care. Rescue scene by the Eskimos by far the best part of picture.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—A great western picture better than the average, played on a double bill with "Tomorrow at Seven." RKO picture, on Saturday and gave great satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Warner

CAPTURED!: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Leslie Howard—Fair war story that did no business. A bit too impossible. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Jan. 28-30.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DISRAELI: George Arliss—This one came back. Few do it, but George Arliss did it and they liked it. Be sure and tell them that this is the old picture trimmed up on track, so they will not feel mistreated, and they will enjoy the story and show as much as ever.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck—Had more kicks on this picture than any from this company in two years. The Germans thought they got the worst of it and couldn't see the other good features of the picture. Personally thought it a fine picture, well directed, splendid acting by the entire cast. I expected it to flop the second night, but it didn't, which proves that it's a picture of merit. Give us more like this one. Played Jan. 27-28.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck—Our patrons told us this was one of the best pictures we have ever shown here. It must have been, the way they came to see it. Played Jan. 10-11.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck, Otto Kruger—A mighty fine production. Great acting by both stars and a fine story, but the ending killed it for drawing the second night. These stories where they get killed or die in the finish are hard to get film rentals out of, and this one didn't.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—Another corking musical from Warners. Did not break any records because it is the wrong time of the year to break records in this part of the country. The worst winter we have seen in Maine for many years. Will be glad when Warners put out a picture with Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell starring together. Playing Jan. 17-18.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell —Truly a magnificent production. The waterfall number without question is the most spectacular scene ever filmed. Patrons will comment on this production. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Jan. 21-23.— S. J. Backer, Roxy Theatres, Browns Valley, Minn. General patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—It surely is a pity that this was not one of the first musicals to hit the screen. It seems that no matter how good a picture of this type is, the fans are just getting fed up on musicals. To my personal opinion, which means very little, this was the finest of them all, but the box office said no, so what can I do about it? Running time, 101 minutes. Played Jan. 28-29-30.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, James Cagney, Joan Blondell—Ran this after all the larger towns around me had milked it dry. You can make more on a good program picture. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Jan. 6-7.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, Joan Blondell—This picture pleased all and broke all records for three days, but did not make any money. Warners took all my profit. Played it 50 per cent-50 per cent. My share was just average business. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Jan. 6-8-9.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FROM HEADQUARTERS: George Brent—My patrons liked this one very much, but quite a few stayed away on account of the trailer. Warners had a hideous masked character in the trailer announcing some of the thrills of the picture and it made it look as though this character was to be in the picture, so it made some people think it was going to be a "Frankenstein," so they stayed away. Played Jan. 24.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell—A very good detective story with Powell carrying his role to perfection. You can promise your fans good entertainment, when you play it.—Len C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell, Mary Astor—A mighty good crook story. Better than the average, but none of these crime stories will draw film rental; they are all flops. The cast in this one extra good and still a loss to us.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LADY KILLER: James Cagney—Another excellent picture from Warners that pleased 100 per cent. Played Jan. 11-13.—S. J. Backer, Roxy Theatre, Browns Valley, Minn. General patronage.

SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY, A: George Arliss—Fine. Very good high comedy. Most pleasing entertainment. It's old, 'tis true, but it did more business than the newer picture screened the nights before. Clean as could be, bright and delightful. Business satisfactory. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Jan. 17-18.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

World Wide

FALSE FACES: Lowell Sherman, Lila Lee—Played this on a Saturday double bill with "Police Car 17," Columbia. Did not satisfy, no story of interest, lot of good talent wasted. The "Police Car 17" with Tim McCoy saved the show. A good action picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

ENTERTAINER, THE: Sunshine Comedy—This is one of the best two-reel comedies Columbia ever made. In fact, the best I've played from Columbia. Running time, two reels.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

POOR FISH, THE: Leon Erroll—This is just another punk comedy from Columbia. Why should Columbia produce such as this to mar their standing? Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SAY IT ISN'T SO: Rich Craig, Jr.—We have finally found a good two-reel comedy from Columbia. Full of nonsense, and will produce many laughs. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WHACKS MUSEUM: Krazy Kat Kartoons—I sure liked this one. My audience liked it also. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FREEZEOUT, THE: Moran and Mack—Fine comedy for Saturday or any other day except with sophisticated audience. They laughed long and often, so it must be okay. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

KID'N AFRICA: Baby Burlesks—The Baby Burlesks go great on any program which is designed to appeal to kids or family trade. This one not up to standard, but it's a burlesque on Tarzan pictures and they liked it. Nine-tenths of the kids are colored in this one. Natural color. Running time, 10 minutes.— M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

TROPICAL FISH: Terry-Toons—Very good. Running time, eight minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

Fox

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY: Movie Tintype Series—Very poor.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MGM

BARGAIN OF THE CENTURY: Thelma Todd, Patsy Kelly—One of their best.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang—Our patrons thought this one very funny. The adults liked it as well as the kids. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E.

Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang—Very good.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

BRITISH GUIANA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Very good travelogue.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—Fair. The children are remarkably smart.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

KID FROM BORNEO: Our Gang—Very good. Pleased every one.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LUNCHROOM, THE: Flip the Frog—A very good cartoon comedy from Metro. Not as good as some of the previous issues, but it will please all. At one time Metro had the best cartoons on the market, but in the past few seasons it has lost out completely. Come on, Metro, let us have better shorts.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MIDSUMMER MUSH: Charles Chase—Fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

PLANE NUTS: Musical Revues—Very good.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SHERMAN SAID IT: Charles Chase—The best Chase comedy this season. It has music, and that helps. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

THROTTLE PUSHERS: Sport Champions—A very good number of the Sport Champions series showing a few of the more famous race track drivers and their cars. The scene at the end showing the Indianapolis Speedway race is very interesting and should appeal to every one. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TWICE TWO: Laurel and Hardy—This is one of the best shorts of Laurel and Hardy in some time. Much the same as all of the others, but still they produce the laughs and please the audience. This is a little old, but then it is better than most of the new shorts. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

AROUND THE CALENDAR: Grantland Rice Sportlights—Best of the "Sportlights" that we have run so far. Running time, 10 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: If there is a weak spot on the short series product of Paramount; this is it. These subjects hit and miss. You get a good one; then two or three bad ones. Nothing to get excited about. Nearly all of Paramount short subjects are good, including the newsreel.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

MEET THE CHAMP: Eugene Pallette, Walter Catlett—I thought it was crazy, but people did seem to laugh. Pallette is deserving of something a whole lot better.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

MEET THE CHAMP: Walter Catlett, Eugene Pallette—Good slapstick with a novel twist. The champ is a boss milker of the country. Played Jan. 21.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ONE AWFUL NIGHT and SAILORS, BEWARE: Walter Catlett, Eugene Pallette—These two comedies are just film. Just ordinary 20 minutes of time taken up. They are not bad or not good. Just pictures.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

SAILORS, BEWARE: Walter Catlett, Eugene Pallette—See report on "One Awful Night" and "Sailors, Beware."—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

RKO

CALIFORNIA WEATHER: Ruth Etting—This would be a musical if they had not tried to make a comedy by interpreting Miss Etting's efforts with too many alleged funny efforts of an impresario to find the "perfect voice." The comedy interpretations spoil it all. It's comedy interrupted or singing interrupted, that's all. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

CULBERTSON'S BRIDGE EXPERIENCES: Ely Culbertson—Very entertaining whether you are a bridge fan or not.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

DRUGGIST'S DILEMMA, THE: Clark and McCullough—We need more comedy and less silly gags.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PHANTOM ROCKET: Tom and Jerry—Very good cartoon well done. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

QUIET, PLEASE: Edgar Kennedy—Fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

QUIET, PLEASE: Edgar Kennedy—To my mind this was poor and I surely got tired running it. Florence Lake is a pain in the neck to me, too, with all her yip, yip, yip. Despite my opinion there were laughs.—Hobart H. Gates, Garlock Theatre, Custer, S. D. Small town patronage.

RASSLIN' MATCH, THE: Amos 'n' Andy Cartoons—Full reel cartoon. Voices natural. Laughs are there, but mechanically the first is jumpy if you are critical. Running time, 11 minutes.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

RINK, THE: Charlie Chaplin—This reissue is fair. Some very fine skating scenes. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

SNUG IN THE JUG: Clark and McCullough—A wonderful pair of comedians, but are not given the material. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SOGLOW'S "THE KING" CARTOONS—O. Soglow's cartoons are better in "Collier's" and other magazines. Not so hot. Guess animals are the cartoon's best bet. We run a cartoon every change. Running time, eight minutes.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

VAGABOND, THE: Charlie Chaplin—The kids sure enjoy Charlie Chaplin. The grown-ups don't care much for these comedies—that is, his old ones recorded with music. Running time, 20 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

United Artists

MELLERDRAMMER, THE: Mickey Mouse—This is just another Mickey Mouse cartoon and far from being the best. The kids all like Mickey Mouse, but for real entertainment both the young and the old flock to see the Silly Symphony shorts and thanks to Mr. Disney for one good short. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphonies—I am very disappointed in this one. After reading the many reviews I expected something great, but it is not as good as some of the other of this series. However, it will draw a good business and, after all, that is just what the exhibitors want. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Universal

BIG BENEFIT, THE: Mentone No. 3—Clever medley of short vaudeville turns with kid impersonators opening for each star. Just what they want in two reelers nowadays. Plenty of comedy and music. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

CHICKEN REEL: Oswald Cartoons—This is the best cartoon I've ever shown in my theatre. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

CONFIDENCE: Oswald Cartoons—In keeping with the times. Something different in cartoons.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FIVE AND DIME: Oswald Cartoons—A fair cartoon that shows amusing scenes in a 10-cent store. Mechanical toys that look like Charlie Chaplin, Laurel and Hardy, and Chic Sale good.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

GOOFYTONE NEWS: A lot depends on where this subject is spotted. We follow the Movietone (Fox) with the Goofytone and they think it's rich because they get the idea. Either precede or follow your news. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. P. Foster, New Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

IN THE ZOO: Oswald Cartoons—A very good cartoon that the kids especially enjoyed. Let's have more like it.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

IN THE ZOO: Oswald Cartoons—This is a very good cartoon of the Oswald series. Hope the rest are as good. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Louise Fazenda—Not much to this. Running time, two reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS: John Hix—A very good one-reel subject that should make a hit with every one. However, some of the shots are nothing out of the ordinary. Material for reels like this is decreasing.—W. F. Diestelmeier, Lena Theatre, Lena, Ill. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BUDDY'S BEER GARDEN: Looney Tunes—This is a very interesting short. Good music and lots of laughs. Running time, nine minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

BUDDY'S DAY OUT: Looney Tunes—Just a fair cartoon.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

COSTUMES OF THE WORLD: World Adventures—My audience does not like travelogues. I hope they stop making them. Running time, eight minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

DOUBLE CROSSING OF COLUMBUS, THE: Broadway Brevities—An old burlesque plot that has been worked to death, but the vaudeville acts are good or it wouldn't get by.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

GOBS OF FUN: George Givot, Charles Judels—This is a good comedy with plenty of laughs and some good music. Vitaphone certainly has improved this series of shorts over last season and practically their entire product show 100 per cent improvement. Come on, Vitaphone, show the industry good shorts. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOT FROM PETROGRAD: Melody Masters—Another good one in this series. But where did they get the little whistler. According to her size, she would go over big on one of these big locomotives, to be used as a whistle, of course. Running time, 10 minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

I'VE GOT TO SING A TORCH SONG: Merry Melodies—One sweet little picture.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

I'VE GOT TO SING A TORCH SONG: Merry Melodies—A very good cartoon with many caricatures of movie and radio stars. The impersonation of Garbo. West and Pitts singing is a great laugh getter. Good entertainment and will please both young and old. Book these when you want good shorts. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Broadway Brevities—Very good. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Broadway Brevities—Burlesque on "Grand Hotel." Very good.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

NOTRE DAME GLEE CLUB: Pepper Pot—One of the best single reelers we have shown this year. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

PLANE CRAZY: Dorothy Lee, Arthur and Mor-

IT'S THE EXHIBITOR'S OWN DEPARTMENT

"I submit my first attempts at 'What the Picture Did for Me'," writes Antonio C. Balducci of the Avon theatre at Canastota, N. Y. "If my style is okay, well then, okay. If it is not, tell me about it, so that I can make my future offerings somewhat better."

"What the Picture Did for Me" is not a class in composition, rhetoric or essay writing. The Department belongs to the exhibitors, and one reason the exhibitors learn to know one another so well and have come to have complete confidence in their judgment on pictures is the very fact that the words in type are the words they used in expressing their opinions.

Says Balducci: "This theatre enjoys a general patronage, one composed of farmers on farmers' nights, middle class people on middle class nights, and a higher type patronage on their nights. These various nights are designated by the type of picture I run."

ton Havel—Good two-reeler. Good singing and dancing. Dorothy Lee of "Wheeler and Woolsey" fame is in it. Very good. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE ISLAND: Broadway Brevities—A dandy Technicolor musical that was enjoyed as much as the feature. These musicals sure click here. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW: Pepper Pot Series—Our patrons always appreciate these kind of reels.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ROCK-A-BYE, WITH DR. ROCKWELL: Pepper Pot—These Pepper Pots are not starting out very good. This is a weak sister. Running time, 11 minutes.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

RUBINOFF AND ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters—Very interesting and entertaining. Good music and some good scenes. Running time, 10 minutes.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

RUFUS JONES FOR PRESIDENT: Brodaway Brevities—The best Brevity to date in this new group, but nothing to rave about.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

SAMOAN MEMORIES: Musical World Journeys—This is another number of the "Musical World Journeys" series. Very interesting and educational, showing the customs and other interesting scenes in the Samoan Islands. Our patrons do not seem to like this series, but they are good just the same.—Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

20,000 CHEERS FOR THE CHAIN GANG: Broadway Brevities—You can't beat Vitaphone for short product, and this one is no exception. Good music. Running time, 19 minutes.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mt. Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

USE YOUR IMAGINATION: Broadway Brevities—Just a fair one. They told us these were going to be better than last year and I bit. They are no better.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

WARNER AND FIRST NATIONAL TRAILERS: This is the only company making their own trailers, and they are by far the best on the market. We use Ad-Vance and National Screen Service trailers, but the Warner and First National are better, but at that even these big companies do not make trailers like they used to. A trailer is by far the best medium of advertising. No doubt you will recall the old Warner-First National trailers on "Gold Diggers of 1933," "Sally," "Desert Song" and many others. They were almost a full reel and their effect was wonderful. Now only a few feet of actual scenes are shown with a lot of titles and some one telling about what a wonderful picture it is. Let the picture itself tell the story like it used to and you will find it pays. My advice to any exhibitor is to use trailers and my advice to every distributor is to make better trailers, and sell them at a price the exhibitor can afford to pay and where pictures are run on a percentage no charge should be made for the trailer.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Serials

Mascot

FIGHTING WITH KIT CARSON: Johnny Mack Brown, Noah Beery, Betsy King Ross—Interest well sustained to the end. The only trouble with serials there is too much repetition.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne—This is one of the best serials we have ever screened in our theatre and we certainly hope to have more like it. There is only one objection, that is there is too much repetition of the previous chapters. That should be eliminated. This is full of action, thrills, fighting, gun play and fast moving. I consider this A-1 entertainment and it drew extra business for our theatre. Running time, 12 chapters, 20 minutes each.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Universal

PHANTOM OF THE AIR: Tom Tyler, Gloria Shea—Nothing cheap about this. We are now in the ninth chapter and I am able to say to you this has had the most consistent draw of any serial shown in the Cozy Theatre.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM OF THE AIR: Tom Tyler, Gloria Shea—Good airplane subject. A good serial is a benefit to the small town theatre. This one pleased and helped. Running time, 20 minutes each chapter. Twelve chapters.—Mrs. R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

Introduce New Seats At New York Exhibition

A new type of theatre seat was introduced to the trade this week at a demonstration at the Hotel Astor in New York by the International Seat Corporation, a subsidiary of Union City Body Company. J. George Feinberg, vice president of the company, said that contracts have been signed for the re-seating of 12 theatres of large circuits. Mr. Feinberg will shortly leave for a nationwide trip during which he will establish agencies. The seat, called U 16, will be permanently displayed at a show room in the Paramount Building.

Cushion seats, of the automobile type, are used in the construction of the new seats. Two types of spring backs are employed and only four bolts, none of which is visible. No screws are used, all parts being dovetailed. Pressed sheet steel is employed, and all upholstery can be removed without taking up the chair.

Railway Express Service To Celebrate 95th Year

Railway express service in the United States will celebrate its 95th birthday on March 4, it is pointed out by the Railway Express Agency. Today more than 50,000 are employed in the nationwide service of the Agency, which is owned by the principal railroads of the country. The company has offices in 23,000 cities and towns and reports handling more than 50,000,000 shipments each year.

"Frankie and Johnnie" Is In Work at Biograph Plant

"Frankie and Johnny" has gone into production at the Biograph Studios in New York, marking the first feature to be produced at the once famous plant, which had long been closed. The cast of the film is headed by Helen Morgan, Lilyan Tashman, Chester Morris and Florence Reed. Chester Erskin is directing the film for All Star Productions.

IMPPA Elects Officers

The four remaining officers of the Independent Motion Picture Producers Association, on the Coast, have been elected as follows: I. E. Chadwick and J. Boyce Smith, vice presidents; William Berke and Jack Nelson, directors.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Indications are that the double feature situation is due to come to the foreground in the near future with several local exchanges letting down the bars as far as refusing to set in dual bills are concerned. The matter is known to be occupying the time of home office officials as far as the local situation is concerned.

Moe Levy, Fox branch manager, was given a farewell dinner by exchanges and salesmen last week on the occasion of his departure for Minneapolis where he takes over the Fox branch. More than 25 attended and Levy was presented with a handsome golf outfit as a token of their esteem.

Sam Horowitz, United Artists branch manager, became a benedict Sunday, February 18, when he was married in Community Center, New York City, to Sadie Feuerstein, secretary to Al Lichtman.

Max Mazur, who has been in charge of the B. N. Judell branch in Indianapolis, has been named general sales manager of the company and will make his future headquarters at the home office on Film Row.

William Kupper, Fox western district manager, spent several days at the local exchange on a visit to midwest branches.

Lucy Clark of the Advance Film Company office received word this week of the death in Montreal of her 88 year old father. Miss Clark relates that her father, who never had been ill, was in the habit of walking many miles each day outside of the city. On his last walk he is believed to have suffered a heart attack. He was found frozen to death, his body so frozen as to require two days to thaw it out.

Max Weintraub of the Fontanelle Film Exchange, Omaha, was a visitor along the Row last week.

United Artists exchange is practically set to move into new headquarters at 845 S. Wabash avenue, expectancy being that the lease will be negotiated this week.

Carl Harthill has been transferred from the B. N. Judell office in St. Louis to manager at Indianapolis.

Andy Dietz, Majestic district manager, was in Chicago in connection with new plans, as yet not completed, for the local branch.

Abe Blumstein, Columbia short subject sales manager, on Monday of this week, was staging a valiant fight against death at the Crest hotel, 6730 Stony Island avenue. Blumstein was stricken with bronchial pneumonia last week.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 211.—(A) What are the planes called from which lens receives incident rays, and at which the said rays are focused into an image? (B) If a lens be moved closer to, or further away from, one conjugate foci point, what is the effect upon the other conjugate foci point? (C) What law is brought into operation every time you move the projection lens forward or back to sharpen the screen image focus? (D) If the lens be too close to or too far from the film, exactly why will the image be out of focus on the screen? (E) What constitutes the two conjugate foci point of a projection lens?

Answer to Question No. 205

Bluebook School Question No. 205 was: (A) What determines the focal length of a simple lens? (B) Were you to cut off a section of three glass balls, one four, one eight, and one six inches in diameter, and polish the flat side, what would you have? (C) Will a lens focus any object having area to a pin-point? (D) Why does increase in diameter of a projection lens tend to increase its depth of focus?

The following sent acceptable answers: D. Danielson; S. Evans and C. Rau; W. Lemke; R. De Toto; H. H. Menefee; H. Edwards; G. Doe; W. R. Gwynn; P. Gaeth, Jr.; B. S. Enegalnde; T. Van Vaulkenburg; J. Richards; E. F. Griffin and C. Abrams; O. L. Daris and M. Simms; S. L. Jones and P. L. Sanborn; C. D. Carmody; G. Bagby; R. F. Hall; J. Hawkens; F. J. Felton, L. F. Erwin and K. Erwin.

I am glad to note the return of our old Colorado friend, W. R. Gwynn, to the "school." I trust he will continue, for his answers always have been most excellent. We will listen to Friend Gwynn as he answers the first three sections of this question. He says:

"(A) Its curvature and its refractive properties. The refractive index (ratio between the series of incident and refracted angles) for flint glass is 2.47; for crown glass, 1.53.

"(B) Three plano-convex lenses of a focal length of approximately four, eight, and six inches respectively. The focal length may be determined by focusing a distant object, first with one surface of the lens, and then with the other, measuring the focal distance in each instance, adding them and dividing the sum by 2. This procedure is necessary because the optical center of a plano-convex lens is not at its center of mass, as in the case of a bi-convex lens.

"(C) No. The only object it will focus to such a point would be an original point. An object having area may be reduced to very minute dimensions, however.

(D) We will let Brother Lemke answer this one, noting the trouble he took to be certain he got the correct answer. (My compliments on that, Lemke.) He says:

"I wrote to the Eastman Kodak Company regarding this question. They sent me a booklet entitled 'About Lenses.' To quote this booklet in part: 'From the construction of a lens it follows that only the rays from a mathematical point can come together in a point again, and that the rays from any point nearer or farther than the point focused cannot meet in a point image on the film, but must produce a small disc of light instead of a sharp point of light. . . . The disc is termed the circle of confusion. If the circle of confusion is small enough we shall not be able to distinguish it from a point, and the picture will appear to be sharp. . . .

"'The distance from the nearest to the farthest objects that appear sharp in picture is called the "depth of focus." This depth of focus depends on the focal length of the lens and on the free diameter of the lens; the greater the focal length the less the depth of focus, and the bigger the free diameter the less the depth of focus. Thus a lens of large diameter focuses near and far points at full aperture and produces large circles of confusion. When a smaller aperture is used in the same lens, the circles diminish in size in proportion to reduction in size of aperture.'"

Incidentally, Gwynn adds the following footnote to his answer. Think it over carefully and maybe give it a try-out, reporting results if you do, please:

"We recently resorted to a stop-down ring in our film pick-up lenses to increase sharpness of definition of the slit image on the film in an attempt to secure a higher frequency response. We lost some light, but compensated for the decrease in volume at other sources."

Note German Progress in Handling Educational Films

Considerable progress has been made in Germany by government agencies for the distribution of educational motion pictures, according to George H. Canty, United States trade commissioner at Berlin. Under regulations issued some months ago as the result of an agreement between the Federal Film Chamber and the Ministry of Education all official or semi-official film offices have been assigned to the existing or future state, district or city film offices.

The most essential part of this new organization is said to be the establishment of an official state distribution office. Thus present conditions, wherein private and state interests are joined, will be terminated, and in future private influence will be completely eliminated.

Eastman Kodak Declares Dividends on Its Stock

Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, has declared a quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the common stock and the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 on the six per cent preferred stock. Dividends are payable April 2 to stockholders of record March 5.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE FIRST AWARD WINNER

There is no gainsaying but that the winning of the initial Quigley Award has added more than a slight polish to the lustre of the showmanship displayed by Kenneth Grimes of Morgantown, W. Va. His splendid achievement in so completely selling "Dinner at Eight" to his community well entitles him to a prominent place in the showman's hall of fame.

The international theatre spotlight now beams upon this Round Tabler whose name and campaign, publicized in this issue, will be studied with increasing interest by the thousands of Motion Picture Herald readers in every part of the globe.

Thus by his efforts in doing a sound job to increase his grosses, Grimes also adds to his reputation as an able showman, upon which he will no doubt realize.

We trust that the success of this unassuming member will encourage other theatremen to seek like recognition in the succeeding months of the Quigley Award competitions.

MORE ON MANPOWER

Heartening is the unequivocally expressed statement by M. & P. New England head, Martin J. Mullin, that the present success enjoyed by the theatres is due entirely to the loyalty, ability and initiative of the managers.

Here is a setup in which the theatreman is not only allowed to give, but is almost solicited for his opinion on any contemplated change. And it is pleasing to learn of many instances in which the manager's judgment was deferred to in important matters.

The wisdom of this circuit head is indicated by his frank confession that, not so many years ago, he was in the habit of being swayed in various theatre matters by personal likes and dislikes. That he has overcome this and expresses himself as being at all times receptive to the other side of the question is probably one of the reasons why the theatres he directs are so comfortably in the black.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM

Now that the code has made certain definitions restricting the use of contests and giveaways in theatre exploitation, there is quite a scurrying about by managers to discover other potent advertising devices that will not be frowned upon by the code authorities.

Many staff meetings have been called, and the manager, now doubly harassed by anxious superiors, searches zealously for a new box office magic to replace the stunts unhappily banished by executive order from the realm of exploitation.

Concern for the loss of these time-honored aids is natural and to be expected, but we refuse to believe their going justifies any cause for continued alarm. Though contests have undoubtedly been more than helpful in building up grosses on uncertain attractions, able theatremen are wasting little time in bemoaning their passing, and are concentrating on other selling angles to put over their pictures.

Risking the fear of strenuous contradiction, we venture to state that contests in many forms and in many situations have long outlived their usefulness. And although we do not include all competitions in this opinion, nevertheless there is no question but that managers have too often fallen under their spell.

Inherently sound governmental regulation will never hinder the efforts, or discourage the initiative of showmen sincerely interested in the future of the theatre.

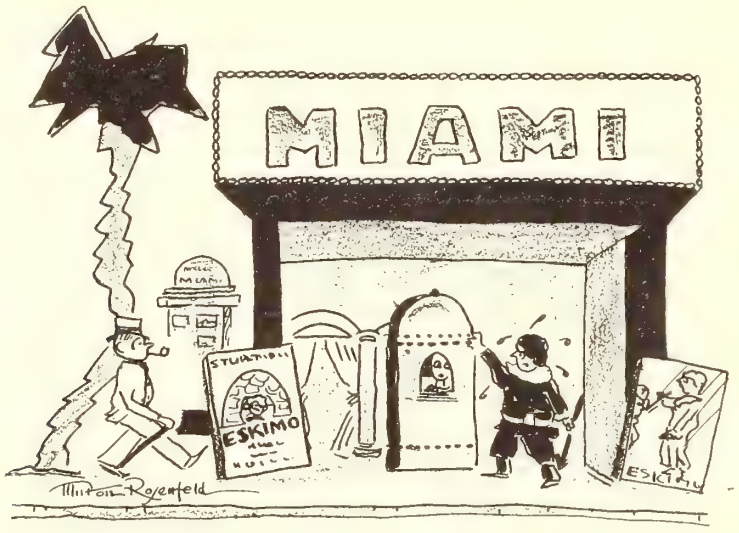
SECOND RUN EXPLOITATION



Though every reasonable effort is made to put over first run attractions, little seems to be done in endeavoring to push up the gross on the second showings. Undoubtedly, these dates on the bigger pictures in many cases would return more were they given the assistance of a spirited campaign.

This is amply substantiated by Manager M. F. Morrison, of the Rialto, Brockton, Mass., who forwards a well executed advertising and exploitation campaign—highly praised by the Quigley Award judges—on the local second run of "Footlight Parade" which succeeded so well that, for the first time in the history of the house's three-day policy, the picture was held over for an entire week.

That the papers and merchants cooperated extensively indicates the merchandising possibilities of the return date were properly sold by this member. No doubt, sceptics will argue that the strength of this picture made such a second campaign possible, and while to a certain extent this is so, we maintain there is potential box office draw in many a second run feature that could be realized upon by managers who allow this classification to deter them from getting behind their shows.

McGregor Steps Fast In Town of 2,000

Seizing upon the fact that there was a local scarcity of fire alarm cards, Manager S. C. McGregor, Smalley's Theatre, St. Johnsville, N. Y., boosted his showing of "The Chief" and at the same time did a public service by printing and distributing a number of these cards which besides the location of the various fire alarms included copy on the picture.

McGregor sprung the idea at a propitious time, as there had been a number of recent fires in town, and states that in addition to improving business on the picture the stunt paved the way for a profitable benefit at the theatre put on by the Fire Department in appreciation of this member's cooperation, the members of the department also aiding in the direct sale of tickets.

The boxing ticket press book suggestion was employed profitably in advance of "Prizefighter and the Lady" by McGregor, who three days in advance had one of the tickets delivered with every copy of the daily paper, at a cost of a pass for each newspaper carrier. A further help was an advertising trailer on the streets, the cost of these two stunts being $3.50 for the boxing tickets and $1 for the sign cloth for the trailer banners.

St. Johnsville is a town of 2,000 and hard hit by present conditions, but as result of this campaign mid-week business showed a rise with best of all the attendance of over 20 new patrons who had not patronized the theatre for the past year.

Real Indians As Bally On "Massacre" Date

A band of real Snohomish Indians who put on a regular stage show was one of the unusual gags arranged by A. J. Kennedy, for the date on "Massacre" at the Orpheum, Seattle, Wash. During the run of the show they lived in tepees erected in the street in front of the house, and we ask you, what do you think of that one for a traffic stopper?

A street parade of new Pontiac cars was another event in which the Indians took part, tying in with the trademark of that automobile company, and newspaper publicity which also helped was obtained through the subscription of Ann Dvorak to the insurance policy advertised by one of the papers with a plug on page one.

Waugh Puts Out Indexed Bulletin for Zone Houses

Something a little different in circuit bulletins is the one headed "Right From Dixie," created by Howard Waugh, Warner Bros.' Southern zone manager, and edited by Bill Hendricks, skipper of the Warner Theatre, Memphis.

This house organ is indexed under different headings, such as "Picture Slants," "Show Selling," and a separate page for Waugh's personal message to the zone personnel. Milt Gurian, zone booker, gives some pertinent dope on recently screened pictures and Bill Hendricks points out the advertising highlights on coming dates.

Other official business is also carried, and the entire idea is not only comprehensive and interesting, but no doubt also gets quicker managerial attention than the run of the mill multigraphed home office stuff.

TEASER STUFF. This is the first of the teaser ads on United Artists' New York newspaper campaign to sell the coming "Catherine the Great." The above is a reproduction of the effective three-column shot.

Ace Campaign Put On For Second Run

A campaign on a second run of "Footlight Parade" that was as comprehensive and complete as many of those put on in the first runs is credited to Manager M. F. Morrison, Rialto, Brockton, Mass., who put over a raft of stuff, which resulted in a holdover, the first time this has been done since the house went to a twice a week change.

Three newspaper contests were planted, two on the editorial pages and one in the classified section, all of which are reported to have brought in many hundreds of answers. Other newspaper tieups were made with prominent jewelry stores, who distributed passes in a number contest, advertising this heavily.

Effective street ballys were also arranged, one of a man in tramp's clothing who carried a sign reading, "I pawned my clothes to see, etc., etc.," and another a bannered two-way Ford. Imprinted calling cards were passed out on the streets by the house staff, and heralds, the cost of which were paid by a local insurance company, were also distributed. A dairy tieup in which tickets were given for lucky milk bottle caps also returned a lot of extra free advertising.

For two weeks in advance, cashiers passed out memo slips to all patrons calling attention to the date; each member of the house staff sent 25 post cards to friends plugging the picture, and Morrison also had manager friends in nine towns write to names on his local mailing list praising the attraction.

Music tieups of course were made with orchestras, radio stations, in addition to the special Witmark music post cards which were mailed to a select list. In fact, everything that could be done was taken care of and Morrison is entitled to a couple of extra bows for determined efforts in rolling up his gross on his second run.

Rosenfield Cooperates On "Drive Safely" Week

A "drive safely" campaign put over in cooperation with the Omaha Board of Safety not only aided in strengthening his theatre good will, but also netted display copy on the current attractions in all "drive" advertising for Manager J. J. Rosenfield, Orpheum, Omaha, Neb.

Entitled "Sportsmanship," a short especially produced for the occasion and paid for by the local Safety Council was run at the theatre, this and the rest of the program being advertised widely at no cost to Rosenfield. The newspapers too went for the idea.

Civic leaders and city officials publicly commended Rosenfield for his efforts in selling "safety week," and a subsequent tieup was also made with the Goodrich Tire Co., in which the theatre was plugged in newspaper ads in exchange for allowing a display in the lobby emphasizing the safety emblem of this company.

"J. J." reports a distinct box office increase as the result of this cooperation, and in appreciation of his efforts was further rewarded by a resolution of thanks from the members of the board and the city commissioners of the Nebraska city.

KENNETH GRIMES WINNER OF FIRST QUIGLEY AWARD

Manager of Warner Theatre, Morgantown, West Va., Is Selected by Judges To Receive January Trophy for Campaign on "Dinner at 8"; Curtis and Finlay of Montreal; Evens of St. Louis, and Morrison of Brockton, Mass., Finish Neck and Neck

by A-MIKE VOGEL

By the vote of the judges, George J. Schaefer of Paramount, S. Charles Einfeld of Warner Brothers and Arthur L. Mayer of the Rialto Theatre, New York, Manager Kenneth Grimes of the Warner Theatre, Morgantown, West Virginia, is declared the winner in the competition for the January Quigley Award for his excellent campaign on "Dinner at Eight." His picture and a reproduction of the trophy will appear in next week's issue.

Rated highly in the judging, and slated for First Mention are the following: Manager Gene Curtis and Exploiteer Ken Finlay of the Palace, Montreal—"Little Women"; Harold W. Evens, managing director, Loew's State, St. Louis—"Roman Scandals"; and Manager M. F. Morrison, Rialto, Brockton, Mass.—second run campaign on "Footlight Parade." And not violating any confidences, we might say that it was not the easiest job in the world to select the winner whose entry is detailed elsewhere.

QUIGLEY MONTHLY AWARDS will be presented during 1934, one each month, for the theatre campaign selected by the judges as possessing the highest merit of all those submitted to the Round Table on pictures played on any product between the first and last days of each month. . . .

THE QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD will be given for the campaign submitted during the entire year of 1934, selected by the judges as possessing the highest merit. . . .

CAMPAIGNS may be forwarded after the last day of the month, but must be on pictures played during the month. . . .

THEATRE MANAGERS everywhere in the world are eligible for these awards; campaigns from distant parts will be given special consideration to provide for the difference in mailing time. . . .

Other numerous campaigns of merit were also received, among them so many of excellence, showing plenty of hard work and ingenuity, that it was decided to award to some of the oustanding, Honorable Mention Certificates, and the names and theatres of these entrants are carried in the first column on this page. Heading this list, are noted the above mentioned four for whom a special Award of First Mention has been designated.

Especially called to the attention of the membership is the work of Morrison, of Brockton, whose efforts on the second run of "Footlight Parade" (story on page to left) earned him serious consideration for the major award.

To be noted with pleasure is the inclusion in the Honorable Awards of John Armstrong, publicity director, Carlton Theatre, London, England, who sent over a very smart campaign with the assurance that the British showmen are right on their toes for these Awards.

Campaigns are already being received for the February Award; and for the information of those who would like to enter the competition, the rules are published in the column to the left.

Entries from those who contributed to the January Award are again invited to enter the February competition.

MORE ON RADIO ADVERTISING

Theatre Broadcast Must Be More Than Straight Picture Plug To Sell Tickets, Says Round Tabler

by J. J. McMANUS
Midland, Kansas City, Mo.

Relative to whether or not radio has been, or can be used to sell theatre tickets to the utmost, my findings are, as well as one can realize on advertising, that it can be done, and cite the following to back up my belief:

J. J. McManus

Radio is today one of the most vital news interests in America, practically everyone listens in at some time or another in every day. There may be those in show business who disagree with me, but my contention is, if the material produced over radio is made to be entertaining, whether in straight dialogue or with music and comedy effects the main issue is, make it entertaining. Citing a monologist, Edwin C. Hill, who has one of the widest ranges of followers on radio, and yet all he does is tell a story; the catch is, how he tells it.

Naturally, not knowing those personally who may claim that radio cannot sell tickets, I cannot diagnose their ills, but, personally, I feel that the fault lies at home. In short, that without doubt that natural ability for nice listening in the talks is missing, or they have in a slipshod manner done what should be done so carefully. Intonation and pronounciation, enhancing material will sell anything over radio; we must admit that radio has audiences who are potential buyers of theatre tickets, but if the song, piano selection, comedy gags or speech is not to their liking they will turn the dial Remember no one can please everyone, but every true showman should know that which the majority likes, and sell it accordingly.

Straight Plug Bad

Remember, walking into my shop, I like anyone who tells me, "My, this is a smart soanso," and by the same token I dislike those who may say, "Why don't you have soanso's here?" We, being human, are all egotists more or less, but all are, and to make a hit, make people like you; do what you have to do well, at least as well as you can, and this applies to everything you do, but in particular to an unseen audience who may not be able to appreciate the fact that you have such a nice smile and that you are a neat dresser, or that you are a real gentleman. So all that cannot be taken in by the eye must be made up for in a new technique, your voice personality and of course material, which comes back to your judgment.

A straight plug is nil. Flavor it with a personality that you have met, or failing in this, that you have read enough about authentic material to know whereof you speak. Give them what they want first, then get your angle in as best you can.

The above is my sincere thought, and having same, I feel that I have proven the theory.

LaFalce Gets Ace Returns On "Toy Matinees"

Cooperating with one of his newspapers and the local Planning Committee of the Council of Social Agencies, headed by many prominents, Frank LaFalce, Washington zone Warner Theatre ad head, established a new high in the execution of the third annual Warner Theatres' "toy matinees," in which the 12 local houses participated.

Over 20,000 new toys and many articles of clothing were obtained for distribution by the various charities, the newspaper coming across splendidly with a series of front page feature stories, in addition to large display ads, all of which of course plugged the theatres.

Highlights of Grimes' Winning Campaign

For a town of 16,000, and at a comparatively small cost, Manager Kenneth Grimes, Warner, Morgantown, W. Va., put over a campaign on "Dinner at 8" that must be rated of rare excellence and fully deserving of the reward he receives. This member details over 30 distinct ideas he put into effect, some of the highlights of which are herein described.

Two lobby displays were effected, one well in advance and the second, illustrated below, used a week in advance, this being a dining room table completely set with a service for eight, with place cards for each star's name.

Many outside tieups were made. The Coca Cola agents supplied life sized Jean Harlow cutouts for lobby and window display and also had truck drivers place date cards in all stores they serviced. Twelve other windows in prominent spots were also secured. In exchange for passes, newsboys carried imprinted banners on their backs for a week in advance and imprinted napkins were placed in the leading restaurants, and this was also done with grocery bags used in prominent markets and stores.

Outstanding was a tieup with a local flying service wherein, in exchange for a credit poster in the lobby, a plane flew a theatre banner over the city and other communities. Inexpensive tire covers were made up by the house artist and placed on all taxis; all sidewalks were penciled with the title and a tieup with the phone company allowed the placing of small theatre cards on their pay phones making with copy reading, "Make an appointment to see, etc."

Western Union was promoted for blank forms on which theatre messages were typed and distributed, laundries and bakeries were contacted to use stuffers, and a number of sock street ballys were also employed. A thorough advertising and newspaper and posting campaign also called attention to the date, all these contributing to a campaign that thoroughly blanketed the community and produced most satisfactory results.

It will no doubt be of much interest to the membership to know that arrangements are now being made to have the January Quigley Award presented to Ken Grimes in person at the Washington "Get-Together" on Feb. 17, by one of the more prominent Capital City personalities, such as Postmaster General James J. Farley.

SHOWMANSHIP TILTING BOX-OFFICE RETURNS IN BOSTON AND HARTFORD

Managers in These Spots Are Working Every Angle To Get Them In; Martin J. Mullin Fully Credits His Manpower

by A-MIKE VOGEL

"Manpower is putting over our houses," says Martin J. Mullin, directing head of the far-flung M. & P. Circuit of New England. And it also may be said that manpower is doing likewise in other Yankeeland theatres, instances of which were apparent in Hartford and New Britain.

Dave Sugarman recently installed at the Embassy in New Britain, open three days, is working on a number of ideas to keep his cashier busier. This member served on the Bridgeport front for some time and stated his pleasure in being able to enlist under the flag of I. J. Hoffman, directing head of the Warner Brothers' New England houses.

Hartford Managers Happy

This same "I. J." gets the "nod" all the way, for in Hartford Jimmy Weist at the Regal Theatre, and Jim McCarthy at the Strand also express satisfaction. Jimmy, incidentally, campaigned with your chairman years ago in the thick of the Florida boom.

Charlie Brennan at the Capitol, another "corpsbruder," also happy in his new assignment, spoke favorably of the Poli operating policies in which each manager is considered an independent operator. Charlie kindly acted as host, his new Dodge making possible quick visits to George Landers, local E. M. Loew chief, and Lou Schaefer, skipper at the M. & P. Allyn. George's theatre is an upstairs house with the street floor taken up by stores. Idea, what? And from the attendance, folks, evidently don't mind the few extra steps.

Lou Schaefer had just put on a capacity all-Walt Disney benefit show, a smart local gag that hikes the Sunday take. The tap at the box office on the "mouse" bill was up to a dollar (benefit prices) and while many locals can afford the dollar, Hartford is nevertheless a white collar town payrolled to a great degree by insurance employees who have it mostly on pay days.

The ace houses get a 50-cent top, but opinion is divided on whether or not this is too high. On the whole, though, general grosses are reported healthy with the boys working to keep them so. Theatres close on Sunday until six in the evening giving the managers an opportunity to catch up on back sleep.

Cordial relations between theatremen is also the rule here, every one going out of his way to welcome the weary traveler. They plug for each other as well as their attractions—another dividend paying form of manpower.

Boston Goes Manpower

That last word gets a lot of tossing around, but it appears to be the real McCoy in the vocabulary of the above quoted Mullin—"Marty" as he is more familiarly known to a legion of showmen in every part of the United States.

In last week's issue, your Chairman chronicled what was seen and done in a quick call upon the members in Bridgeport and New Haven, and in these columns puts down some brief observations on the activities of the Round Tablers in Hartford, New Britain and Boston. As time did not allow meeting up with all the members in this section, those missed will be seen the next trip.

Taking hold of the hundred odd Publix houses, financially prostrate a year ago, Mullin stated that he and his partner, Sam Pinanski, put it right up to the managers by restoring salary cuts and telling the boys to cut loose with the result that today the M. & P. houses are plenty in the black.

Charley "Ballyhoo" Bassin has taken advantage of this latitude to do a smart job of selling at the ace Oriental, his right hand man being Leo Lieberman. Incidentally, Charlie "hosted" your chairman around town, doing the honors at the M. & P. offices where calls were made on Sam Pinanski, circuit co-head, C. J. Russell, Sr., Bangor, Maine M. & P. partner and city manager, old friend Jack Lourie, Hy Fine, M. & P. production manager and "brother private" of the old World Film days.

Also Division Manager Ed A. Cuddy and District Managers Al Moreau, Bill Spragg, Harry Wasserman, Francis McManus, and J. J. McGinnis, Massachusetts Allied President and Cliff McIntyre, among others. And of course Don Chambers and Myron Shellman of Harry Browning's staff and Nan Cohen, Harry's secretary—all subbing for the streptococci-stricken Browning, who was at home fighting a bad throat.

A visit to Harry's home found him busily engaged with soothing medicines, but not too ill to discuss the details of the coming get-together.

Other Bostonians Stepping

The M. P.-ites, though prominent in New England theatre spotlight, do not occupy it exclusively; Jack Goldstein, RKO Radio ad chief, is doing a lot of good things at the RKO Boston and Keith's, these houses supervised by Tom Meehan of Charlie Koerner's division. As are other Bostonians, Goldstein showed enthusiasm for the coming Club get-together and is stepping fast to arrange things for the big night. Horace McNabb, Mary Healy and Carlo Vannicola make up the rest of Jack's staff.

A visit to Gene Fox, Metropolitan press chief, and his assistant, Jack Saef, resulted in a load of information on local advertising conditions with showmen way up on their toes now that the code has tightened up things.

Joe Di Pesa, publicist of Loew's State, showed the results of his stepping in the form of a 300-pound birthday cake promoted to celebrate the 30th "Loew Anniversary." Fine art lobby work is turned out here by Louis Chiaramonte, who also conducts art classes.

A series of flying visits to other Boston managers disclosed a steady barrage of exploitation that in most cases was holding up grosses.

Lou Newman, at the Allston, a Round Tabler for many years, showed nice results on his drive for the youngsters on "Alice," matinees bringing virtual capacity, with adults included. At Morris Sharoff's Coolidge, the new Brookline theatre, Manager Clarence Robbins was not about, and his assistant, Herb Finn, acted as guide.

Booster Club Clicking

Louis W. Richmond, of E. M. Loew's National, is the lad who has had such success with his Booster's Club, a kid club that clicks big, about which more will be said in these pages. This visit was a reminder to stop in at the E. M. Lowe home offices, where the time of the day was passed with executives Max Finn and Phil Berlar, after which a stop was made at the Uptown, where Chester Ellis holds forth under George Giles, and proclaims his contentment with his job and his boss.

The fact that most of the managers encountered on this trip expressed themselves as, and appeared to be, perfectly happy in their assignments is possibly the most significant observation to be noted. Whether they happen to be fortunate in their superiors, or whether acting human is a trait of this part of the country, remains unsaid, but the answer seems to be a bit of both.

Chidley Breaks Record

A complete campaign on "Little Women" at the Rialto, Casper, Wyo., reported by Manager C. H. Chidley to have broken the house record, contains sufficient selling angles to justify the capacity business.

The many suggested school tieups were reflected, including the posting in school rooms of the special one sheets and distribution of family night programs in all class rooms. Radio program was put on for five days in advance and during the run, and announcements were made over the amplifying system at the State championship football game.

Prytz Ties in Radio Sponsors on "Tarzan"

Trading on the popularity of the local "Tarzan" broadcast, sponsored by a leading coffee firm, Manager Roy Prytz, Granada, Duluth, Minn., tied in with these sponsors who contributed generously to a citywide campaign, advertising "Tarzan the Fearless" at the theatre.

Besides large newspaper ads, the coffee people placed three sheet cutouts with many of their leading retailers in all sections of the city, bannered all their trucks, announced the play date each night during the broadcast, and sponsored a special show for orphans, in addition to giving many passes as attendance prizes to various local organizations.

Prytz promoted a lot of free newspaper publicity and in exchange for a free showing for the boys who distributed Liberty and who paraded to the theatre for the showing, the news distributors stuffed all copies of the magazine with theatre heralds, also bannering all delivery trucks.

Prytz and His "Crossroads" Signals

Local high schools were thoroughly covered, an especially noteworthy idea being an announcement of the picture to the students of one of the high schools through the school public address system. Roy states that business was a stand-out and sends along a three column ad, in which is shown a crowd at the theatre unable to gain admission.

Prytz also did quite well on a recent engagement of "Dangerous Crossroads" in which he centered his campaign on a lobby flash that included lanterns, flags and red flares, which he secured from local railroad officials. Also, prominent in the display was a "stop and go" sign, with red and green lights working from a flasher socket, illustrated in the accompanying photo in which the good looking gent is none other than Roy himself.

This Round Tabler has been stationed at the Granada for the past four years and has been an active contributor.

Pickle and House Staff Build Theatre Stage

There are few things around the theatre that well seasoned showmen are not prepared to tackle, especially in the smaller situations, and this is further substantiated by Manager Leon Pickle, who sends in the details of a stage constructed at the Kentucky, Henderson, Ky., designed and constructed by Leon and his house staff.

The house lacking facilities for vaudeville, contests, etc., the stage, 8 feet by 18, was constructed over the orchestra pit. The material used was "B" grade lumber and a footlight trough was built in to give it a legitimate appearance and also to add to the house lighting system. On completion, the entire stage was given a stain made from a half gallon of gasoline and a quarter pound of oil lamp black.

Leon reports that over half of the lumber was promoted, and with the help of his staff, did the job in two nights after the show, further stating that this idea has been helpful in building up his recent grosses.

This member is another one of the penitents who regrets his laggardness in reporting campaigns to Club headquarters. And, incidentally, showmen in like situations, who are interested in adding stages to their equipment, are requested by Pickle to communicate with him for estimates on the size, quantity of lumber used and other details.

Rosy's Two Radio Contests On "Fugitive Lovers"

To follow up Morris Rosenthal's recent interesting article in which he details some of his methods in selling tickets over the radio, the following air campaign on "Fugutive Lovers" should prove interesting.

Two different radio contests were put on, the first offering free round trip bus rides to New York and theatre tickets for the best stories from listeners-in on their most thrilling experiences while riding in busses. The second contest was more pretentious and was put on during Rosy's own broadcast, in which as "The Film Chatterer," Morris offered similar prizes or round trips to Washington, giving the picture a build-up by arranging for radio transcriptions of the story in instalments three days in advance of the date.

Various bus lines cooperated, one tying in with window cards at all bus stations and another putting out 5,000 blotters in which the copy was hooked into the picture. The idea was further extended to New Haven, where Ben Cohen, at the College, playing day and date, also participated.

Rosenthal's broadcast, which he puts over in person on Friday nights, is attaining great popularity, and the accompanying reproduction of a notice in the radio column of one of his dailies further attests to this member's newspaper standing.

Garry Ballys Invisible Fish To Sell "Invisible"

Going comic a bit evidently to take the curse of the chills in the picture, Garry Lassman planted a fish bowl filled with colored water in the lobby of the Avon, Utica, N. Y., with this gag copy—"These Brazilian Invisible Fish were made invisible by the same magic potion used by the "Invisible Man."

Three snappy street stunts were also part of the campaign. One was a sedan, all windows covered with black cambric with copy to the effect that the car was being driven by the "man." Driver of course could see out, but folks outside could not see in. Another car gag was a full-dressed, head-bandaged, goggle-wearing driver in an open "job," car carrying tieup copy banners, and yet a third stunt was a man completely covered with black cambric, who made all the important stores and other prominent spots in town.

Lassman tricked up his lobby with a lot of illusion stuff, using blinker lights, green paint, weird transparencies, and followed this up with a prologue in character that ran as follows: Entire house was blacked out, man dashed from wings with green spot on him from booth. Man screamed as dummy with luminous painted face whizzed by, then shot at the dummy as it disappeared in the wings, with trailer following immediately.

Star Identification Gag Goes Over for Dowling

A stunt that he recommends for use on any attraction and which did big for "Lady Killer" at the Palace, Pittsfield, Mass., is forwarded by Manager Ed Dowling. A prominent window was promoted, and in it was placed a large frame containing photos of the many stars and feature players from the various producing companies whose product Dowling plays.

Tickets were given to the first ten patrons naming the entire list correctly, with this information conveyed in a special panel in the center of the display. Unfortunately, the snapshot that Ed sends us to illustrate, is not quite clear enough for reproduction, but it makes a nice flash and does not sound too involved for a repeat in other spots.

Incidentally, Dowling states that after reading our editorial about managers using the ideas in the Club pages and not contributing their campaigns, makes him feel ashamed of himself and he promises to do his part in the future. Very good, Eddie!

Reth Plants Feature With "Hi, Nellie" Preview

An exceptional newspaper break was secured by J. Real Neth in advance of his "Hi, Nellie," showing at Neth's Grand, Columbus, Ohio, by promoting eleven of the city's more prominent editors and reporters on one of the leading papers to view the picture and to write their frank criticisms of it.

As the story has a distinct newspaper background, the stunt was very timely, especially since the daily printed the criticisms and approvals of each of the newspaperites, the drama editor running the break at the top of the page with a four-column head.

Dane Creates Clever Idea On Christmas Tree Display

Christmas trees, of course, have been used most everywhere to furnish theatre holiday atmosphere, but Robert A. Dane, of Shea's Buffalo, went a step further in using a tree as a basis of an unusual contest that drew many replies.

The tree, 40 feet high, said to be the largest in Buffalo, was set in the lobby of the theatre and decorated with the usual trinkets. A 30-day pass was given to the one guessing nearest to the number of decorations used and the time taken to do the job.

Coulter Battling Against Virginia Sunday Law

Of significance to every theatreman in Virginia is the fight now being waged in the courts by Walter J. Coulter of the Byrd Theatre, Richmond, recently arrested with six of the house staff for giving a Sunday show for the benefit of a Crippled Children's Hospital.

Manager Stewart B. Tucker sends along tear sheets from the local papers, in which prominent front page stories were carried in addition to editorials which indicated that public sentiment was decidedly in favor of Sunday opening.

Coincidentally, or otherwise, the story broke the day before the convening of the State legislature, and shows that Coulter and his staff selected a psychological time in which to strike for a new deal on Sunday.

Reeths Creates Effective Lobby "Air" Flash

An inexpensive lobby flash that brought gratifying comment and notice was created by Manager Fred Reeths, Jr., Sheboygan, Sheboygan, Wis., on his "Flying Down to Rio" advance. The accompanying photo illustrates the finished effect.

The suspended airplane was cut out from the regular streamer, backed with strips of lumber, the cutout figures treated in a like manner. The title letters were illuminated with small white Christmas tree lights hooked up to a flasher plug. These lights were inserted by cutting through the streamer with a razor blade, making holes just large enough for the bulbs to go through. To ensure long burning, Reeths added a small socket to each set of lights.

For the propeller effect, a small electric fan was used which gave the display a very realistic touch, and also called attention to the stills on the board below.

On "Dinner at 8," this member put out a paper window streamer tying in the picture to copy reading, "Good coffee is necessary when serving 'Dinner at 8,' etc., etc.," the streamer, of course, including theatre credits and cast names. These were placed on the outside of grocery windows, Reeths stating this is especially recommended during cold weather, when windows are frozen.

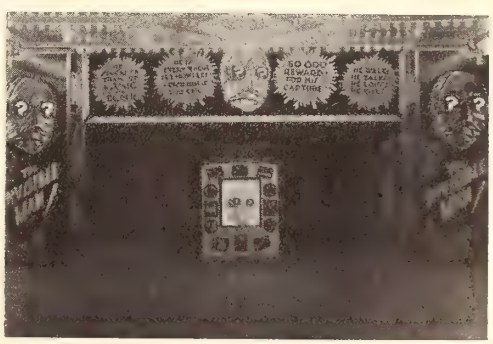
Beck's Theatre Magazine Makes Effective Publicity

A very smart theatre magazine is being published monthly by N. Edward Beck, managing director Hollywood, Ft. Worth, Texas, which deserves ranking with most of the ambitious efforts of this kind put out in largest spots.



The publication is of regular magazine size, of 20 pages, including front and back covers in color, given over to the advertising of coming features. The first page of copy is devoted to general theatre chatter written by Beck and the other pages include picture articles, star interviews, and plenty of attractive halftones.

Not only does it sell the shows in an attractive manner, but the cost is materially reduced by the inclusion of a number of pages of paid advertising, all in all a very worthy undertaking to be admired.

QUESTION MARKS. Gus Lampe went for the question mark idea in his lobby front on "Invisible Man" for the date at the Eckel, Syracuse, N. Y. It's easy to see that this Round Tabler went decidedly visible in his flash to sell this attraction.

Many Ace Ideas in Winchell's "Roman Scandals" Manual

To build up advance enthusiasm on "Roman Scandals" among the houses in the circuit, Charlie Winchell, ad head, Minnesota Amusement Co., put out some very clever photostat ideas.

Charlie dug up front pages of past issues of the Chicago Tribune proclaiming events of importance, such as Lindbergh landing in Paris, and even going back further to Dewey at Manila, and Peary at the North Pole. These pages were tied up in the copy in the same manner as the one here illustrated, and being quite unusual deserve the many favorable comments reported by managers in all situations.

Winchell also got out a sales manual on this attraction for the information of all managers playing the date which covers about everything needed to put the picture over in most any spot. Many novel angles are detailed, and the following, to select one of the many, is good enough to bear repeating: Managers were requested to obtain a full length photo of their town's leading citizen to be sent to Charlie, who superimposed it on a photo of Cantor and Ruth Etting in costume, so that the manager could have a cut made of it to run in the local papers. Numerous other selling ideas are included, such as a community "Roman Holiday" to be put over as are special sales days in which all stores participate.

London Daily Contest For British Cartoonist

Circulation builders have long been a feature of London newspapers, one of the most recent in the Sunday Dispatch tieing directly into motion pictures with a competition in which the paper offers a contract to any reader creating a cartoon character to run in the paper regularly, and from which film cartoons can be made.

As the story states, the reason for the offer is that the Walt Disney cartoons have proven so popular with the British, determined efforts are to be made to discover an English artist who can create cartoon characters of the same appeal.

Amateur Travels 600 Miles For Severson Celebration

A New Year's Eve celebration in which one of the volunteer entertainers traveled 600 miles to participate was one of the highlights of Mrs. Grace Severson's campaign to put over this party at the Liberty, Wolf Point, Mont., of which this enterprising showwoman is both secretary and manager.

Featured in the entertainment, which took the form of a midnight show, was a contest on the stage for amateur talent, with 16 prizes given to those who were judged by the audience to be the best old time fiddler, best old time jigger and a series of other "bests" running from novelty dancing numbers to comedy sketches and so forth.

The long distance traveled by one of the entertainers mentioned above was occasioned by a special cash prize to the amateur arriving from the farthest point, and this incidentally indicates how widespread is the popularity of the Liberty in that section of the country.

To advertise this event, Mrs. Severson had special colored heralds made up on her mimeograph machine with clever art work setting off the copy.

Boucher's Co-op Page Sells "Dinner At 8"

A neat co-op page on "Dinner at 8" was created by Round Tabler Frank Boucher, Warner city manager, Hagerstown, Md., for the date at the Maryland Theatre. A two-inch streamer across the page, plus a two-column flash down the center was entirely devoted to picture copy; the remainder of the page was divided into 12 equally sized boxed ads, one and three-quarters wide and nine inches deep, the title tied in at the top to the copy in the various advertisements, with a cut at the top of each showing the face of a clock set at the hour of eight.

Payette a Father Again

John J. Payette, Warner Theatres' Washington zone manager, is again a father, this time of a nine-pound boy, born to Mrs. Payette at the Garfield Hospital, Washington, D. C., last week. Besides the newcomer there are Dolores, age 5, and John, Jr., 3.

Smart Lobby Idea For Unused Box Offices

What to do with unused lobby box offices is a problem that has received a lot of consideration by showmen and from time to time the Club pages have carried stories on the various things done to brighten up a usually unattractive spot.

Erle Wright, Poli, New Haven, Conn., handles this angle for very good returns by building actual scenes from his coming productions in the interior of his lobby box office, creating sufficient flash to gather admiring crowds.

scene from "Moulin Rouge" in black and white, with black drapes, cut out figures and modernistic silver trees. The white steps and other scenery are composed of compo board and covered with white sand to give a stone effect, the entire display about 15 inches deep. Two octagon shaped boxes are used as "cycs," which hook into place so that when one is being used, the other is being revamped for the next display.

Erle reports that these attract real attention and result in many favorable comments; in fact, so favorable, that this member is endeavoring to top his previous efforts with a flash of a throne room scene from the coming "Queen Christina."

These displays are designed and built by Gene Wright, house artist, and are offered to the membership as another solution for effective treatment of lobby "eyesores."

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Jack Hodges of the Tampa in Tampa, Florida, sends us this striking example of Andy Beiter's art work on "Dancing Lady." The display measured 32' x 15'; the base was painted a light blue, the steps and top were black, the circle white and the center red velour paper. The two columns were red cloth held up by a wire running to the ceiling. A spot was placed in the base of each circle and lit the columns evenly. Another spot was placed behind the central figure, and a color-wheel covered the back circle. Jack says it received plenty of comment and we are sure there's no room for argument there.

HARRY KARP
is another young member to join us. At present Harry is managing the Rex Theatre in Oshkosh, Wis. He started in showbusiness at the tender age of sixteen, later became assistant manager at the Wisconsin Theatre in Milwaukee, then went to the Tower, in the same city, and finally arrived at his present berth. He says he picked this business of ours as a life's vocation and with all the aggressiveness he has displayed so far, we know Harry's bound to arrive at the top of the heap.

manages the Bijou, in Piqua, Ohio, where he has been for a year and admits to having taken advantage of quite a few of our advertising tips and has never missed a word of the Herald since he received his first copy. Rod certainly has done things; he has worked as usher, janitor, ticket taker, rewinder, etc. He now manages a 400-seat house that had been closed for three years, after having redecorated it, made modern improvements, etc. He is raring to go and we're rooting for him.

is out in Crane, Texas, where he manages the Palace Theatre. Boyd must be a member of the young-timers' club, because he is only twenty-three years old, which is pretty young, you'll all admit, to be in charge of a house. Suppose you keep us posted on what you are doing to put things over down your way; you know Crane hasn't been represented much in our pages.

comes from across the water; London, England, in fact, where he keeps the cash register humming at the Lido Cinema. We've had quite a few new members recently from England, Harry, and they all promise to be active ones, so you'd better get busy and not have your brothers show you up by their numerous contributions. Suppose you make a New Year's resolution to let us know how things are going with you?

manages the Paramount Theatre, in Borger, Texas, and it certainly looks like this page was old home week for Texas. Dave has apparently been places and seen and done things; he has authorized three plays, run three theatres in West Texas and owned two stock companies, and is only twenty-six. He sure seems to have crammed plenty into his life so far. He's played vaude and tab shows through Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas, and has been West as Director of International Beauty Pageant in Galveston, Tex. Now he's settled down to running the Paramount and we're sure he'll make a mighty fine job of it.

DONOVAN L. RINKER is the exploitation manager of the Liberty Theatre, in Gladwater, Texas, which just about ties his house up 100%, since the manager, Jack Berry, is also a Round Tabler. Incidentally, Don, do you know A. C. Bray at the Ritz? He too,is a brother member. If you don't you ought to go over and say "howdy" to him for us and yourself.

is managing the Court Theatre in Wheeling, W. Va. Unless we're mistaken, that's where some good cigars come from, plus a few other well known things. Well, George, we are quite familiar with your house because we've had other members there, mighty good friends of the Club, and we're hoping you'll be another to continue where they left off.

is in St. George, S. C., managing the Strand Theatre and he says it keeps him on the jump taking care of a house in a small town and putting on three or four pages a week. "J. E." finds the Club so indispensable to him that he says if there are any dues to let him know immediately and a check will be forthcoming. That's the spirit, boy, but the toll you have to pay is to let us know of the successful stunts you put over so that the rest of the boys can take advantage of them as you do theirs. Is it a go?

KENNETH A. GRIMES is the gent who manages the Warner Theatre in Morgantown, West Virginia. We are pretty sure that Ken is turning out a brand of showmanship down there that would interest the rest of you boys, if we could be sure that he keeps the mails humming with a list of his stunts so that they could be prepared for publication. Come on, boy; do your stuff.

is the assistant manager of Stanley-Warner's Ogontz Theatre in Philadelphia, Pa., where he aids Ray Meyer, a member of long standing. Well, with the training that you are doubtless getting under Ray's tutelage, it probably won't be long before you'll be handling a house of your own. Here's hoping, Dick.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

Coming: A Fourth Year of

ACHIEVEMENT

SINCE Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative was introduced early in 1931, its revolutionary qualities have fulfilled every hope and prediction of its sponsors. It has helped cameramen and producers so tremendously... it has affected the motion picture art so profoundly...it has contributed to so many cinematic triumphs, that a further prediction can now be made: In its fourth year, as heretofore, this Eastman film will be an important factor in the most conspicuous motion picture achievements. MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 114, No. 9 February 24, 1934

AN "INSIDE JOB"

VARIOUS big-wigs of Hollywood are reported to be frothing to the point of protest to the Hays office over an article appearing in the Saturday Evening Post signed by Mr. Samuel Goldwyn and presenting an array of figures on star salaries. In this article argument is made that stars are worth what they cost and entitled to their short years of golden harvest.

Some of Mr. Goldwyn's contemporaries seem to think that he has violated production ethics in putting this material before the public.

The obvious fact is that the article discusses only material which is in the main common talk of Hollywood, and he presents a set of figures that any reporter after two hours in the town could have compiled.

Hollywood may do well enough to get conscious about "dollar publicity," but just at the moment it is more likely annoyed that the ubiquitous, irrepressible Mr. Goldwyn has in the guise of a defender of the art once again stepped neatly into the center of the spotlight.

If Hollywood is going to be peevish about Mr. Goldwyn's contributions to current screen journalism, what about the army of some two hundred and odd "fan writers" in Hollywood who get information, encouragement, nourishment, not to say irrigation, in their continuous traffic in gossip and scandal.

RACE IN WRONG, AGAIN!

"THE movie was born in the laboratory and reared in the counting house" begins a tract entitled "The Eyes of the Movie," written by the late and able Harry Alan Potamkin and just now published, along with much other literature of protest, by International Publishers.

Mr. Potamkin was among the most acute students of the motion picture and was capable in forcefully putting himself on paper. He was a member of the Exceptional Photoplay Committee of the National Board of Review. It was his view that the motion picture had an obligation to save the world or at least do something for society. Because his presentations in this booklet are so typical of a certain range of critical approach to the industry, they are proper subject for comment here, despite the narrowness of his direct audience.

Surveying the motion picture from the beginning, Mr. Potamkin found it the instrument of the ruling forces of the society into which it was born. He seems, strangely enough, to have been surprised as well as annoyed. He found that motion picture treating the negro, the labor agitator, patriots, enemies in war, etc., about as America treats them. He scolds of American screen propaganda and then holds up to praise film products of the U.S.S.R., which run about 125 per cent propaganda.

In substance, Mr. Potamkin found the motion picture nearly as illogical and incompetent as the human race. It is probably more profitable and constructive to complain about the race.

ROUND TABLING

THERE'S contribution to the general impression of upturn and cheer in the industry in the reports that Mr. A-Mike Vogel, chairman and editor of the Round Table, brings in from the Get-Together parties now going the rounds of the eastern key cities. The Washington party of last week, recorded in the Round Table section of this issue, was, in the words of one of the leading theatre men of the capital, the first occasion in the history of the industry which brought all of the showmen together. The enthusiasm of the managers and their growing community of interest is one of the box office assets of the industry.

CHAINS OF OLD SILVER

SULLEN greys overcast the skies of the East from Cape Race to the lower Chesapeake. Three thousand miles out yonder beyond the Sierras the California sun is smiling. It is such an enigmatic, reluctant smile as Leonardo brought to the face of La Gioconda, but still a smile.

It is now something like twenty-seven years ago that Colonel William N. Selig, operating in winter-bound Chicago, sent a camera expedition into the Los Angeles sector.

In that day the sensitivity of motion picture emulsions was somewhere in the region of 150-250 on the Hurter & Drifield scale. The film was color blind, sluggish. It took the full glare of the sun to set up within the molecules of silver bromide the stresses which empower the chemical miracle of image development. Today the H. & D. scale is outmoded, but today's films on their sensitometers would register a rating of mayhap upwards of 1,000. And the sun does not matter any more. In fact, it has been discarded. On the studio stage there is neither night nor day, save as fiction dictates. Nothing of the land the sunseekers found remains to the screen but the address: Hollywood, California, three thousand miles from Broadway, where the players come from, three thousand miles from the home office where the money comes from, three thousand miles from the world market of songs and stories, three thousand miles from America.

THIS WEEK - - - -

TAUGHT ENGLAND

"If American producers hadn't shown British film men how to make pictures, England would not know how," Gerald Campbell, British consul general in New York, frankly told AMPA members at luncheon last week. He expressed gratification at the American reception to British films. . . .

SHORTS AWARDS

To more than 20 shorts producers the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has extended invitations to submit releases for consideration of the awards committee. The first screening will be February 22, awards to be at the annual banquet, March 16. . . .

ANTIPODES' PROGRESS

With conditions in Australia much better than in the U. S., the Antipodean continent is ahead of this country in recovery progress, reports MGM executive Arthur M. Loew, returned from a three-months survey. The building of Loew houses "down under" is being limited to one in Melbourne, one in Sydney, he said. . . .

WARNER SHOW

In 35 cities of the country, on Tuesday, March 6, Warner will hold its spring exhibit of product, to be attended by exhibitors, their friends, a plan begun in August, 1932. As auto makers show their wares, so should film makers, say Warner sales chiefs. . . .

EARLY "DOUBLE" DEAD

At least "one of the first" of screen doubles was Frank Pimental, who died last week at Niles, Cal., at the age of 52. Most famous of early stars for whom he "doubled" was "Bronco Billy" Anderson, first of the screen's cowboys, whose dangerous hard riding he did. . . .

YOUNG ROOSEVELT DENIES

Direct reply from the young man personally scotched rumors Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, was to accept a $1,000-a-week job with a film company on the Coast. Implied was a reaction in keeping with the White House attitude toward "money-changers." . . .

TAX FIGHT

Sharply determined opposition to a proposed 10 per cent tax on theatre receipts in Birmingham, Ala., is being waged by exhibitors, led by Frank Merritt, operating three houses. The Galax theatre, in an advertisement, protested the "injustice," promised to close if the levy becomes effective. . . .

LOEW PROFIT

An optimistic note was struck last week by Treasurer David Bernstein of Loew's at an adjourned meeting of stockholders, when he indicated the company's earnings for the second fiscal quarter are at the same level as the first quarter, when operating profit was $2,733,607. . . .

RADIO RESTRICTION

For "protection," the song numbers in three planned Fox musicals, "George White's Scandals," "The Follies," "Bottoms Up," will be released for radio but two weeks before film release, and then on special broadcasts. . . .

SUNDAY FILMS

In a liberalization of film laws, the state of Kentucky is virtually assured of a legislative lifting of the ban against Sunday films. Passed by the House and Senate, only Governor Laffoon's signature, confidently expected, is necessary. . . .

GERMANY DICTATES

Practically complete control of the motion picture industry in Germany has resulted from passage of a measure giving the propaganda ministry power to censor or veto scripts prior to production. Nor will any amount of alteration permit exhibition of any foreign film once blacklisted. Paul Joseph Goebels becomes film dictator. . . .

ENGLAND'S GAIN

Because the world discovered the British can make good films, "the year 1934 will be the most important in the history of film production in England," last week in London declared Alexander Korda, leading producer. From Hollywood England's spurt takes nothing, he says. . . .

HANSON CIRCUIT

Understood begun by Oscar Hanson is a Canadian circuit for handling British films. Hanson Theatres, Ltd., the new circuit, will use 90 per cent British product. In Toronto and Montreal the group will center. Mr. Hanson is a vital factor in the Canadian industry. . . .

CAREER ENDED

The long career of what was reputed to be one of the oldest theatres in the U. S. came to a disastrous end last week when fire swept the house at Bristol, 15 miles down Narragansett Bay from Providence. The theatre was built in 1784. . . .

NEW GANG

In the diminutive persons of three veterans and four newcomers, Hal Roach, MGM comedy producer, has constituted virtually a new "Our Gang" gang, to make its first appearance in "Hi, Neighbor." . . .

RADIO-WARNER DEAL

Proudly Jules Levy, RKO Radio general sales manager, announced to his assembled staff in New York last week that Warner Theatres has purchased the entire Radio product for 1934-35. . . .

IN TWO PARTS

Said to be urged by some exhibitors and dictated by factors of length, richness of background, Warner may produce Hervey Allen's best-selling, gigantic novel, "Anthony Adverse," in the form of two features, each running 10 reels. A shorter version may also be available. . . .

RADIO TO DELIVER

Radio will deliver 44 features, as planned, this season, last week declared Ned Depinet in Hollywood. Thus far 32 are completed or in work. . . .

EXISTING ZONE SCHEDULES ARE BASIS FOR NEW SEASON

Machinery for Code Operation in Field Is Established with Naming 21 of the Local Clearance Boards and 21 Grievance Units; Rosenblatt Has Final Decision on Definition of Clauses

The actual machinery for administering the motion picture code in the field as it relates to the governing of relations between exchanges and exhibitors and among the exhibitors of each group, was finally established in part last weekend, when the Code Authority of New York announced the final and approved personnel structure of some 21 Local Grievance and 21 Local Clearance and Zoning Boards which will hold forth in as many exchange centers hearing and adjusting complaints of unfair competition and establishing fair and reasonable clearance schedules. There remain ten more boards of each class to be named, and final approval of these is expected following the next Code Authority meeting in New York, which has been set for Monday, February 26th.

Meanwhile, the Code Authority decided to use the present clearance and zoning schedules as a basis for the new season, with changes made according to the merits of complaints.

At Washington the NRA let it be known that Mr. Sol A. Rosenblatt, Division Administrator, would be the last word in defining and interpreting the code. The order was accepted as a verification of Mr. Rosenblatt's previous decision that the ten per cent cancellation privilege would be retroactive to December 7th.

Various persons closely connected with code activities were preparing for the NRA's meeting of all Code Authorities and code committees of industry trade associations, to be held at Washington on March 5.

Code acceptance blanks reaching New York had totaled 7,600, as several new Code developments were reported from Hollywood.

Ten More Boards to Be Named

The 21 Local Grievance and 21 Local Clearance and Zoning Boards announced as having been given the final stamp of approval of the Code Authority this week are for the following cities:

BUFFALO
CINCINNATI
DALLAS
DENVER
DES MOINES
DETROIT
INDIANAPOLIS
KANSAS CITY
LOS ANGELES
MEMPHIS
MINNEAPOLIS
NEW HAVEN
NEW ORLEANS
OKLAHOMA CITY
OMAHA
PITTSBURGH
PORTLAND, ORE.
ST. LOUIS
SALT LAKE CITY
SEATTLE

The personnel of each of these approved Boards, together with their affiliations, appears on page 10. Boards for which personnel must still be named include those for:

ALBANY
BOSTON
CHICAGO
CLEVELAND
MILWAUKEE
NEW YORK
PHILADELPHIA
SAN FRANCISCO
WASHINGTON

In announcing the exhibitor and exchange representatives of the 21 Local Grievance and 21 Local Clearance Boards, the Code Authority also made known the "impartial" non-industry-members who will represent the Code Authority on the two boards each at Charlotte, Detroit, New Orleans and Oklahoma City. The impartial members will be announced next week for each of the other 38 approved boards.

When the boards are completely organized, they will begin functioning immediately, and when all appointments are completed the total membership of the 62 boards will number 372 exhibitors and exchangemen, divided equally. Also, in each territory, the two boards will be served by one secretary. Only the secretaries will be paid for their services out of funds to be raised from the industry at large. The Code Authority has not yet determined upon the method of collecting funds necessary to administer the code and to finance code machinery.

Each Local Grievance Board comprises one representative of a national, circuit affiliated distributor; one representative of a distributor without circuit affiliations; one affiliated and one unaffiliated or independent exhibitor.

Each Local Clearance Board includes one representative of a national, circuit affiliated distributor; One representative of a distributor without circuit affiliations; one first-run affiliated exhibitor; one first-run unaffiliated exhibitor; two subsequent-run, unaffiliated exhibitors.

Amendment of all codes to relieve members of Code Authorities from responsibility for acts of their fellow members is planned by the NRA, according to announcement in Washington Wednesday.

Resolution Affects Clearance Boards

At the Code Authority meeting in New York late last week, the members unanimously approved the following resolution in order to expedite the work of the Local Clearance and Zoning Boards:

"Whereas, Article VI, Part I of the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry contemplated that Local Clearance and Zoning Boards should be established prior to January 1st of each year to set up fair, just and equitable schedules of clearance and zoning to provide against clearance and unreasonable length and/or area, and

"Whereas, for the year 1934, the date of January 1st was indefinitely postponed

NAMES OF LOCAL BOARD MEMBERS APPROVED BY THE CODE AUTHORITY

The machinery for administering the motion picture code in the field in its relation to activities between distributors and exhibitors finally started last weekend when the Code Authority in New York announced approved selections for 21 Local Grievance Boards and 21 Local Clearance Boards. The remaining ten boards of each group will be announced in their final form next Monday. Last week, Motion Picture Herald published a complete draft of the personnel structure of the combined 62 boards, but these were only tentative.

A paid secretary shortly will be appointed to serve both boards in each exchange territory, and, in addition, the Code Authority and Division Administrator Rosenblatt will announce next week the "impartial" non-industry-member who will sit on each board as the direct representative on the board of the Code Authority and the NRA.

The final and approved personnel structure for the first group of 21 Local Grievance and 21 Local Clearance and Zoning Boards which will hear and adjust complaints of unfair competition and establish fair clearance schedules in the exchange centers follow:

KANSAS HOUSES END AD BATTLE

Fox Midwest and independent suburban houses in Kansas City, reducing ad space in the Kansas City Star, are saving $4,000 a month, according to exhibitors. At the same time their battle for dominance of the amusement page has been abandoned. It is understood the protagonists have agreed to use less space, more being considered an economic waste. The Journal-Post, only other daily, is negotiating with exhibitors for a share of the business which has heretofore gone exclusively to the Star.

Named Kansas Censor

Mrs. W. R. Stubbs of Lawrence, Kan., has been named to the Kansas state censor board to succeed Miss Jessie Hodges, who resigned recently. Mrs. Stubbs is the widow of a former governor of the state.

INDUSTRY TO JOIN IN OPEN FORUM AT MPTOA CONVENTION APRIL 10-12

Kuykendall Plans Wholesale Exchange of Ideas Among Three Branches and Between Industry and Public; A Session on Code

The motion picture and its many problems will be the keynote of a nationwide round table conference of exhibitors, producer-distributors and the public, to be sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in Hollywood on April 10, 11 and 12.

The occasion will be the annual convention of the MPTOA. Ed Kuykendall, president, on Tuesday completed the first draft of a plan to extend the usual lines of procedure for a national exhibitor convention to embrace a wholesale exchange of ideas among the three divisions and between the industry and the public.

Open Forum on Problems

Although the idea has been accepted definitely by the MPTOA executives, the actual machinery for carrying it out has yet to be developed. However, the basic platform is intended to give producer-distributors and exhibitors and representatives of the motion picture public the opportunity to hear each other's recommendations for betterment of the motion picture and its merchandising system.

Exhibitors also will participate in a first hand study of the productions then in work and they will meet the new talent developed within recent months. For these purposes the producers agreed early this week to throw open their studios both to the exhibitors and their guests representing the public.

It is expected that millions of active theatregoers will be represented directly by the motion picture committees of the many women's associations and federations, who will be invited to speak in open sessions about current motion pictures.

One Session Reserved for Code

One session will be devoted exclusively to a minute review of the Code and its workings up to the date of the convention. By that time the machinery of the code in the field, in the nature of the 64 Local Clearance and Local Grievance Boards, will have been established long enough to give the industry the opportunity to observe whether they are proceeding properly and along lines eliminating unfair trade practices.

The convention will be the first national exhibitor meeting in Hollywood since talking films were developed, giving most of the attending exhibitors their first view of talking films in the making. The last MPTOA convention in Hollywood was held nine years ago.

Tony Muto this week joined the national MPTOA headquarters in New York to take charge of convention arrangements. He already has made tentative arrangements with the transcontinental railroad systems for obtaining special through trains at low rates, with the privilege accorded delegates to return on diversified routes, with stopover privileges. It was indicated that the railroads will cooperate with the MPTOA in conducting a national publicity campaign for the event.

At least three special trains of 14 cars each will meet at El Paso, Texas, and proceed to Los Angeles together, converging on the studio capital the morning the convention opens. Other sections will be joined elsewhere throughout the country to the regular limiteds.

The MPTOA will proceed immediately to set up local convention committees in the principal territories, comprised principally of exhibitor members of local MPTOA affiliates.

ITOA Decides Policy for Year

The Independent Theatre Owners Association, organization of New York exhibitors, decided at its regular meeting last week to govern its activities for the next fiscal year by the policy set forth in a 10-point platform. The decision followed a report for the past year read by Harry Brandt, president.

The points follow:

To continue the fight for elimination of percentages.

To persist in efforts for new clearance and zoning schedules.

To adjust the local labor situation as created by the code.

Cooperative buying of supplies and equipment for members.

Collective public liability insurance.

To fight for corrective legislation.

Elimination of the seat tax by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers.

The abolition of score charges from film rentals.

Abolition of the national district telegraph box compulsory in all theatres seating over 600.

To continue the drive to bring all independents in the territory into the organization. The unit now claims 70 per cent.

The organization went on record as opposed to the MPPDA fight on censorship, and decided not to send in code assents until the local labor situation is cleared. The unit's ball was held Wednesday evening at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel.

Laemmle to Coast

Carl Laemmle, Universal president, left for the Coast late last week after several weeks of conferences on new season product. He was accompanied by Max Friedland, general European manager, Mrs. Friedland, Joe Weil and Jack Ross. Laemmle, Jr., follows shortly.

Two New Suits Brought vs. Erpi

Two damage actions under the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust Laws totaling $3,045,000 were filed in federal court, New York, last week against American Telephone & Telegraph Co., Western Electric Co., Inc., and Electrical Research Products, Inc.

One action was filed by Henry D. Behr, doing business under the name of Theatre Electrical Service, asking damages of $3,000,000. The second action for $45,000 damages, was filed by Ninth Avenue Amusement Co., theatre operator.

Both actions were filed by the same law firm and charged the defendants with constituting a monopoly in restraint of trade in the manufacture and distribution of apparatus and equipment for the production and reproduction of sound motion pictures.

Several other suits against Erpi and its parent companies alleging violation of anti-trust laws have been in litigation for many months. The suits generally charge unfair practice by Erpi in its control of motion picture equipment.

At Wilmington, Del., last week, the United States district court handed down a decision declaring the lower court had erred in holding, in the suit of Warner Bros.-Vitaphone of a similar nature, that the matter should not have been subject to arbitration.

The chief argument advanced by Vitaphone for the right to continue its litigation against Erpi in court, as against arbitration, is the claim that arbitration has broken down and the court offers its only recourse. Counsel for Erpi this week opposed modifications of the decree which ordered the issue back to arbitration.

Validity of the exhibitor license agreement of Erpi has been upheld by the United States district court for the western district of Oklahoma, in an opinion this week by Judge Edgar Vaught in a suit brought by Erpi against Home Amusement Co., Inc., for recovery of equipment installed in the Savoy theatre at Shawnee, Okla., as well as for the recovery of unpaid charges to Erpi.

Smuggle Newsreels Of Vienna Rioting

Newsreel shots of the Socialist rebellion in Vienna last week have been smuggled out of Austria despite rigid surveillance over cameramen and strict censorship regulations and the films are now en route to the United States, newsreel offices in New York were informed late last week.

Several newsreel cameramen were arrested by the Dollfuss government and their film confiscated for violating censorship.

GOLDWYN WAGS HOLLYWOOD'S EARS
ENGLAND'S CHALLENGE: DOUBLECHECK
NINE MORE PRODUCTIONS SHOOTING
ZEPPO ROUNDS UP STAGE PLAYERS

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO

HOLLYWOOD see-sawed and buzzed this week as Samuel Goldwyn's article on Hollywood Star salaries appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

In forensic phrase he discussed the whys, whereofs and whyfors of high pay for talent, and for the first time revealed what is considered an accurate listing of the dollar stipend that selected stars draw weekly.

The article was either roundly commended or condemned, according to the viewpoint of the one sounding off.

In a word, Goldwyn's premise is, "They're worth it if they bring it in."

Some See Justification

Those who acclaimed the article saw in it a justification for their claims that distinctive and extraordinary talent "makes its own price, and should be paid a just proportion of what the box-office records as their worth."

On the other hand, those opposing the Goldwyn viewpoint suggested that while the premise was sound, present economic conditions and the general temper to decry high salaries might bring on a wave of debate that would make the famous Constance Bennett episode look like a typhoon in an ink-well.

Herewith are the Goldwyn listings as published, and considered by him to be substantially accurate, on the basis of a 40-week year:

Greta Garbo....	$9000	Ann Harding ..	6000
Will Rogers	7500	Wallace Beery..	5000
M. Chevalier ...	7000	Wm. Powell ...	4500
Con. Bennett ...	7000	Joan Crawford..	4000
John Barrymore.	6500	Janet Gaynor ..	3750
Norma Shearer.	6000	E. G. Robinson.	3000

Doctor A. H. Giannini, philosopher and financier, recently said, "England is challenging America's supremacy in motion picture production.

"England's pre-eminence in stage craft, with all her cultural standards, is being brought to bear in her revived film industry.

"Though a threat to American dominance, England's new-born activity, evidenced in such productions as 'Henry VIII,' 'Catherine the Great' and 'Be Mine Tonight,' will serve also as a spur and stimulation for America to maintain her Number One place."

Concurrent with the kindly Doctor's warning, comes word from Roy Simmonds, London press representative for Fox Films, visiting our shores and Movietone City, who rises to say that "Cavalcade," the film produced in America, "awakened English producers to the realization of their shortcomings."

"Feeling in London toward 'Cavalcade' was one of wonder," he said. "They couldn't understand how and why British producers left the gates open for America to produce what is considered the Epic of England's national life and feeling.

"England is not challenging America's dominance, but in a humble way is producing films that may spur America to even greater achievement."

Doctor Giannini, meet Roy Simmonds.

It's hands across the seas, boys, and two tankards of ale.

Just a "Scare"

Hollywood was startled out of its lethargy one recent morning, by the banner line flaming from the morning gazettes, proclaiming "First Television of Screen Stars," and so on.

As television is still around the corner, alarm turned into embarrassment as all it turned out to be was "television in effect"—the "effect" being a group of screen stars broadcasting from a stage before a paying audience, which was getting the effect of seeing and hearing screen stars, while those in the homes could only hear, and must imagine what they were called upon to see.

This recalls Phil Baker's old wheeze when talkers first came in, that the next step in films would be the inclusion of touch.

"Imagine," said Phil, "being able to see, hear and touch Clara Bow."

O.K. Television!

Nine More Pictures Shooting

Production maintained its regular pace during the week with 33 features in work. As nine new pictures went on to the stages, five were completed and transferred to the cutting rooms. MGM and Warner have five apiece shooting, closely followed by Fox and Radio each with four and Columbia and Universal chipping in a pair apiece. 20th Century has one, "The Firebrand," teaming Constance Bennett and Fredric March. The total independent figure is five.

Of the new starting pictures, Warner Bros. has two: "One Man Woman," an original story by Gene Towne and Graham Baker with a cast including Pat O'Brien, Glenda Farrell, Claire Dodd and Russell Hopton, with Alan Crosland directing, and "Return of the Terror," with Mary Astor and Lyle Talbot. Two also started at Radio: "Stingaree," which features Richard Dix and Irene Dunne under William Wellman's direction, and "Dover Road" with Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard, Billie Burke and Allan Mowbray, under direction of J. Walter Rubin. At MGM Joan Crawford, Esther Ralston, Jean Dixon and Franchot Tone started Vina Delmar's "Sadie McKee." Fox turned the cameras on "Gold Rush," which has George Marshall directing a cast headed by Claire Trevor, John Boles and Harry Green. Monogram started two, "Manhattan Love Song" and "Loud Speaker; Chesterfield, "Stolen Hearts."

Included in the five pictures completed during the week are "Sisters Under the Skin," a Columbia that has Elissa Landi topping the cast; Monogram's "City Limits," which features Frank Craven, Sally Blane and Ray Walker; a Universal, "Let's Be

OUTSIDE OF THAT HE HAD IT RIGHT

An exhibitor called up an exchange manager to say he heard Elissa Landi was going to play the lead in Charlie Rogers' picture, "Baby in the Ice Box."

The exchange manager told the exhibitor he was right, except that Elissa Landi already was playing opposite an Eskimo in "Man of Two Worlds" and couldn't be spared and, besides, it wasn't called "Baby in the Ice Box" any longer, but it's now called "She Made Her Bed" and for that picture they had a leading lady.

In an argument as to who should ask the questions and who should "pull the nifties," one of Ted Healy's stooges pointed the finger of scorn at the other stooge, with the squelch, "I hear you're a technocrat."

"Yeah," said the other, "I technocrat from nobody."

Anything is to be expected from W. C. Fields, either on or off the screen. So Hollywood, accustomed to his disregard for the customary, was amazed as well as amused when it discovered that the cow-pasture pool addict, who lives across the lake from his golf club, had bought a row boat to take him directly to the links.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

They were giving away prizes at the cooking school which Hal Neides houses mornings in his Glendale Alexander theatre. A little lady demurely replied "Here" when her stub number was called. Unnoticed by the excited master of ceremonies, she repeated her "Here" as each successive basket of groceries was handed out until twelve lucky ladies were rewarded.

Picking up the thirteenth, the M.C. said, "We're gonna give this big one to any woman who has 13 children." Again the piping little voice this time murmured, "I have 1279." Much amazement, but the little lady got the basket.

Out of the Notebook

The Gore brothers, two Los Angeles pioneer exhibitors and founders of West Coast, dispose of seven downtown houses, retaining only a few just to keep a finger in the pie.

Gloria Swanson signs with MGM. Will remake Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," a Thalberg production.

Warner Oland set for a role in Ronald Colman's "Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back."

Screen Actors' Guild all agog about its forthcoming committee elections.

Sol Wurtzel's Fox unit will make four pictures during March.

Minna Gombell in Radio's "Dynamite" with Jimmy Durante and Alice White.

Michael Curtiz directing opening sequences of "The Key" at Warners, vice the ailing Archie Mayo.

Larry Darmour, producer of the Mickey McGuire shorts, heads newly formed Globe Pictures and plans 12 features for the initial year.

Preview area is expanding; Radio tried out "Keep 'em Rolling" in San Francisco.

The Four Mills Brothers in Marion Davies' "Operator 13."

Jackie Cooper now a Boy Scout with all the official paraphernalia.

More royalty at MGM; Lord Marley is lunched.

Fox melds Jimmie Dunn and Sally Eilers again for "Always Honest."

Arliss starts his second 20th Century picture, "The Head of the Family," next Monday.

MGM finally sets Chevalier and Jeannette MacDonald for "The Merry Widow." Carl Brisson, who played it several hundred times in Europe, and Mme. Ferenc Molnar, who tops the figure, are in town if any technical advice is necessary.

Johnny Johnston, p. a. of Universal, elected chairman of the publicity directors committee of the Producers Association.

John Zanft, onetime Fox Theatre man, is now an artist's agent; the first personality on his roster is Marie Dressler, with Connie Bennett rumored moving over shortly.

Lou Diamond, long on shorts for Paramount, is here conferring with Emanuel Cohen.

Al Lichtman at Caliente conferring about next year's U. A. lineup with Joe Schenck.

Jason Joy, loaned to the Producers' organization by Fox for six months, goes back to Fox.

Will Rogers was introduced to a stranger who, shaking hands with Will, said, "I'm from Philadelphia, Mr. Rogers." "Can I help that," said Will.

Twice as "Anti"

A well-known director, after parting with a well-known producer, heard in the byways and canyons that the w. k. producer was spreading tales about him.

Meeting the producer at the Clover Club, the director invited him up to the bar and confronted him: "You couldn't say I was incompetent. You couldn't say I committed a crime, or that I was dishonest or dishonorable. You couldn't complain about my direction because I know my box-office figures, so you lied and told people who wanted to hire me that I was a Nazi, when I'm twice as Anti as you are, and got more friends among the Anti-Nazis than you have."

Sounds childish, but true, and funnier is that the producer is now proclaiming his friendship for the director.

Unique Billboard Unveiled

With all the eclat and fanfare of a creme de la creme grand opening—stars, lights and music—Paramount in conjunction with Fanchon and Marco unveiled the billboard unique the other evening. This novel entertainment of flesh and film and advertising, featuring weekly program changes and topical subjects, is 70 feet wide, 60 deep and about 15 high. A translucent screen, which permits projection from the rear, is 13 by 28 feet and can be seen for several blocks. Besides giving a free show, tying up traffic on heavily trafficked Wilshire boulevard, the muchly ballyhooed exploitation has the natives passing up the theatres to take in the gratis performance.

Los Angeles, long known for the low ebb of its legitimate theatre, may find flood tide in that direction, if Zeppo Marx has his way with his new-fangled Westwood Theatre Guild, patterned after New York's Theatre Guild.

Years ago, Sid Grauman hit upon the happy idea of fostering a renaissance of the theatre by establishing a colony of creative artists to mould the histrionic art far off in the Hills of Hollywood, where, untrammeled, they could fashion a destiny that would make his legitimate theatre a beacon light to the world.

Alas for showman and impresario Grauman, it was but a chimerical fancy.

Last week, La Cornell, in one of her annual visits, gave Los Angeles a taste of legitimate performances, even though the gentlemen who played Marchbanks in "Candida," according to one wag, was said to be the understudy of Cornell.

And now Zeppo essays a task that might require the talents of the Four Marx-men combined.

Zeppo, it seems, is of the opinion that there's plenty of stage talent lying around loose in Hollywood, and that applause is still sweet to a mummer's ears.

Zeppo already has gathered together, for his Westwood Theatre Guild, an imposing array of names, including:

Edmund Lowe, George Fitzmaurice, Sam H. Harris, King Vidor, Lilyan Tashman, Dr. Edwin Janss, Harold Janss, John Cromwell, Mrs. R. D. Shepherd, Mrs. Georgia King Kennedy, Lowell Sherman, Robert Montgomery, Bayard Veiller, Gregory La Cava, William Powell, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Frank Morgan, Richard Dix, Gouverneur Morris, Gloria Swanson and Bess Meredyth.

The Guild's advisory board includes: Frank Borzage, Lewis Milestone, Richard Dix, Carole Lombard, Richard Barthelmess and Adolphe Menjou.

Now that the thing is started, every one is wondering why the idea wasn't thought of before.

Well—all that it needed was Zeppo's zippo.

Hal didn't want a junior Einstein; all he desired was a second edition of the illustrious Joe Cobb, the fat boy of the original "Our Gang."

Poets, it seems, are turning to the stars for inspiration.

James Laver, in his verse volume, "Ladies' Mistakes," reacts in rhyme as follows:

Garbo, the glamorous, the alluring Swede,
Mysterious blend of awkwardness and grace,
Or Janet Gaynor with her angel face,
Or Constance Bennett with the lustrous eyes,
Or blonde Marlene of the puissant thighs . . .

P. S.—James Laver is the winner of Oxford's Newdigate Poetry Prize—which is quite a new name for a gate.

McDONOUGH TO HEAD RKO RADIO; COOPER AGAIN PRODUCTION CHIEF

Aylesworth Announces Depinet To Be President of RKO Distributing, Kahane Over RKO Studios, Berman for Own Unit

J. R. McDonough, whose initial appearance on the motion picture scene was made as recently as last summer, is to be elevated to the presidency of RKO Radio Pictures, according to official announcement in Hollywood last week by M. H. Aylesworth, president and chairman of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum board.

Other developments on the RKO front included:

1. B. B. Kahane, now president of RKO Radio Pictures, to be made president of RKO studios, a subsidiary.

2. Merian C. Cooper, who recently resigned as vice-president in charge of production, was returned to that post.

3. Pandro Berman to become the youngest executive producer in charge of his own unit in the industry.

4. Ned E. Depinet, RKO general sales manager, to the presidency of RKO Distributing Corporation.

Mr. McDonough's injection into the RKO panorama came about last summer when David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, RKO's parent company, placed him under M. H. Aylesworth as a special advisor, "without portfolio," on matters pertaining to company reorganization. Then in the early autumn, Mr. McDonough, who previously had served as executive assistant to Mr. Sarnoff in the administration of RCA affairs, was made general manager of Radio-Keith-Orpheum.

Changing Operating Organization

In making the announcement of the various changes, Mr. Aylesworth said that Mr. McDonough was changing the form of the operating organization so that executive activities might be coordinated in Hollywood. He added that officials and directorate were proud of the record made by Radio Pictures in 1933 and were unanimous in their approval of the program for the new season.

As president of the RKO Studios, B. B. Kahane will devote all his time to studio affairs and operations.

Ned E. Depinet succeeds Mr. Kahane, who in addition to his former presidency of RKO Radio Pictures was also president of RKO Distributing Corporation. Mr. Depinet formerly was vice-president of RKO Distributing and general sales manager.

Berman Temporarily in Charge

While Mr. Cooper remains on his Hawaiian vacation prior to resuming duties as production vice-president, Pandro Berman will continue in charge of all production. On Mr. Cooper's return, Mr. Berman will act in an advisory capacity, centering attention on his own units.

Mr. Aylesworth will turn over all administration matters to Mr. McDonough upon his return to New York this week, and in the future will devote himself exclusively to the company's financial problems.

In Toronto, at a meeting of the stockholders of RKO Canada, Ltd., Major L. E. Thompson and Nate Blumberg were elected to the directorate to succeed Mr. Kahane and Harold B. Franklin, who severed his connections with RKO last autumn.

Hollywood Representative

Radio Studios jigsaw facade readjusted itself this week under the aegis of M. H. Aylesworth, as proper names were fitted into proper places, with official designation being accorded J. R. McDonough as president of RKO-Radio pictures, after executives had tete-a-teted for four days. Mr. McDonough, blunt of speech but talking little, will commute between the Hollywood Sector and the Manhattan Merry-Go-Round.

On the spot, operating and coordinating the studio filaments in Hollywood, will be Ben Kahane, tried and tested executive, who will continue head man of Radio Studio, but for official purpose as president of RKO Studios, the picture producing contributor of RKO Radio Pictures Corporation.

Depinet on Receiving End

On the receiving end, to turn film into coin of the realm, will be Ned Depinet, chief of sales and distribution, bedecked with the purple as president of Radio Distributing Corporation.

Somewhat of a surprise is the re-ensconsing of Merian C. Cooper as vice-president in charge of production, from which position he had resigned last week.

Circles within the radius of Broad and Wall, and spokes whirring from the socialite areas of Park Avenue, are said to have influenced Mr. Cooper's return on the basis of prestige. He will go on duty after vacationing briefly in Honoluiu.

Berman's Services Assured

Pandro Berman, schooled first on filmdom's toughest training field, selling celluloid, is elevated to the post of an executive producer. Heretofore he had been executive assistant to Mr. Cooper. Prior to that he had apprenticed as film cutter, editor, utility man on sets, being graduated to associate producer, and is now the youngest executive producer in Hollywood.

Correlative with these shifts of personnel will be changes in the form of the operating organization, so that the executive activities may be coordinated in Hollywood, the seat of production.

Having set the picture, Mr. Aylesworth, who, like the late, well known Charles Chan, treads lightly and goes slowly, betook himself to Broadway, safe in the thought that youthful Pandro Berman would be with the company for two more years and the rival company bidding for his services would have to wait at least that long before flirting again.

Kansas City "War" Averted

The possibility of the most drastic "price war" in the history of Kansas City exhibition this week was averted when a city-wide meeting of exhibitors voted to meet the demands of first-run theatres and eliminate price evasions which recently caused Sam Dembow of Paramount to cut the Newman Theatre's admission top of 40 cents to 25 cents at all times with a policy of two first-run features.

It was decided at the Monday meeting, called by Jay Means, president of the Independent Theatre Owners, to abandon all kinds of giveaways, two-for-ones, passes, coupons, lotteries, 10-cent nights and similar practices. Double bills, it was decided, should be restricted to one program of not more than two days weekly. It also was decided to set a minimum admission price of 15 cents for all suburban and subsequent run houses and abolish all 10-cent admissions except in a few isolated situations where such a scale has long been established as a regular policy.

Four standouts threatened to disrupt the agreement, but the committee gathering assents said it might go ahead regardless.

Blank on Paramount Advisory Board

A. H. Blank late last week became the fourth member of the Paramount Publix theatre advisory committee at a meeting of the company's western partners in Des Moines. The other three members are Karl Hoblitzelle, N. L. Nathanson and E. V. Richards. Two additional members—one from Chicago, the other from New England —will be chosen at future regional meetings.

A ruling by which Paramount bondholders who failed to file claims against the bankrupt estate within the specified time limit, which expired September 1, may have their bond claims included under a blanket claim of the Chase National Bank as trustee for the full amount of both bond issues, has been made by Referee Henry K. Davis.

The appellate division of the New York supreme court late last week took under advisement an appeal by Robert F. Levy, Paramount bondholder, which seeks authorization to bring suit against Paramount Publix, Film Productions Corporation, Chase National Bank and others in connection with the 1932 transfer to Film Productions of the title to Paramount negatives.

Paramount-Publix receivers on Tuesday were granted a $175,000 mortgage, payable February 16, 1935, on the Criterion and Loew's New York.

Frank Miller Dead

Frank P. Miller, 43, owner and manager of the Lafayette theatre in Haverhill, Mass., the theatre where, under the name of the Orpheum, Louis B. Mayer started his career, died last week at the Gale Hospital.

"INGREDIENTS OF 80-MINUTE THRILL"

And That's DeCasseres' Evaluation of "A Hat, A Coat, A Glove"; He Finds "Mackerel Skies," Another Current Stage Play, to Have a "Beautiful Picture Finish"

By BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

A HAT, A COAT, A GLOVE

This is a picture natural. It has all the ingredients of a full eighty-minute thrill, with a strong original situation (or is anyting original) in a lawyer, who kills a girl accidentally while struggling for a revolver, defending in court the lover of his wife, who is accused of the murder.

The play was put on by Crosby Gaige. It is from the German of Wilhelm Speyer. It stars A. E. Matthews, who plays the lawyer in that quiet, effective, mannered manner which always bewitches the audience by its very somnolence.

It opens in an artist's studio in New York, near the river. Jerry has a girl in his room whom he has just fished out of the river—attempted suicide.

Jerry goes away to get Felicia Mitchell, wife of the famous lawyer. She is his sweetheart. While he is gone in comes the legal Big Shot—who really loves his wife—to "chastise" Jerry.

He finds the girl there, nearly naked (she is still drying her clothes). They puzzle one another and scrap. The girl had got hold of Jerry's gun and she draws. In the struggle the girl is killed. Mitchell cleans up finger-prints and tip-toes out. There is an attempted phone call to Felicia by the girl which is the thrill clue later.

Jerry is accused. The wife makes a clean-breast of her liaison to lawyer-husband, who, because he loves her, agrees to defend Jerry.

The court-scene in which the killer gets Jerry off and shows us, subtly, how the wife gets the information that her husband is the killer is one of the most thrilling and tense of these many stage scenes.

The play suffers from slow-motion, poor dialogue in the second act and lack of lusty characterization. But it will be a cinch in the hands of a smart Hollywood brain-boy.

Looks like a perfect Lionel Atwill.

MACKEREL SKIES

John Haggart's drama, "Mackerel Skies," is involved, heavy and would not plough deep in picture circles unless considerably jacked up and ironed out.

It was, however, given immaculately by Violet Kemble-Cooper, Tom Powers, Max Figman, Charles Trowbridge and another Fred Stonelet, Carol (of whom more will be heard).

David Gerard is discovered in his Fifth Avenue mansion. He has blown mucha jack to plant his wife Elsa as a song-bird. Her former husband, an Austrian prince, had also tried to open up the Melba in her. But no game. Public no like.

Now, Elsa has a daughter, Elizabeth. Everybody believes the Prince was her father. But Liz is really the daughter of Stefan, overseer, or something, on the Prince's estate. Liz has inherited pop's voice. And Stefan has got rich—Chicago wheat.

Stefan comes to the Gerard home, and, with Gerard, sets about making Liz what mamma wanted to be. So mamma is jealous, and this is war.

Elizabeth (Carol Stone), of course, has a "steady."

It all works out to a beautiful picture finish. May be good song-bird stuff.

PLAY RATINGS FOR SCREEN

Benjamin DeCasseres, noted essayist and critic, makes the following percentage ratings as possible screen material for the current Broadway stage plays upon which he comments in this issue:

"A Hat, a Coat, a Glove"—100 per cent.
"Mackerel Skies"—60 per cent.
"Hotel Alimony"—30 per cent.
"The Joyous Season"—80 per cent.
"Mahogany Hall"—zero.

MAHOGANY HALL

The bordello—always known in the Philadelphia papers of my youth as "a house of evil repute"—came to town again after a long absence.

It was called "Mahogany Hall" and was written by Charles Robinson. The frosty Olga Baclanova was the madame of the joint.

Mae West might have put it over, and she may do it yet in pictures. Of course, "Mahogany Hall" will have to be a dance hall, or why not a roller-skating joint?

In this story there are a lot of girls, a high-brow "professor" who plays the piano, a Police Commissioner who wants a divvy but who is told by the madame to take the air—for "Oh, what she knows about him!"—a conniving Big Marge who wants to oust the Lilith in charge, a bar, a visiting fortune-teller—in fact, the whole dreary outfit.

A dull time was had by all, the sin wasn't even orange-colored, the laughs few.

As I said, it may be good pickings for the Mirific Mae—with Groucho Marx as the piano-player. Otherwise,

HOTEL ALIMONY

That title alone ought to have inspired a playwright to do something between the piercing humor of "Of Thee I Sing" and the upheaving indignation of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." But in A. W. Pezet's play it does not come off. It lacks inspirational verisimilitude (pep, to you).

Its picture angles might be discernible to Ben Hecht at his keenest or Sam Hoffenstein at his cattiest, but I did not catch the fire. Neither did the audience.

There's a Peter Thorpe, who wrote paying songs. His wife moons for a divorce. Pete is an obliging sap. He gets the evidence against himself and settles three hundred NRA dollars on her a week.

Pete himself has fallen in love. That was not in the calculations of Signora Pete. He can't pay. So to Alimony Row he goes.

Most of the play is in the jail for trapped hubbies. Here we have lawyers, a poet, and, in fact, a general representative mess of oppressed humans. There is plenty of denunciation of the marriage laws of New York State, and a conventional happy way out. But it has no more click than the skulls of two Nazis in collision.

Maybe W. C. Fields and Alison Skipworth can make some laugh-baloney of it.

Picture value, 30 per cent.

THE JOYOUS SEASON

I have seen and read Philip Barry's "The Joyous Season" before. Robert Browning called it "Pippa Passes." Then it came to us as "The Servant in the House," "Mr. Pim Passes By" and "The Passing of the Third Floor Back." It then got into fiction, and made a tremendous noise, as "Pollyanna."

The play by Barry has no apparent screen value in itself, for there is no action, in the picture sense, at all. The whole problem is a psychological conflict—a commonplace conflict in the Farley family of Beacon street, Boston, who have lived too much at home and for themselves.

The kernel of the play is the return to the Farley home, composed of about seven Farleys, of Christina Farley (Lillian Gish), who is a nun. Her radiance, her jollity, her tenderness straighten out all the rough spots (which are only inconsequential blisters when we visualize the real tragedies of life today). It is a human family and Christina is a very human nun.

Barry has treated this theme in his usual pulseless, aloof, sporadic manner. It is talk, talk, talk. Lillian looks lovely and Jane Wyatt is, as usual, competent.

Picture value (with Lillian Gish), 80 per cent.

Writer Is Polish Authoress

"Dr. Monica," stage play seen in New York and discussed on this page in the issue of December 30, was written by Marja Szczepkowska, Polish writer of plays and scenarios. In that issue the play was referred to as "out of the Russian." Following its success in Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, "Dr. Monica" is to appear soon in Italy and France.

NEW LABOR UNION STRIKES IMPASSE AS CIRCUITS REFUSE TO NEGOTIATE

Paramount Publix Refuses to Re-employ 17 Striking Unskilled Theatre Workers; Union to Appeal to National Labor Board

With the refusal of Paramount Publix to re-employ the 17 unskilled theatre workers involved in the recent strike at one of its Staten Island theatres and the declaration of several New York circuit heads that they would not negotiate with unionized unskilled theatre labor in the matter of materially higher wages and shorter working hours, the demands of the Theatre and Amusement Employees' Union of Greater New York, Local 118, were being met with united opposition all along the line this week. This union is a subsidiary of the National Building Service Employees' Union.
